

INCREASE FREIGHT RATE AND PREPAID SHIPMENTS WILL RUIN THIS SECTION

Sanford Board of Trade Will Combat It

With the fate of business men and farmers hanging in the balance on this question of the raise in freight rates and prepayment of freight on lettuce and many other matters of most vital interest to the people of this section there was but a small crowd of the faithful out to the regular meeting of the Sanford Board of Trade Tuesday night. Only your Board of Trade can be of any assistance in having this rate reduced and while the majority of the people sit idly by the railroads are trying to pass this proposition to the government and obtain a raise that will threaten the business of this state. Fortunately there were a few members present at the meeting Tuesday night and they took up this most important matter and as usual Sanford will do its share for the farmer and the business men of this and other sections.

The proposed freight rate increases do not come nor are they proposed merely to make a blanket increase of 25 per cent, but the intimated change in classifications, particularly that of the southern territory would directly boost our various class rates and leave us with burdens in the form of increases ranging from 25 to over 200 per cent. Commodities, such as canned goods, hay and grain, flour, sugar, etc., would under the proposed increases, move up in classification and would automatically increase the cost of living at least 10 per cent. In our vegetable movement, where it now costs us 50 cents per crate freight and 18 cents re-icing or a total of 68 cents per crate on celery, Sanford to New York, making a total of $248.48 for a car of 336 crates, the rate, under the proposed increase, for freight alone would run a car up to approximately $245 and add re-icing charges to this and your bill per car would be $305.40 instead of $248. Fertilizers and all material will compare favorably with this illustration and unless concerted action is taken, we may expect to pay this excessive charge. Without doubt the railroads are entitled to an increase, but a blanket increase of 10 per cent would afford the federalized railroads of this country, an annual increase of over four hundred million dollars and likely more than this because of the constantly increasing traffic being handled with the same power and equipment, except under better and more systematic management. The wage increases referred to are not as large and do not mean in actual money what reports would indicate. The increase of 40 per cent to labor is mostly based on what has been done since 1915. In actual figures, for example, the recent increases to locomotive engineers amounts to an eleven per cent for padenger and about 16 per cent to through freight men, conductors and trainmen get a lower average than this. In other lines of railroading, the increased granted were represented by the one or two increases made during and since 1915. We, of course, should not seek to hamper our government and if it is convincing that the proposed increase is a dire necessity, then we should willingly give it, but every indication points to the old "Denmark" saying, and our perishable freight, re-ice cars continue to move once in a while out of Sanford on local freight trains as was the case a few mornings ago with something like eighteen cars.

Secretary Baker, who awarded the diplomas to the graduates they were destined to have a part in leading the armies of the nation to a victorious peace. "After that," he said, "as officers of the regular army you will prepare, not for war, but ready, for another war if anyone wants to make it."

Mr. Baker declared that the United States became a belligerent because "Germany tried to crush individual human happiness and liberty, which we call the theory of democracy."

The light has of course been decreased. There is no danger, we feel, but thank you for your offer of a harbor of refuge. We all appreciate it while we had to smile—these things seem so much worse at a distance.

You know New York is so vast that events within it that horrify or startle the continent are actually unknown to many of its people. The city is defended by hundreds or thousands of sea and air craft. I doubt if any one would leave it even in case of an attack—New York is not that kind of place!

This city on the human side is proving itself so much finer and greater than I thought it ever could be. Like Paris, and then London, it will rise to the heights—"the third among the sons of light."

I have studied it so long—its many races, its sects, its frivolities and absurdities and worse—its silt, its lack of communism and civic pride, its selfishness. It seemed to me, the most indifferent, selfish, unclean, ill mannered among all world cities. I was wrong; I left out of account—God!

New York is large, generous, brave, patriotic, self sacrificing. Its many races are being fused into one by the great purpose and the great need. Its heart has been touched; its immense stores of sympathy, sacrifice, generosity have been opened. It is a wonderful city with much of God in it. Here are eight millions of people swept together by a tidal wave of feeling."

More Than a Million West Point, N. Y., June 12.—

More than a million American fighting men will be in service in France in the near future, declared Secretary Baker in an address today to 137 graduates of the United States Military Academy.

Supplementing his recent announcement in Washington that United States troops, "exceeding 700,000 in number" have disembarked on French soil the secretary told the cadets, "it is not unfair to speculate that we will shortly pass the million mark."

General Peyton C. March, chief of staff said that neither the menace of raiding German submarines off the Atlantic coast, nor the territorial gains of the enemy on the western front will affect America's policy of sending men to France as fast as ships can carry them.

Today's graduation was that of the class of 1919, whose members were awarded their diplomas a year ahead of time because of the urgent demand for trained officers.

WAR SAVING STAMPS IN CAMPAIGN

Monday, June 24th Will Be The Start

Teams captains to solicit buyers and pledges for War Savings Stamps throughout the War Savings Stamp week beginning June 24th and ending with National War Savings Day, June 28th, have been named by Schelle Maines, county chairman, and Mrs. E. M. Galloway, chairman and director of Women's Work.

The teams, together with the executive "Put it of Committee" met in the commissioners' rooms at the Court House last Monday night and discussed ways and means of the campaign.

The campaign is to begin Monday, June 24th, and is to last for five days, ending with the exercises to be staged in the Park Friday, June 28th, when speakers and music will be heard and workers will pass in the crowds and give each one there an opportunity to buy or pledge himself to buy War Savings Stamps. Each man, woman and child in Seminole county must have a War Savings button before this drive and meeting is over—this was determined by the team workers and the committee at the meeting Monday night.

The stores will close from two to five o'clock in the afternoon of June 28th, so as to give everybody a chance to attend the meeting and hear the speakers.

The teams are headed by a man and a woman this time because of the fact that Mr. Maines realized early in the game that women's work in a drive of this kind and in any war work was not to be overlooked and with that realization called in Mrs. Galloway, the head of the women's forces in Seminole, who very readily agreed to join forces with the county chairman and in that way throw the work of the two organizations—men and women together.

The teams, captains and territories and district chairmen are here given: Sanford Teams, Territories and Captains

BIG ATTACK OF GERMANS HAS FAILED

The French Hurl Them Back Across River

German forces which succeeded in crossing the Matz river to the west of the Oise on the battle front south of Noyon held their positions there for a brief period. French troops, counter attacking the enemy have hurled the foe to the north bank of the river and checked his advance toward Compeigne.

The news from the scene of the tremendous struggle, as told in official statements shows that on the field west of the Oise the Germans have come to a halt, for the present at least.

The enemy has not renewed his attacks on the line from Courcelles to Antheuil, where on Tuesday a brilliant counter attack of the French swept the invaders back and re-established the French lines on the plateau overlooking the center of the German position. This position is most embarrassing to the Germans for it places many of their most important lines of communication under the direct fire of the French artillery.

Farther east the Germans similarly have not continued their advance toward the Aronde river.

The crossing of the Matz river by the Germans Tuesday night constituted a very serious threat to Compeigne. It also tended to weaken the French positions on the east side of the Oise river. The French success in driving the enemy back across the Matz therefore is cheering news for the allies. The French are now strongly posted on the south bank of the Matz.

East of the Oise the French have withdrawn their lines south of Ourscamp and Carpent forest, but are protecting the Laigue forest along a line which is very strong. This change in the line was expected since the Germans occupied Ribecourt on the west bank of the Oise.

The attack on the front southwest of Soissons is making ground, but the progress is apparently too slow for the Germans to realize the plan to cut in behind Compeigne forest and outflank the French positions farther north. In the fighting so far the Germans have made less than a mile along a front about three miles in extent from south of Ambleny to St. Pierre-Aigle.

The Germans realize, evidently, the danger to them in the Chateau-Thierry sector near the Marne, and have made a violent attack against the line held by the American troops, north west of that city. The Americans have held their ground and have repulsed the enemy with heavy losses.

In the Flanders allent the British and French have been active. The former have improved their positions near Merris, on the western angle of the battle line there, while the French have extended their lines near Ypres.

Everything that has been said in praise of the value, the comfort and the charm of books may be safely multiplied to represent their importance to soldiers. It is wonderful the amount of work the American Library Association has accomplished since they began the work less than a year ago. To many it is the finest kind of war service. My limited time will not allow me to say all that I would like to say on the subject, but I will give a few statistics showing what has been done. Library war fund, $1,700,000. There are thirty-six camp library buildings, 117 librarians now in the field; 300,000 books purchased, largely technical; 1,349,000 gift books sent to camps and stations. Now that General Pershing has requested fifty tons of books a month, the overseas work is being rapidly pushed. There have been 109,400 sent overseas. In addition to this every soldier who leaves is entitled to one or two books in his kit to be read going over. The work is most inspiring, and one cannot be a part of a great undertaking without realizing the value of the books to the men."

War Libraries

What has been done for the camps in Florida is shown in the following report made by Mr. Josselyn, the state director:

Tampa, Fort Dade, 1,000 books. Key West, five small libraries, 5,000 books. Pensacola, library and libraries, 5,000 books. Miami, two aviation stations, 2,000 books. Arcadia, two aviation stations, 2,500 books.

At Camp Johnston: Total books in camp, 10,270. Deposits and branches, 11. Remount station. Observation camp. Editorial camp. Enlisted Men's club: Y. M. C. A. No. 1. Base hospital. Post exchange reading room. Convalescent building No. 2. Nurses' quarters. Officers' quarters. Officers' ward.

For future extension five more branches are planned. The circulation for April was 6,188. Average attendance for April was 625.

And when I tell you there was 40 per cent of technical or non-action books issued, you will realize the great good that is being accomplished at Camp Johnston."

And the 60 per cent remaining were books that the boys enjoyed at home when tired and needing rest and amusement—stories by Connor, Doyle, Cullum, Ian Hay and even Oppenheim and McCutcheon. It is to the home friends that the soldiers and sailors are looking for the gifts of fiction, and we are not going to disappoint them.

And Seminole Has A Good Crop Of Both

Cotton and corn are the staple crops that will mean more to Seminole county than any other crops at the present time. While there will be a fifty per cent crop of lettuce and celery planted here next season there will be less winter vegetables than ever before if the growers of these crops stand by their decision made at this time.

A trip over Seminole county discloses the fact that never before in the history of the county has there been such a crop of cotton and corn and other staples. Pigs are pigs at any time but just now pigs are money in every sense of the word and the farmers are realizing that real pigs fattened on the right kind of feed mean not only helping to win the war but helping to cut down the high price of trying to live on western pork when Florida can raise just as good and raise it much cheaper.

But getting back to cotton and corn brings us to the realization that our county has SOME cotton and corn. There are at least 2,000 acres planted in cotton this season both long and short staple and the crop is looking exceptionally fine in every part of the county. There is considerable of it planted near this city and among the many fine stands we have noted that on Mellonville avenue where Ed. Lane and Conner Williamson have at one place in the old Speer grove property twenty-two acres of cotton that will hold its own against that of any cotton state in the south. We have not seen all the cotton in this county but this patch is above par and is uniform, being early and safe from cut worms and disease that attacks cotton planted near vegetable fields. It is only one of many fine fields of cotton in this county and demonstrates that we are getting back to old line farming and that getting back means a more stable basis and more real money for the farmers. The corn crop in this county is a revelation to the visitors as they come from the east and west travelling through at this time. Farmers from the corn belts of the middle states are simply amazed at the corn that is raised here and Seminole will harvest a bumper crop. This story of staple crops can be spun for the entire state, however, as corn is planted everywhere and supplemented by castor beans the government can well look to Florida to help in winning the war.

The growers around Sanford have done remarkably well this season with spring crops. The green celery brought amazing prices and pulled many of the growers out of a bad hole made by the congested markets of the winter. The peppers and tomatoes and eggplants and cabbage and cucumbers and beans have all done their part this spring and have brought good returns.

With the farmers of this section organized this season into a body of men determined to stick together, grow a crop of a size that can be marketed during congestion of freight in the north; growing only first class stuff; a guaranteed pack and brand and marketing and selling organization there should be a fighting chance for the grower of winter vegetables, despite the fact that war is on and labor is scarce and the outlook this spring was none too rosy.

Sunday at Congregational Church

In the morning the pastor will deliver the first of a series of sermons on Christ and the woman of Samaria, the theme being "Turning Points in Life."

A patriotic musical service under the direction of Mrs. Julius Takach will be held in the evening with special numbers by the choir and organ selections. The "Marseillaise" will be sung, and Mrs. Takach will play the national anthems of the allies.

Attention is called to the fact that the Sunday evening service begins at the accustomed hour of seven-thirty, as does the Wednesday evening meeting.

The Christian Endeavor meeting at six-thirty will present some features of unusual interest.

FOR GOD'S SAKE MAKE THIS A PERSONAL AFFAIR

The White House, Washington, D. C.

To the People of the United States:

"I earnestly appeal to every man, woman and child to pledge themselves on or before the twenty-eighth of June to save constantly and to buy as regularly as possible the securities of the government and to do this as far as possible through membership in War Savings Societies. The twenty-eighth of June ends this special period of enlistment in the great volunteer army of production and saving here at home. May there be none un-enlisted on that day!

"WOODROW WILSON,
"President of the United States."

Pursuant to the above proclamation and pursuant to the direction of State Director Griggs, a drive will be put on in Seminole county beginning Monday morning, June 24th, and ending with Friday, June 28th, National War Savings Day. Committees have been appointed and will make an intensive canvass of the county during the week.

On Friday the citizens of Sanford will be asked to assemble in the Park; those of the other towns in the county to assemble in school houses or popular meeting places, where speakers will explain the needs of the government and the idea of war savings and where workers will pass among the crowds and give each one there a chance to either buy stamps or offer his pledge to buy throughout the year.

Let each citizen of Seminole prepare himself for the coming of the committees and let each one think of what he can buy or pledge and then double it. Seminole must sell her quota of War Savings Stamps and to do this each citizen must do his part.

Let's get together and do it.

SCHELLE MAINES
County Chairman, War Savings Committee.

Boys Leave Soon

The white men called in the latest draft have been ordered to leave Sanford for Camp Jackson at Columbia, S. C., on June 27th. Colored men will leave on the 21st for Camp Dix, Wrightstown, N. J. In the previous notice this complete information was not given, as the order had not been completed at that time.

Miss Blanche Pattishall left this week for Waynesville, N. C., where she expects to spend a month, going from there to Washington, D. C.

We Have Lady Bankers, Too

Leesburg is crowding about having a lady bank cashier but Sanford has ladies in all the banks. The First National has Miss Berner, the Seminole has Misses Zachary and Gove and the Peoples Bank has Mrs. Brotherson. If the war continues all of these may in time become cashiers or presidents.

Mr. and Mrs. D. S. Babbitt, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Thornton left today to spend several weeks at Coronado Beach.

Some of the unusual scenes in the Metro picture, "The Brass Check," co-starring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, which will be shown at the Star Theatre tonight (Tuesday) take place in a lunatic asylum. For this picturization of George Allan England's All-Story Weekly story, a most complete lunatic asylum was built at the Metro studio.

Bushman, as Richard Trevor has most extraordinary experiences at the asylum. He happens to be near the institution at the time that an inmate of another asylum has escaped and is seized by the guards as the escaped man. Richard gives fight, but is overcome by numbers and dragged protesting into the asylum. There he is locked in a padded cell. Across the way, from another padded cell glares an inmate who thinks that he is the kaiser and has dressed himself up grotesquely to aid his illusions. He hails Richard as "Uncle Sam" with his beard shaved off. The attendant looks pityingly at him, considering him a hopeless case and Richard makes a face at him.

How Richard finally manages to escape the control of the asylum attendant and the reason for his being in that vicinity is revealed on the screen.

"Blue Jeans" Shows County Fair Scenes—Star Wednesday

A genuine old-fashioned county fair and political rally is shown in "Blue Jeans," the Metro special production de luxe, starring winsome Viola Dana, which will be seen at the Star Theatre on Wednesday.

The members of the "village band" with their antiquated instruments are led by Miss Dana as June, dressed to represent a drum major, baton in hand. When Clifford Bruce, as Ben Boone, the political rival of Perry Bascom (Robert Walker) begins his speech, the little drum major gives the signal for a "blare of music," to drown his words and give her favorite a better chance.

The exhibit hall of an old-fashioned county fair is shown, fitted with booths, platforms for the rival candidates, bandstand and cider booth; and decorated with American flags, ears of corn and other farm products. With farmers, village belles, and awkward country bumpkins, the scene is a most picturesque one, and contributes largely to the quaint effect of the screen version of Joseph Arthur's famous "thriller."

Girl Climbs High Mountain Cliff in Hall of Bullets

Remarkable exhibition of strength and daring is given by Miss Hedda Nova.

One of the big, thrilling scenes in Vitagraph's new adventure serial, "The Woman in the Web," comes in the seventh episode which will be shown in the Star Theatre tonight (Tuesday), and gives Miss Hedda Nova and J. Frank Glendon, the stars, fine opportunity to display their daring and strength.

The Princess (Miss Nova) and her sweetheart, Jack Lawford (Mr. Glendon) are pursued by German agents who seek the Czar's crown jewels which have been entrusted to the Princess. She is held by bandits in a mountain retreat and Jack goes to her rescue. In the darkness he approaches the outlaw camp, which he can see over the edge of a cliff.

By the light of a camp fire he can see the girl and attracts her attention. She eludes her guard and reaches the bottom of the cliff. At peril of her life, she makes her way up the sheer face until Jack by leaning over can just grasp her hands. He is slowly drawing her to safety when the girl's absence is discovered and instantly a score of bandits are swarming about the foot of the cliff, seeking to shoot him without harming her.

In this hail of bullets the young American draws his sweetheart up and over the edge of the cliff, safe for the moment, at least. The scene was filmed in a wild spot in the Rockies of California and the camera has done full justice to the remarkable work of the young film stars.

Saw Mill Scenes in Metro Picture Star Wednesday

Some of the big scenes in "Blue Jeans," Viola Dana's forthcoming Metro special production of Joseph Arthur's famous play, occur in an old-fashioned saw mill. These scenes were taken at Roslyn, Long Island. This mill, built in 1869, is still in use by the original owners, Conklin and Tubby, who watched with great interest the taking of the scenes with Miss Dana as star.

Powerful lights were installed at the mill for the photographing of the tense scenes staged there. The circular saw, four and a-half feet in diameter, which has done service six days a week for over two score years was used in the great rescue scene.

In the story Miss Dana, as June, has been locked in the office by the villain, Ben Boone (Clifford Bruce). Through the glass door she sees Boone and her sweetheart, Perry Bascom (Robert Walker) fighting in the mill. Boone places Bascom on the log carriage and leaves him to his fate. Breaking the glass door June rushes in and drags Bascom from the carriage before it reaches the treacherous teeth.

The Precious Parcel

By WALTER JOSEPH DELANEY

(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

"A precious parcel, Miss Lane," spoke Hall Barton, secret service man. "It represents the best roundup of the department for ten years. See," and the keen-eyed, pleasant-faced, sleuth slipped over half a dozen bundles of greenbacks and then rolled them up in three manilla paper coverings, and placed the package in front of the pretty stenographer employed by the Merchants' bank of Woodville.

"What am I to do with it, please?" she inquired.

"Just lock it up somewhere and I will call for it in a day or two." Then his voice dropped to a whisper and the janitor, putting the place in order, failed to catch the import of the subdued tones.

The detective smiled, and Nellie smiled, too. She nodded her head intelligently and arose and placed the package in a drawer and locked it.

"I will have the cashier place it in the safety vault in the morning," she said, but her visitor did not seem in the least anxious about a package which, judging from the contents, represented a large surface value.

It was after banking hours, but Nellie had some pressing work that would keep her late at her desk. Mr. Gregory Valle and his son, Clinton, had gone to a bankers' convention at the county seat and would not return until later.

"Young Mr. Valle told me that I was to bring you a hot supper from the hotel when I come on watch duty at nine o'clock," the janitor said.

"Mr. Valle is very thoughtful," murmured the young lady.

"And he will call when the eleven o'clock train comes in to see you home safely, he told me."

Nellie flattered and flushed. She no longer looked like Clinton Valle. It was a strange circumstance, her present environment. Gregory Valle, after operating his old established bank on a humdrum basis for a quarter of a century, had decided to put in plate glass and marble counters and electric lights. Of course an up-to-date stenographer and typist must follow. Nellie Lane had been hired from the city and a jewel of industry she proved. At the very first Clinton Valle had fallen in love with her. Now Clinton feared and Nellie suspected that the precise and cold-blooded father would replace her with a successor to break up their budding love romance.

Not that Mr. Valle did not value Nellie at her true worth, but she was poor, and his son could take his pick among a choice bevy of heiresses, and money was the god of the old banker.

The janitor pulled down the shades and left the bank. He was to return in four hours. Nellie got out a great pile of papers and began to work. She was fully engrossed in her task, an hour later, when she started, pale and stared with a thrill at three men.

"Don't scream or stir, or get hysterics, little one," spoke their leader smoothly. "We're here to do a job and all you've got to do is to keep quiet. She's your special care, Jim," and tranquilly one of his pals slouched into a seat opposite Nellie, revolver in hand.

"We have three safe hours," resumed the leader. "Get out the tools. Of course the stuff is in the vault. Rig up the oxyacetylene torch and we'll burn out the locks."

Nellie was helpless to defy or baffle the cracksmen, but she thought hard. She knew that aside from the regular funds, the bank carried all the cash tax collections of the district, amounting to half a million dollars.

"What's pleasing you?" projected the main burglar, as Nellie indulged in a gleesome chirp of a laugh.

"I was thinking you'll waste your time," replied Nellie coolly. "There are two more doors to get through and a double safe to—"

"Crack!" grinned the burglar. "Yes," nodded Nellie. "Besides, you will spoil the beautiful locks and you look wicked enough to carry off a lot of stuff belonging to clients and all that. There's money enough lying loose outside here to satisfy any reasonable robber."

"You're an original one!" chuckled the admiring cracksmen. "I suppose you'll show us where this aforesaid money is?"

"I will," assured Nellie, promptly, "if you promise to go away and not try to get into that vault."

"And how much loose change do you let us gather 'up?" propounded the fellow satirically.

"Oh, about two hundred thousand dollars. There's a key. Open that drawer over yonder and be satisfied with what you find."

The leader took one look at the package the secret service man had left with Nellie.

"Follows, here's a royal fortune!" he shouted deliriously to his confederates. "Little girl, you're a jewel," and disappeared with his followers and the "fortune" in question. And Nellie with a placid smile resumed her work. She wondered how soon the looters would discover that the money in the package was counterfeit, just found with a gang the secret service men had broken up.

Nellie called up the police and told her story. She had saved the bank a heavy loss, that was sure, and Gregory Valle forgave her for being poor, which fact his bright-minded son took advantage of by asking Nellie to become his wife.

INDIAN KNEW OF NO WAR

Lucky Escape for Two Germans Who Visited Home of Redskins in Oklahoma.

Salem, O.—It was well for two Germans who visited the home of an Indian in Oklahoma that the redskins did not know that the United States was at war with Germany. Dr. Walter F. Rittman has just returned from an inspection of all properties near Tulsa and happened into an isolated Indian home.

"The Indian could speak English," Doctor Rittman said, "and the conversation turned to the war, of which our host had not heard. He seemed interested, and after meditation remarked:

"Too bad I didn't know it yesterday. Two Germans in my house then. Could have killed 'em just as good as not."

Best-Known Hunting Dogs

Two distinct breeds of hunting dogs in ancient times were the greyhound and the bloodhound, and their origin is lost in the misty ages of the long ago. Tablets unearthed at Nineveh show by pictures that both dogs were common in that ancient day. The bloodhound was first selected on account of his good nose in scenting the trail of game. He is a pendulous eared, or drop-eared dog. Finally he became the limmer of olden days, that is, the bloodhound led in leash or line to track the quarry to its lair or harbor. He was used only to locate the game and was never off the lead, while the greyhound's mission was to race at the game and pin it by the nose.

Good-byes were said at a plain hour and all joined in thanking the hostess for a very enjoyable time.

All Geneva was saddened last Saturday by the news of the death of Mrs. Seegar. Funeral services were held at the Baptist church, of which she was a member, on Sunday morning. Mrs. Seegar was a woman of fine Christian qualities, living the religion she professed in her everyday life and was loved by all who knew her. The sympathy of the entire community goes out to the bereaved husband and mother.

Truly our loss is Heaven's gain.

Mr. and Mrs. Brown of Orlando and Mr. and Mrs. David Spear of Sanford attended the funeral of Mrs. Seegar here last Sunday.

Fighting the Hun in the Air

By LIEUTENANT PAT O'BRIEN

Flying maneuvers most frequently used by allied aviators in their combats with enemy fliers, including the "O'BRIEN LOOP."

The O'BRIEN LOOP

Bank your machine until absolutely vertical, with the nose of the machine slightly down. Motor vertically down in No. 3 position; the rudder is the elevator, the elevator the rudder. The "joy stick" is neutral. The motor is then put on full power and before machine starts to slide slip put on all opposite rudder from direction in which you are turning, and machine will go over for a side loop. The advantage of this maneuver is to deceive enemy as to direction. This evolution is only possible and practicable in one make of machine, a Sopwith Pup.

An aviator flying at the front will find it important and necessary to be perfectly familiar with all these maneuvers. In fact, so thoroughly should he be acquainted with them that he must be able to perform them almost automatically. The successful and quick maneuvering of his machine will not only save him in many a tight pinch, but will increase his chances of bringing down the enemy. In the Royal Flying Corps "stunting" is encouraged and the chap who is able to accomplish the most evolutions has his reward in not only the great popularity he achieves but in the number of machines chalked up to his credit.

make his decisions instantly. The more quickly he is able to maneuver his machine the greater his advantage over his adversary. Presume, for instance, that a Hun was diving down on you from the rear. A pilot who is quickly able to make the loop comes out of the loop above and behind his adversary, and in turn is able to dive down upon him usually before he can complete his dive and perform a counter revolution which would place you at a disadvantage. The evolutions described in this page are those most frequently used by aviators piloting these "fighting scout" machines. That is, with the exception of the O'Brien loop. This loop has the advantage of throwing the adversary "off." In executing this loop his natural inclination is to believe that you are going to make a turn, when in fact you bank your machine and loop side-wise instead of "flat surface on" as you do in executing the ordinary loop. The disadvantage in the O'Brien loop is that it requires a very light machine with an exceedingly strong and sensitive rudder, for the reason that in executing the O'Brien loop your rudder answers the purpose of the elevator. All these maneuvers with one excep-

Flying parallel with ground, turn nose of machine up and start loop. When completely upside down at top of loop you make a half roll by manipulating rudder and stick, bringing you in upright position, and going in opposite direction than you were going at the start of the loop. You change direction and gain altitude. A very essential maneuver in combat.

ter revolution which would place you at a disadvantage. The evolutions described in this page are those most frequently used by aviators piloting these "fighting scout" machines. That is, with the exception of the O'Brien loop. This loop has the advantage of throwing the adversary "off." In executing this loop his natural inclination is to believe that you tion have been originated by aviators who might be classed as "allied aviators." The Immelman turn was invented by a great German flyer of that name who is now dead. This Immelman turn is a decidedly important maneuver, requiring quick thought, quick action, and if successfully completed, giving you positive dominance over your adversary.

Bank machine sharply until vertical. Put on opposite rudder from direction in which you are turning to hold nose of machine up. The rudder in this evolution becomes your elevator and your elevator the rudder. This maneuver is used in making sharp turns and figure 8's.

Flying along parallel with ground start climb with motor off. You go only a little ways in climb when machine stalls. "Joy stick" is back as far as it will go. Put on all rudder possible, machine begins to fall nose down, due to the fact that motor is the heaviest part of the machine. You fall in a spin. To increase speed of spin put motor on. To go out of the spin put control neutral. Direction of spin to right or left determined by rudder control.

as to permit the pilot to shoot straight ahead, or when beneath an enemy machine to so operate the gun as to shoot straight upward, or it can be operated from an angle of 45 degrees. The equivalent of these scout machines with the two machine guns gives the aviator an added advantage. It is important that an aviator be quick of mind and of eye and able to Flying parallel with ground turn sidewise without losing speed by giving machine rudder and banking with stick at the same time. You then right machine. This maneuver can be made either by rudder manipulation or by stick manipulation.

Lieut. Pat O'Brien, who was shot down and captured by the Germans on the 17th of August, 1917, and who on the 8th of September jumped through the window of a German prison train which was speeding him to a German prison camp and made his escape, tells in the following article of the evolutions which he used when engaged in air combat. The evolutions described are those which are customarily used when an aviator is flying a single seater, and in the type of a machine known as a "fighting scout," and which is capable of a speed of from 110 to 150 miles an hour. These machines are very light, some of them weighing not over 750 pounds, and with a wing spread of 36 feet. These machines are equipped with two machine guns, one shooting through the propeller, the other mounted atop one of the wings and so placed

"I pledge allegiance to my flag and the Republic for which it stands; one nation indivisible, with Liberty and Justice to all."

Wilhelm threatens retaliation. Hell, Willum for you.

The people who are doing the most are talking the least in this war.

Sanford needs less talk and more work from every individual in it. A little more work on public matters that mean something to your town would get a few factories here and probably a cantonment or ship yard or at least something in the way of a canning factory.

We would just like to remind you patriots that unless there is a long pull, a strong pull and a pull altogether this summer for your own home town there will be but little space left to fly the flags when the boys come marching home.

The Tampa Tribune is out with the idea that Marion L. Dawson of Brooksville would be an ideal man for speaker of the house in the next session of the Florida legislature.

Knowing that our readers are interested in red flooded war stories this paper has contracted for the story of Lieut. Pat O'Brien, Outwitting the Hun, in which he tells about falling eight thousand feet from an aeroplane into German territory, is captured, makes his escape by jumping from a moving train and crawls part of the way into neutral territory where he escapes to England and comes back to his home in America to tell this marvelous adventure.

While other papers are cutting down the size and raising the price on account of the heavy expense of the war The Herald is trying to give the readers the same size papers through the summer months for the same money. We want to keep you informed of what is going on in your own city, your county, your country and in Europe.

times and the times that are trying men's souls, and we hope the public will help us to keep the home fires burning.

FLAG DAY TODAY
Today is Flag Day and it means more to us today than ever before in the knowledge of the present generation. Observe it by displaying Old Glory, by offering up a silent prayer at six this evening and by celebrating in a fitting manner the day upon which we honor the Stars and Stripes.

STRIKE BACK FIRST
Nothing can be more admirable than the reply of Secretary Lansing to the arrogant and sinister bluster of the German War Lords in the Von Rintelen matter. Far from knuckling down to Germany, the Secretary of State in a few words tells the German government that country will hold it to strict accountability for any suffering which it may contemplate inflicting on innocent Americans in Germany because of its assumption that the arch-plotter Von Rintelen is illegally held by us.

With all this hideous perfidy and cruelty in daily evidence, Secretary Lansing takes the right step in putting upon Germany itself the full responsibility for what will happen over here in case of torture on prisoners of war and the American civilians in Germany. But as a matter of fighting the devil with fire the United States should not wait for any reprisal which Germany may decide to make because we have refused to give up this precious scoundrel, who would have been hanged in Germany, and rightly so, were the situation reversed.

Secretary Lansing's perfectly frank reply, however, settles all that. We are not afraid of Germany. We know what all this threat of unknown frightfulness means, and we will meet it in our own way. The Germans and Austrians who are here are also under no illusion as to the real American attitude.

ly on the Marne is it self-evident that Uncle Sam's fighting blood is up, but at home; and none knows this better than the Mucks, the Von Rintelen, the Thierichens and others of the same black brood, now who are imprisoned or interned. If the German foreign office could have consulted them, the note sent to Lansing through the Swiss minister would never have been sent.

WHY NOT STAY HOME FOR A "REST?"
We have been lauding our summer climate for years, and doing our best to induce the rest of the world to look on South Florida, with its beautiful bathing beaches, and its balmy breezes bringing the salt air of the ocean over immense pine forests, gathering ozone in the slight, as the ideal summer resort.

As a matter of fact and sober truth the best place to rest and recuperate from the year's toil is right at home. The last place on earth to look for rest is the modern summer "resort." But it has become the fashion, and all the world runs to it like a flock of sheep through a gap in the fence, and when the vacation is ended all come back home tired and worn-out with the unaccustomed way of living, with the strenuousness of boating, bathing, fishing, tennis and golf, and all the other forms of amusement and recreation which the modern "resort" thinks it necessary to provide for its "guests."

We are aware that the doctrine we are preaching is not likely to prove popular, but we cannot help that. If you think we are wrong, ask your favorite doctor if a quiet rest at home with your books, and your war garden if you are lucky enough to have one, is not a better and more sensible means of rest and recuperation, than a long, expensive, uncomfortable trip in a hot, dusty, stuffy car to some vaunted resort where amusement is made a laborious business, and the thought of rest is a joke.

What do you get away from home that you cannot get here? Nothing but the change, and the game in that aspect is not worth the candle. As it bathing you go long distances to seek? The finest beaches in all the world lie almost at your doorways. You can take your plunge in the salt waters of the gulf daily if you desire and sleep like a child in your own bed at night. Fishing? The board waters that incessantly heat upon your shores are full of game fishes from the leaping mackerel to the lordly tarpon, king of game fishes that sportsmen come from a thousand miles away to capture. And the country roundabout embraces a myriad of crystal watered lakes where the bass and the perch, and the bream are waiting under the fly pads for your bait.

The United States railroad administration has added to the expense of your outing, by putting another cent per mile on the fare, and you will find the high cost of living has not been forgotten by the hotel man when you go to settle your bill. Cut it all out and put the money it would cost into Liberty bonds or war savings stamps. Remember that the stern business of the nation at the present moment is to win the war. Nothing else counts till that is done.

life of a workman whose daughter, standing at the door of the pouring room later becomes one of the chief figures of the story.
Director Larry Trimble left nothing undone to provide realism for the mill scene. Fifteen hundred extra people are in the mob which, led by the girl whose father has been strived to a cinder before her eyes, storms the gate of the plant seeking the life of the superintendent, whose mania for high production figures has caused the accident.
The mill scene was photographed entirely by the light of the blast furnaces and the flaming metals.
The second big scene, which comes well toward the end of the picture depicts a fighting raid on a Tenderloin gambling house and the arrest of the owners and their lieutenants. Costly furniture is smashed, expensive fittings are ruined and many a manly face is altered by contact with flying fists and clubs.
Sixty men, every one a two fisted fighter, take part in the scene. At its conclusion five of the most capable sluggers were caught by the camera lying face down on the floor—not for effect, but because they were licked.
Rex Beach happened to be in the studio when the raid scene was photographed and Mr. Trimble had his hands full keeping him out of the set. Rex Beach loves a good fight just a shade more than a good frolic.

Nature's Error.
Buffy writes us that if nature had known what she was about when she made man, she would have given him two noses—one to have a cold in and one for general utility. Then you could get the first one snip out (as in the case of tonsils or an appendix) and live comparatively happily ever after. We will call nature's attention to it.—Ex change.

240 Pound Pigs

With corn above 50 cents hogs eat their heads off very quickly. The hog that takes two or three months to get on full feed never brings you a profit.

When you are ready to put away your shoats on feed, begin with the B. A. Thomas Hog Medicine. Use regularly and watch your shoats round out into fat hogs in nine months—hogs going well over two pounds and as high as 240 pounds. Figure the average feeding and you will see why the B. A. Thomas medicine is a good investment. Try Feeding out your hogs on this plan and if you are not more than pleased we will refund the cost of the medicine.

Baby Marie Osborne Coming

Baby Marie Osborne, the "world's most famous child star" is to be seen here Friday in her latest Pathe play, "A Daughter of the West," at the Star Theatre.

"A Daughter of the West" is a thrilling western melodrama in which the child star plays a new kind of role and plays it to perfection.

The story briefly deals with a series of thrilling incidents, with Baby Marie as the central figure, in the far western town of "Hell's Gulch." "Rawhide Pete," a desperado at the head of a dangerous gang of outlaws is terrorizing the community. In the end he is captured in a most plausible but exciting manner by Baby Marie. The story also has a thread of romance woven into it along with a domestic tragedy and a lot of kid stuff of the cutest kind.

FALSE RUMORS SHAKE BRITAIN

Irresponsible Talk Is the Worst Form of Enemy Propaganda.

PEACE BRIBE TO BERLIN

Thousand Asses Loaded With Pure Gold Reported to Be Sent—Wild Tale of Fight Between Two Kiltie Regiments.

London.—The most deadly form of German propaganda in Great Britain today is the mouth to mouth rumor. Wherever one goes, in clubs or restaurants, at the theater or in the railway car, one's peace of mind will be irrevocably shattered by some kindly intentioned stranger. The keep of the London Tower has been overcrowded with riddled corpses to a positively unsanitary degree. Now it will be an airman of worldwide renown. The next day an ex-lord chancellor of the realm will toe the line following him; King George will have his Germanic extraction sung in his teeth.

and an ex-prime minister receive the welcome news that he has sold the country to save his financial interests in the enemy's country. Your true propagandist is no respecter of persons.

Of Eastern Origin.

There was one story of distinct Eastern origin. Great Britain, ran the humor by way of kindly neutrals, had sent a thousand asses laden with pure gold as a peace bribe to Berlin. A later effort, told with due pathos and dramatic effect, concerned the loss of a large American transport, which had been sent down by a German U-boat, with a total loss of life and material. The rumor was common property, with, perhaps, the possible exception of the American naval authorities.

"Thousands of Woolwich arsenal workers, unable to obtain food, were rioting furiously, and the troops had to be called out," was the preface to another. Inquiry showed the case to be that of a woman of inebriate habits and revolutionary tendencies, a misapprehension with a local police constable and a sympathetic crowd, hungry and disappointed, supplied the necessary background and climax.

If You Were a Prisoner in the compartment of a German prison train, with an armed guard over you, a window open beside you, the train speeding through an enemy's country at thirty-five miles an hour would you jump and take the one chance in a million to escape? It was the "Millionth" chance Lieut. "Smiling" Pat O'Brien took—he jumped from the train, he lived, and with the stars to guide him, wounded and lame he "crawled" two hundred and fifty miles through the enemy's lines to safety. The story of his escape is told by him in our new serial "Outwitting the Hun." DO NOT FAIL TO READ IT!

THE OTHER GIRL

By EARL REED SILVERS.

(Copyright, 1918, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Mildred had always been afraid of the other girl. Ted spoke of her very little now, but only a brief three months ago he had told Mildred all about that wonderful week in the mountains. He had been worn out with the press of work and had gone to Coleville, where he had found Elsie. She was the village school teacher. Just out of normal school.

He had not known Mildred very well then. But the day after his return she had met him at a country club dance, and she had listened while he told her about Elsie. And then, two days before New Year's, he had told her that he was going to Coleville again to see Elsie.

"I promised her the last time I was up there that I'd come again on New Year's," he explained, "and I don't like to break my promise."

Something in the hurt of Mildred's eyes brought an answering light in his own.

"You know, don't you," he asked softly, "that I'd rather be here with you?"

But Mildred shook her head. "I don't know whether you would or not," she answered frankly. "You must care a good deal for her."

He nodded. "Yes," he said; "I do."

Two days later he had left for Coleville, but not before he and Mildred had talked it all out. And Mildred tried to convince herself that he was doing the right thing.

"She is very much in love with him. I know she is," she told herself, "and before he offers his love to me he must find out whether or not Elsie has lost her appeal to him."

It was hard waiting until he should come back again. Through seemingly endless days Mildred tried to fix her mind on other things, but it was useless. Gradually an idea took possession of her and worked its way into her mind until it became almost an obsession. She began to think how strange it would be if Ted should bring Elsie to New York with him as a bride and it ended by believing that that was exactly what Ted was going to do.

She resolved to go to the Grand Central station and to wait outside the gates for Ted's train to come in.

"I can hide behind some other people," she said to herself, "and if he should come off the train with another girl I can see him first and come home without him knowing it. Then he won't have to tell me about it himself."

She was waiting at the station when the train arrived, and as the people started to pour through the gates she felt a sudden panic.

"Supposing he should come with another girl," she thought. "I would never speak to him again in the world."

The fact that under those circumstances he wouldn't care whether she spoke to him or not did not occur to her.

The passengers had almost all passed through the gate, and Mildred had begun to think that perhaps Ted had missed his train, when he appeared suddenly from the darkened platform. Mildred's heart stood still as she saw him, for he was walking beside one of the prettiest girls she had ever seen.

With something like a sob, Mildred drew back into the crowd, watching with tear-battered eyes while Ted and the girl passed almost within six feet of her. When they had gone into the main station she rushed into the subway and somehow made the trip to her home.

A doorbell rang downstairs, but Mildred did not notice. Nothing mattered. But a moment later a knock sounded at her door and the maid announced that Mr. Terrill was waiting. Mr. Terrill was Ted, and the announcement that he was downstairs filled Mildred with a sort of dull rage. She wondered vaguely why in the world he was calling on her; but she resolved that she would not let him know what a pang his selection of the other girl had given her. So she washed the tears from her eyes and went down the stairs, just as if the bottom had not fallen out of the earth.

Ted stepped forward eagerly as soon as he saw her.

"Mildred!" he said.

But Mildred only nodded casually.

"How are you, Ted?" she asked, with studied formality. "You had a nice trip, I hope."

He looked at her with startled eyes. "What's the matter, dear?" he asked, softly.

There was something in the way he spoke which shattered Mildred's reserve into tiny fragments.

"Oh, Ted," she half sobbed, "I saw you get off the train with her. Where is she?"

"Where is who?"

"The other girl—Elsie?"

"Why?" Ted looked very much mystified. "When I left her this morning she was standing on the station at Coleville."

"And wasn't that she coming from the train with you?"

"No, dear; that was my cousin, who got on the train at Bridgeport, and who asked me to take her over to the Penn. station in New York."

"Oh!" For a long two minutes Mildred's eyes looked anywhere except at the man before her. But they returned to his after he had started to speak, for he was saying the most wonderful words in the world.

"There isn't any other girl," he said softly. "There is no one but you, dear."

Her One Romance

By RUTH EVELYN PETERSON

(Copyright, 1918, Western Newspaper Union.)

"Walter! Walter!"
"Sh-h!" ordered Miss Dorothy Worden, and waved a scarf toward the big wire cage hung from the top of the porch.

She flushed and was generally embarrassed, for some one was passing the house, and Miss Worden was a sensitive soul and experienced a certain sense of guiltiness. But to the passer-by the sudden outburst of Miss Worden's well-known parrot conveyed no secret. A name, and a common one, had no particular significance to unenlightened ears.

There had been an hour of quite rare romance in the lonely life of Miss Worden, but she had hidden its details and even its memories from all outsiders. She was thirty and designated as an old maid.

Fate had been kind to her. A brother, fortunate in his business affairs and generous in his gifts to his only sister, had provided her with a cozy home and a settled income. She was naturally sweet tempered, she had not allowed her sympathies to grow old and she was the favorite and confidant of all the younger set of the town.

Lovers had passed her by. For six years after girlhood the care of her invalid mother had taken all her time and interest. By that time she was twenty-eight, and with a sigh she had accepted the inevitable.

"I am quite on the shelf," she told one of her near and dear friends. "And that is not a very sad fate, for I have never had time to think of love and cherish any romance memories."

But sentiment came to Miss Worden with a visit for two weeks at a summer resort. The doctor had advised her that she needed and deserved a change and a rest after the death of her mother. It was one day while strolling down the beach that a well-dressed but unobtrusive gentleman half paused as he passed her. She was seated watching the waves and the sports in the surf when the same man passed her. She noted that he slowed down in his pace. He hesitated, then he lifted his hat and approached her.

"Pardon me, if I have made a mistake," he said courteously, "but are you not Dorothy Worden—forgive me, Miss Worden?"

"That is my name," acknowledged the lady. "May I ask—"

But his clear, honest face had become radiant. He extended his hand readily and, somehow won with those friendly earnest eyes, she allowed her own to rest in his.

"You don't remember me," he smiled. "I don't wonder. I made little impression with my personality when I was a boy, less as I drugged along as a nun. I am an old schoolmate of yours. I am Walter Clyde."

Her face lit up in turn. Ah, she fully remembered him now! It was like traversing a page from an old treasured book to go over the incidents of their early childhood. She recalled how he had spelled her down, and he related an incident where he had been punished for some trivial fault and she had wanted to go home with him and comfort him. It was a delightful week for these two lonely ones. He told her of his daily work. He was a traveling salesman, and she in turn apprized him of her life history since they had parted. Playfully he called her Dorothy, and asked her to address him as Walter, as she had done in the dear old days of childhood.

"I am coming to see you next time my route covers Milton," he told her, and when they parted Dorothy felt as though suddenly she had been turned away from a newly found paradise.

"And when Miss Worden got home it was a comfort to speak his name to herself. But wise old Polly heard her, and hence the call, loud and mischievous, whenever the observant parrot comprehended that it teased her.

It was three months later when a lonely man turned his face in the direction of Milton. He had his longings to see his old-time school friend. He had his nagging also. Somehow that chance meeting with Miss Worden had filled his life with a new interest. Did he exaggerate in his conception of the warm interest she had evinced in his affairs? That might have been simply a friendly and courteous act.

Walter Clyde reached Milton and inquired his way to the Worden home. He located it. The neat rose-scented garden, the vine-embowered cottage enchanted him. He found Miss Worden absent from home, probably shopping in town or visiting a neighbor. He sat down on the porch step, wondering if he would be welcome.

"Walter! Walter!"

He started to his feet. At first he believed it was Miss Worden calling him. Then he noticed the parrot in its cage hanging from the porch ceiling.

"Walter! Walter!" It began thinking. A most agreeable smile crossed his face. He was a slow man, but a reasoner. Had Miss Worden taught the clever bird to speak his name?

"I'll wait—I'll stay," he sojourned. "Why not? The bird spoke my name. Sort of friendly and tender, too. Dear lady! perhaps she has made a confidant of the bird and really—really likes me."

She loved him, and he knew this before he went away, buoyed up with the happy knowledge that when summer came again she would be his happy bride.

Plenty of Navy Beans

Due to the fact that the white navy bean is popularly supposed to be used wholly for army and navy requirements, this excellent meat substitute is in scant demand. The truth of the matter is that the army and navy requirements, until Oct. 1 are fully covered, and that there is now a surplus on the market of not only the white navy bean but of all domestic grown beans. At the present time the bean market is weak because the traffic blockade of last winter has caused the spring market to be flooded with beans, which under normal conditions would have been consumed in the winter months. It is possible that this may have an undesirable effect on the acreage to be planted. It would be unfortunate to have production curtailed.

To guard against this growers are being urged to make attractive window displays showing the value of beans as a food and how their substitution will assist the Food Administration in carrying out its program to feed the fighters at the front. Such assistance on the part of the grower will aid materially not only in saving meat and wheat but also will be a factor in making the 1918 bean acreage as large or larger than that of 1917. —New York Packet.

Wheat and Crop Conditions

In Florida for the week ending June 10, 1918:

Temperature. The week was one of the warmest of the season, maximum of 100 deg. having occurred at several stations. The excess averaged about 2 degrees, except in the extreme south, where the temperature was somewhat below the seasonal average. The highest reported was 101 deg.; the lowest, 63 deg.

Precipitation. Highly beneficial rains occurred over a large portion of the northern and central divisions, where some local amounts exceeded 2 or 3 inches. In the southern division, and generally west of the Apalachicola river, rains were insufficient and the droughty conditions are still serious. In some localities the drought has continued several weeks, and several counties report no rain during the current week. Some weekly totals of rain were: Archer, 5.4; Gainesville, 2.0; Madison, 2.9; Tallahassee, 1.7; Swainland, 3.8; Crescent City, 1.4; St. Leo, 1.1; Jacksonville, 1.3; and Orlando, 1.0 inches.

Condition of Crops. The dry weather enabled farmers to put all crops in good condition. Cotton was well worked, and it improved somewhat during the week, but the boll weevil is bad and still spreading. Some corn has been ruined, and much is still suffering from drought, but as yet the crop is fair to good. The need of rain is pressing, however, and without it the corn crop will suffer beyond recovery during the present week. Although showing the need of more rain, cane, peanuts, castor beans, cassava and minor crops are still in fair to good condition. Some complain that citrus fruits are dropping; also of rust and white fly, but as a whole the outlook is fair to good. Considerable June bloom is reported. The need of rain has delayed sweet potato planting, but the work was advanced during the week.

Fish Industry Protected

The efforts on the part of some people to have the fishing laws of Florida abrogated so that all sizes of almost all of the fish at all times of the year could be caught without regard to the market demands, proved a failure, and through the port of the Florida commercial organizations back of him, little or no change in the law has been made, and the fishing industry will still be protected.

The stand was taken by those who studied the question that there was enough fish available in Florida and adjacent waters to supply any market demands under the present laws, and that it was not only necessary to modify the laws for the catching of fish only to be thrown away, resulting in a complete loss.

ROMANOFFS ARE HOUSED PLAINLY

Former Czar and Czarina Have No Gas, Electricity or Bathroom.

FARE OF MOST FRUGAL NATURE

Practically Condemned to the Life of Recluses—Daughters Allowed to Come and Go Freely, but Son is Closely Guarded.

Paris.—Though things Russian are rather in disfavor just now, a short account of the life led by the Romanoffs, the former imperial family, may prove of interest.

Tobolsk has been called the "City of Death," its temperature rarely rising above the freezing point. Most of its houses are built of wood, the one where the imperial family lives being one of the few brick-buildings in that part of the country. Its ground floor is occupied by a company of soldiers installed there as a guard. The two upper floors, consisting of 14 rooms most simply furnished, constitute the apartments of "Colonel Romanoff."

There is neither running water nor gas, neither electricity nor bathroom. The servants are obliged to draw from a nearby well the water needed for household purposes. The rooms are heated by brick ovens which burn wood. The largest room is not more than 10 feet by 10 feet.

The windows of the house look out on an unattractive landscape. There is not even a garden where the ex-czar might dig and forget his boredom. A narrow balcony and a courtyard inclosed by high brick walls furnish the only breathing spots for the imperial prisoners.

Live Life of Recluses.

Nicholas Romanoff and his wife are practically condemned to the lives of recluses. Their sole outlet consists in attending mass at the cathedral of the Annunciation or at a neighboring monastery or going to the public baths, where as a special favor the revolutionary authorities permit them to go once a week. Whenever they go out they are escorted by a platoon of soldiers commanded by four officers of the guard.

The fare imposed upon the prisoners is of the most frugal nature. Once accustomed to the delicate refinements of French cooking, they are forced to be content with ordinary Russian dishes: pling, a sort of roll covered with caviar; bortsch, a thick soup made of beets and other vegetables; tulchuk, a cheese paste.

The people of Tobolsk show neither hostility nor sympathy toward the exiled family. Life in the small town is consistently monotonous. The existence of the former emperor drags along in drab sadness. Now and then he is authorized to receive the visit of two faithful high functionaries whom the revolutionary government permitted to accompany him in his exile—Count Frederiks and General Voyekov. To them he confides his regrets, his memories and his hopes.

Nicholas Romanoff said recently to General Voyekov in an accent of profound resignation:

"Has my life not always been that of a prisoner? I do not regret my lot now. All I ask is to be allowed to retire to Crimea, where I could live surrounded by flowers. I feel more than ever that I would be peaceful and happy as a simple citizen of a republic."

His resignation in no wise is shared by the former Czarina Alexandra. Everything in her new mode of life wounds, shocks and irritates her.

Nowadays Alexandra devotes herself to her children, whom she teaches not to resign themselves but to remember. What makes her most indignant is that she is allowed neither to write nor receive letters that are not opened by the revolutionary officers. She constantly repeats to her daughters: "Never forget what we are forced to bear at the present moment."

Her only confidante is Countess Natschikine, who was her lady-in-waiting and who was allowed to follow her to Tobolsk.

Alexis Closely Guarded.

If the grand duchesses are allowed to come and go freely in the town without the vexation of any surveillance, the same thing is not true of the ex-czar's only son, Alexis, who is familiarly known as Alloscha, can go out and play in the public parks whenever he likes, but he is watched by guards specially attached to his person.

The daughters of the former czar lead a simple life. Grand Duchess Olga, the most serious of them all, has enrolled herself among the voluntary nurses of a military hospital to which are sent convalescents from Siberia and where she conscientiously passes several hours a day.

Grand Duchess Marie has taken up stenography and typewriting to help her father write his memoirs. But he dictates nothing and writes nothing. Sometimes he leans out of the only window, which overlooks the town, and watches his children when they go for a walk. He wears the dress uniform of a colonel of the Preobrajensky and puts on a dignified air as soon as he thinks he is being observed. But when he thinks himself alone his back loses its stiffness, he hides his care-lined face in his hands and the man, whose hair has turned gray, white, falls into melancholy brooding.

SEA CLOCKS ARE IN BIG DEMAND

War Causes Shortage of Chronometers Used in Ocean Navigation.

NONE IN THE OPEN MARKET

Price Jumps From $300 to $500 and Over—Englishman Who Perfected Instrument Won Prize of $100,000 and Thanks of Mankind.

Washington.—Among the busiest people supplying the United States with war materials are the makers of chronometers. Great care and precision are necessary in turning out these navigating instruments, which are the most accurate portable time-keepers known to science.

Hundreds of chronometers have gone to the bottom of the ocean since the war began. This alone would cause a shortage in the ordinary supply, while the equipping of the new American merchant marine is creating an unprecedented demand for new instruments.

At present there are virtually no chronometers to be had in the open market. Before the war England supplied the world with most of its fine chronometers.

In ordinary times a good chronometer costs about $300. The present price is $500 or better, according to the trade made. The supply in this country passes through the hands of a few exporters who are doing their utmost to meet the demand.

From six months to a year and a half are necessary to make and adjust a chronometer. The mechanism is of the finest metals, and specially adapted to resistance to extremes of temperature.

Errors Are Noted.

No clock or watch has ever yet kept perfect time, so there is always a slight gain or loss to a chronometer. For this reason the chronometer's rate of daily gain or loss is determined by observation ashore, and a card showing the rate is made out, and delivered with the instrument. This rate of error is allowed in all notations of time made from the instrument for working up observations made at sea.

The chronometer completes, with the compass and sextant, the trio of indispensable instruments required in modern navigation. By its aid, longitude or the east or west position of a ship, is determined.

Longitude baffled all navigators until the chronometer came into use in 1735. The ancients and later navigators, including all the great discoverers, could find their latitude by observations of the sun's height, but they could determine their longitude only by "dead reckoning," or estimating their ship's progress from day to day. This system was uncertain, and caused a great many shipwrecks.

Longitude is merely the difference of time between two points on the earth's surface, and it became apparent to students of the problem it presented that if an instrument could be devised that would keep accurate time at sea, it would be possible to find the longitude of a ship's position whenever weather conditions were favorable. Time at the ship could be determined by an east or west observation of the sun, morning or afternoon, worked out by accepted tables. If the time of a given point on shore was known aboard the ship, the difference in time would give the longitude of the ship.

England was the first nation to cope with this great problem. In 1714 it appointed "Commissioners for the Discovery of Longitude at Sea" and authorized the payment of large prizes to stimulate research to the desired end. This commission existed until 1828, and distributed more than $500,000 in prizes.

Wins $100,000 Prize.

The chief prize offered by the commission, $100,000, was won by John Harrison, a Yorkshire watchmaker, who spent his life in perfecting the chronometer.

Harrison made the best watches in England. Although of limited education, he conducted many original researches in the expansion of metals. In search of materials for an improved watch or clock, that would prove impervious to changes of temperature. His first great feat was the production of a "gridiron pendulum clock," the first chronometer, which in 1735 he took to the royal commission. It was tested by the commission by being sent on a voyage to Lisbon.

The test was not decisive, and Harrison continued to work on his chronometer, seeking the great prize, for a period of 20 years. In 1761, when sixty-eight years old, Harrison announced that he had solved all problems involved in his work. He produced a chronometer which the commission sent on a voyage to Jamaica, to test for heat. It varied but two minutes on the entire voyage of several months. The commission demanded another test, and the chronometer was sent to Barbados, varying but two-thirds of a second a week in a voyage of five months.

Harrison had now fairly won the prize, but he was paid only half of it, the chronometer being given further exhaustive tests before, when eighty years of age, he received the balance, in 1776.
