

Fratiano Now A Key Federal Witness

Ex-Mobster Tells Of Pro-Football Bribery

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Jimmy "the Weasel" Fratiano, former mob boss and now a key federal witness, says a friend bribed the referee to give the Los Angeles Rams some help in three football games 30 years ago.

Fratiano says he cashed in on the opportunity and made tens of thousands of dollars in bets.

Now in the government's Witness Protection Program, Fratiano made the rare disclosure of alleged tampering with professional football in a United Press International interview at a secret location arranged by the U.S. Marshal Service.

Asked if he knew whether the mob has rigged professional sports events in recent years, the former acting boss of the Los Angeles crime family and onetime bookie said he could not think of any recent fixes.

But he said, "I know years ago, I bet a lot of money on one football game. I think it was 1951. The Rams were playing ... it was either the Packers or maybe the New York Yankees (as a pro football team). We had the referee. And he was a preacher!"

Fratiano said he could not recall the referee's name, but he said the man who paid him off was a Los Angeles area businessman.

"He had the referee, and he told my friend, and my friend told me," he said.

The businessman, reached by UPI, acknowledged meeting Fratiano about 30 years ago. Asked about the alleged fix, he laughed and said, "Isn't that ridiculous? I had the referee ... This guy is dreaming. If there was any truth, I'd tell you. I bet on games, that I do. He's nuts. Don't believe a word he says."

Fratiano said the Rams, who won the National Football League championship in 1951, were 13-point favorites in each game, betting, and by game time the spread had reached an astonishing 28 points with some oddsmakers.

Fratiano said he was $35,000 in debt at the time, but he took the Rams in bets with bookies all over the country. "I bet $5,000 here, $2,500 there. I bet every place in the country. I bet about $80,000. I didn't have a nickel, OK? ... I didn't care. I didn't have no money to pay off anybody."

He said he also told bosses of the Mafia's Cleveland family, who were his close friends, to bet on the Rams.

"We bet $2,500 for the referee," he said. "This guy (referee) was a preacher!"

He said on the first play from scrimmage, the Rams fumbled and their opponents drove to a touchdown.

"Now I needed six touchdowns to win!" Fratiano said. "So I watched this referee. He'd get his hand on the flag all the time. Forget about it. This guy called more penalties. Forget about it. At the half, I think the coach of Green Bay or New York wanted to kill the referee because he saw things that didn't look right."

"The Rams won 55-7, I think. I won $80,000." National Football League records show no 55-7 score for the Rams in the 1951 season, but the Rams did defeat New York 54-14 in the season opener, and Fratiano guessed that might have been the game involved.

He said he and his friends "had the referee" again later in the season when the Rams played the San Francisco 49ers, but Fratiano pulled a rope from his pocket and, slipping it around his neck, told him, "Frankie, your time's up."

He readily admits to killing four other men from 1947 to 1953, luring them to the scenes of their death. Three were strangulations. "It didn't bother me. So the bodies turn purple. So what?"

"Everything they (the Rams) did went wrong" and the 49ers won.

He stressed he spent 20 years of his life in prison and was not afraid of returning.

"I could have beat the cases. They had nothing on me. But even if I beat them, what am I gonna do? I turned because they had a contract on my life, and for no reason. They're out to clip me. I know my life isn't worth two cents."

Asked if the mob still wants him dead, he replied "Hell yes. They don't forget. It might take them 10 years, but they don't forget."

Since turning federal witness, Fratiano has testified against both the reputed Los Angeles family boss, Dominic Brooklier, and underboss Sam Sciortino, who he says spread the rumors about him so he would be killed.

Both were convicted in January, but Fratiano is enraged that U.S. District Judge Terry Haller Jr. gave each four years in prison for racketeering in extorting payoffs from FBI undercover agents.

"I did more time than they did, and I'm a witness!" Fratiano bellowed, pointing out he agreed to plead guilty to a similar charge in the deal to testify. "I got five years (and served 21 months starting in 1977). Does that make any sense?"

Fratiano's testimony has helped convict more than 15 Cosa Nostra men — including family dons Brooklier and Frank "Funi" Tieri of New York — and he has become one of the most valuable sources about the mob's hierarchy. He says the FBI's recent crackdown on the mob — spearheaded by his own testimony — "is hurting them a lot, believe me."

But Fratiano also said the Mafia is operating as widely as ever. Besides their usual gambling interests, he said families in the months and years after he joined the Los Angeles family and was declared "a made guy" — a member of La Cosa Nostra — Fratiano was given orders to kill.

In one of his first contracts in 1949, he was told to convince Frankie Nicolli to disavow his loyalty to Mickey Cohen, a Jewish rival of the family.

Fratiano said when he was unsuccessful in a meeting with Nicolli, four family henchmen barreled through the door. While they grabbed Nicolli, Fratiano pulled a rope from his pocket and, slipping it around his neck, told him, "Frankie, your time's up."

Fratiano readily admits to killing four other men from 1947 to 1953, luring them to the scenes of their death. Several times, he tried to kill Cohen. Although he went to prison four times, he was never convicted of murder.

And it was perhaps Fratiano's savvy in carrying out murders that kept him suspicious enough to later save his life.

From 1960 to 1975, Fratiano said, he was "transferred" from the Los Angeles crime family to the Chicago family. He spent three years, 1970-73, in prison, and began collecting an FBI informant's fee for spending money when he got out ("I never did tell them anything").

Unemployment among black and other minority teen-agers, however, continued a decline, dropping 1.1 percentage points to 35.4 percent. At the end of 1980, the rate stood at 37.5 percent.

Joblessness, Food Costs Down; But Gas, Oil Up

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Unemployment and inflation in wholesale prices both eased slightly in February, the Labor Department reported today, but the figures concealed several major changes affecting Americans.

The jobs rate declined slightly from 20.7 percent in January to 19.9 percent in February, but teen-age joblessness reached 19.3 percent as it kept up its steady climb.

Energy prices at the wholesale level rose 3.6 percent during the month, their fastest increase since March 1980, the department said. Gasoline prices went 4.7 percent and home heating oil rose 6.5 percent.

On the other hand, wholesale level food prices fell 0.6 percent, their first actual decline since April of last year.

The result was that the overall Producer Price Index for finished goods ready for retail sale rose 0.8 percent in February, a very slight decline from its 0.9 percent rate of increase in January.

The Blind Mosquito research program, being conducted at the University of Florida research center in Sanford, uses the displayed equipment to scoop up mud from the bottom of Lake Monroe for analysis. Joe Maino, owner of Monroe Harbour, (second from left) is shown the equipment by Dr. John Darby (left) head of the research center, Dr. Arshad Ali, researcher (second from right) and Rick Baggs, laboratory technologist. Samples of blind mosquito larvae, shown below are observed.

Mosquito Research Program On Schedule

After only 2½ years into the research program to find an environmentally sound method of reducing the blind mosquito population in the Lake Monroe area, the program is running on schedule or slightly ahead of schedule.

Dr. Arshad Ali, who has been heading the research program, gave this report during a special program Thursday at the University of Florida (U of F) Agricultural, Research and Education Center on Cleary Avenue in Sanford.

The program was held to give community leaders a progress report.

All began the research program in September 1978, after a task force of the Greater Sanford Chamber of Commerce, State Rep. Robert Hattaway, D-Altamonte Springs, and Sen. John Vogt, D-Cocoa Beach, were able to acquire state funding for the project.

It is conducted by the U of F Institute of Food and Agricultural Sciences.

Dr. John Darby, head of the institute, reported that the original budget for the program, as submitted by the U of F was $750,000 over a five year period. Actually funded was $500,000 annually.

The remaining research, Darby said, would take about three to five years. The second phase of the project, currently underway, involves an attempt to prove from analyses of the lake bottom that nutrients in the mud are contributing to the high populations of the midge here.

Darby said the high degree of nutrients appears to be caused by sewage effluent being dumped into the lake and into the St. Johns River.

All reported soon after beginning the research effort that it would not be "possible, practical or desirable," to entirely eradicate the blind mosquito. He said the goal of the research would be to manage the pest in such a way that the population would be reduced to a non-nuisance level.

City Sewer Plant Flushed?

Plans for the conversion and expansion of Sanford's sewer plant into a regional facility "may go down the tube," but it is not all bad as far as the city is concerned.

City Manager W.E. Knowles told city commissioners Thursday it appears the Reagan administration will kill federal funding for projects like the Sanford regional system.

In addition, he reported that in his testimony before a state Senate committee this week he complained that the state Department of Environmental Regulation keeps changing the rules. He said he told the committee the DEH's "yo-yo" like changes in regulations have added $1.8 million to the expansion-conversion costs over the past two years.

He said the DEH first approved the dumping of treated sewage effluent into Lake Monroe and then changed the rules to require land spreading, only to change again.

At the same time, he said, DEH has approved the proposed discharge by Orlando's Iron Bridge regional sewer plant near Oviedo of 25 million gallons of effluent daily into waterways.

"When you have to design and redesign and the project is delayed two years while construction costs are rising by 15 percent, this adds a cost to the planned $12 million plant of $1.8 million," Knowles said.

He said the federal government and the state have been pushing regionalization of sewer plants. But now "the scutcheon in Tallahassee is that the program will be phased down and out with both the feds and their money out of the situation," Knowles said.

He said it will be a lot easier for Sanford to provide expansion of the plant to serve only Sanford residents.

"We can expand a lot more easily for the city and I am sure the city taxpayers are not interested in paying to provide the service for other entities," he said.

Knowles said the city, however, probably will still need to purchase about six acres of land near the lakefront and adjacent to the sewer plant on Poplar Street for future expansion. The property has been appraised at $72,000.

Later the property might not be available and acquisition costs might be higher, he said.

The city manager added that at this point it appears impossible for the state to step up with the necessary funding to replace the federal money for sewer plants which appears to be lost.

"We are talking about a lot of money statewide," Knowles said, pointing to sewer plant projects in the Tampa and Duval County areas estimated at $120 million each. Knowles estimated the projects currently on the drawing boards now in Florida total $1 billion.

In most of the cases, the federal government was to fund about 75 percent of the costs with local government picking up the 25 percent balance of costs.

The future of Seminole County's Juvenile Arbitration program, designed to keep youthful first offenders out of court, has been cast in doubt by charges that the program usurps a child's legally-protected right to a speedy trial.

Although Juvenile Court Judge Vernon Mize Wednesday rejected the argument, the matter is scheduled to come up again at a rehearing next Wednesday at 10 a.m.

Sanford Woman Killed In Crash

A 51-year-old Sanford woman was killed shortly after midnight today in a two-car accident at the intersection of State Road 436 and Lake Howell Road in Casselberry.

Following the 12:08 a.m. accident, Helen Barron, of Rt. 3, Box 528, was transported to Florida Hospital-Altamonte where she died one hour later.

According to Casselberry police, Barron was traveling north on S.R. 436 in a 1980 Datsun 510 when she turned into the path of a 1981 Datsun pickup truck driven by Gary Cornelius, 37, of 191 Windsor Court, Sanford.

The truck slammed into Barron's car broadside, police said. Cornelius was treated at Florida Hospital-Altamonte and released.

No charges were filed.

They certainly don't have the authority to give up."

The potentially far-reaching case dates back to Sept. 29, 1980 when a 14-year-old girl (whose identity is being withheld due to her age) was arrested for petty theft.

On Nov. 6 she entered the arbitration program and signed a form agreeing to surrender her right to a speedy trial. Randall emphasized that this was done "without the advice and consent of an attorney."

"How many 14-year-old girls do you know who can understand legal concepts like speedy trial, the right of counsel, or the other Miranda rights extended to adults?" he asked. "I would say very few, if any."

Attorney Says Juvenile Program Usurps Child's Right

The State Attorney apparently thought they had more time than that simply because my client signed a piece of paper supposedly waiving the right to a speedy trial," Randall said.

"That was an erroneous assumption because only the court can grant an extension of the time-limit. You can't get it from a child because there is no provision in the law allowing her to waive the speedy trial rules."

Likewise, "there is nothing that says she can't," countered Assistant State Attorney Linda Gloeckner.

Undertler, Randall added that not only was $6 (6) violated, but so was court rule 8.180 (a) which says that a case must be brought to trial within 90 days of the suspect's arrest.

"That would have been Dec. 29," he said. "Through no fault of my client's, that deadline was not met and discharge is mandated."

While Randall claims he is not attacking the arbitration program — "All I'm saying is that the state can't prosecute my client because it failed to meet its obligation — the question here raises could have far greater implications."

For if an arbitration-bound child can't be asked to waive the speedy trial rule, many criminal cases that should go to court might have to be dismissed for lack of timely prosecution, according to Gloeckner.

More than 90 percent of the kids who entered arbitration last year successfully completed the process. However, about 25 cases were dropped from the program for one reason or another and had to be taken before a judge. In many instances, circumstances — often a lack of cooperation on the part of the child or his parents — did not allow that decision to be made until after the 45- and 90-day limits had passed, Gloeckner said.

"It seems totally inconceivable to me that the legislature, in creating arbitration as an alternative to court, would not allow a child to waive the speedy trial rule," she said. "Because if you don't allow it, you in effect are saying you can't have an arbitration program."

Gloeckner also pointed out that in the rules governing juvenile judicial proceedings, there is a provision allowing an extension of the time-limits under exceptional circumstances.

"Our action constituted excusable neglect in that we thought, and still think, the waiver of rights was valid. And it wasn't our fault the kid flunked out of the arbitration program," she said.

Pakistan President Joins Negotiations To Free 112

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (UPI) — Pakistani President Zia ul-Haq joined negotiations today to free 112 hostages held at an Afghan airport by three heavily armed airline hijackers, including one claiming involvement in a bombing during the pope's visit to Pakistan.

Zia, back in Islamabad after a failed Islamic peace mission to end the Iran-Iraq war, pressed for clarification of the hijacker's demand for freeing of political prisoners in exchange for the release of the hostages, as the drama entered its fifth day.

The hostages were five American residents, including two women, and two other Westerners whose nationality was not known.

The hijackers, led by a Pakistani dissident who claimed credit for a bombing in Karachi during the visit last month of Pope John Paul II, threatened to blow up the Pakistan International Airlines Boeing 720. Hijack leader Mohammad Alamiq demanded the release of 80 political prisoners including his father and brothers, and a plane to fly to Iran.

U.N. To Vote On S. Africa

UNITED NATIONS (UPI) — The U.N. General Assembly prepared for a vote today on sanctions against South Africa despite a U.S. denunciation of the proposed measures.

The resolutions seek to impose "comprehensive" sanctions against South Africa because of what the measures call South Africa's "occupation" of Namibia and "brutal repression" of the Namibian people.

But for the second time in a week the United States Thursday joined Britain, Canada, France and West Germany in seeking to tone down action against the Pretoria regime during the Namibia debate. Monday, the five Western nations voted against South Africa's expulsion from the General Assembly debate on Namibia.

The cause of independence for Namibia will be advanced by the United States and other nations who threatened her with isolation, said British Ambassador Sir Anthony Parson, speaking on behalf of the five Western nations.

Factions Clash In Iran

A clash broke out between moderate supporters of Abolhasan Bani-Sadr and the fundamentalist supporters of Ayatollah Khomeini at Tehran University, leaving a "number of people" injured, Tehran radio said today.

The radio report, monitored in Ankara, Turkey, said that the scuffling erupted when Bani-Sadr spoke at the university Thursday.

The rally was organized, largely by moderates, to mark the anniversary of the death of former Prime Minister Mohammad Mossadegh, who was overthrown by a pro-Shah coup in 1953 — 28 years before Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlavi's own downfall.

Junta Names Election Body

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (UPI) — El Salvador's ruling junta named a three-member council to set up elections for a Parliament next year, but the nation's ambassador to Washington resigned at a time of increased U.S. aid to the junta.

The U.S.-backed junta, saying it was seeking to end "50 years of accumulated political frustration," swore in the "Council of Elections" and charged it with setting up democratic elections to a 56-seat National Assembly next year. The assembly is to prepare a constitution to return the Central American nation to democratic rule.

The creation of the electoral council Thursday came amid fears of a rightist military coup and the sudden resignation of El Salvador's ambassador to the United States, Francisco Aquino Herrera, a moderate.

Foreign Minister Felix Chavez Mena announced Aquino Herrera resigned. No reason was given for his action, but it comes at a time of stepped-up U.S. military and financial aid to El Salvador.

Washington has said it will increase U.S. military advisers in the nation to 84 and raise financial aid to $60 million amid criticism by Democratic legislators of a new Vietnam.

Air Hostage Shot, Killed

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (UPI) — The son of a Pakistani general, one of 112 hostages aboard a jetliner hijacked to the Afghan capital of Kabul, was shot and killed today, the Pakistani defense ministry said.

"The second secretary of the Pakistan Embassy in Tehran, Tariq Rahim, was shot by the hijackers and remained alive until about 6 p.m. at which time he died," the defense ministry said.

The Soviet-controlled Kabul radio earlier reported that the man was wounded.

The Urdu-language broadcast was made as President Mohammad Zia ul-Haq held urgent consultations with top aides on the crisis arising from the hijack of a Pakistan International Airlines domestic flight five days ago.

Group Out To Get Reagan Foes

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The nation's largest conservative group announced today it will spend "what ever it takes" to spotlight members of Congress who vote against President Reagan's economic program.

"We're going to put the clamps on both Democrats and Republicans, although we expect most Republicans are going to vote for the president's program," said Rep. Mickey Edwards, R-Okla., president of the 350,000-member American Conservative Union.

Edwards said the ACU will use television, radio and newspaper commercials, press releases, news conferences and mailings to "let voters know when their representative or senator votes against key parts of the president's package."

"You can assure your constituents will know," Edwards said. "It may take a considerable amount of money. We will spend whatever it takes. If it takes $500,000 we will do that."

Edwards said the ACU does not plan to follow up this campaign by opposing incumbents who vote against the Reagan tax and spending cut package in the 1982 election. But he added, "I have no doubt they will have very strong opposition."

"Many heavily Democratic states and congressional districts voted for the changes advocated by Ronald Reagan and millions of registered Democrats joined in demanding those changes on election day," Edwards said at a news conference.

He said members of Congress who vote against the spending cuts "risk neutralizing and negating the votes that their constituents cast for Ronald Reagan in November."

Edwards said the ACU also will attempt to recruit 1 million Americans who will actively support Reagan's program. He said he hoped the million would "flood the offices of representatives and senators" with letters supporting the economic proposals.

NATION IN BRIEF

'Noting Left In Life,' Says Would-Be Hijacker

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — A man who smuggled a loaded pistol and allegedly a bomb onto a jetliner with 89 people aboard, then threatened to blow it up unless he received a $3 million ransom, apparently was depressed over losing his job, the FBI says.

The 11-hour ordeal ended about 8:30 p.m. PST Thursday night when Victor Malasaukas, 44, of the plush waterfront suburb of Marina del Rey, walked down the rear stairs of the Continental Airlines 727 at Los Angeles International Airport with his hands behind his back.

His last remaining hostage, a plucky stewardess named Barbara Sorenson, had escaped safely a half-hour earlier when she ran out of the plane after spending most of the day calmly going back and forth between the hijacker and the FBI negotiators holed up in the rear of the plane.

"He told us nothing in life was left for him, but I said there was plenty in store for him," said Edgar Best, special agent in charge of the Los Angeles FBI, who led the negotiating team. "There were some indications he may have lost his job the day before."

Stripped Of Citizenship

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Feodor Fedorenko, a former Nazi death camp guard who came to the United States after World War II, has been stripped of his U.S. citizenship. Now the government wants him out of the country.

The Justice Department moved Thursday to deport Fedorenko, 74, who unlawfully concealed that he was a Nazi guard at Treblinka, Poland when he applied for a U.S. visa in 1949.

Fedorenko gained his U.S. citizenship in 1970 after working in a Waterbury, Conn., factory for several years. Charges relating to his wartime service for the Nazis surfaced when he returned to Florida.

Carol, Enquirer In Court

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Carol Burnett, furious about a National Enquirer story implying she was drunk and disorderly, tackles the supermarket scandal tabloid today in a $5 million libel suit closely watched by the Hollywood colony.

Celebrities have long criticized what they call the Enquirer's cheap shots, the so-called "inside story" of their romantic lives, divorces and personal problems detailed in the nation's most widely circulated newspaper.

The motion picture, television and recording industry will be watching closely as Miss Burnett, who has already spent $200 in legal fees, takes on the Enquirer. In addition to clearing her own name and reputation, she said she was pressing the suit on behalf of many celebrities who can't afford the cost of a long and extensive trial. "I can afford it," she said.

FLORIDA IN BRIEF

Search Continues For 2 Who Killed Young Officer

FROSTPROOF (UPI) — Police and Polk County deputies searched into the early morning for three robbers who gunned down a young police officer married less than three weeks.

The two gunmen, who shot officer Henry David McCall as he answered the robbery alarm at the First Federal Savings and Loan Association office Thursday, were seen in Lake Wales, driving away in a car they had apparently parked there, Sheriff Louis Mims said.

The two robbers apparently escaped from a wooded area near Frostproof that was the object of an intensive search, with tracking dogs and aircraft, much of the night, Mims said early today.

McCall, who would have been 22 Tuesday, was shot in the head as he pulled into the parking lot in response to a robbery alarm. He died a short time later at Winter Haven Hospital.

Spenkelnik Autopsy

A coroner confirms that executed killer John Spenkelnik, dug up from a 2-year-old grave this week, was alive when strapped into the Florida electric chair.

Spenkelnik's corpse was exhumed because his aged mother suspected he was murdered before his execution to prevent him from making a final statement implicating Florida officials in drug trafficking.

But coroner Thomas Noguera's autopsy found no evidence that Spenkelnik was physically mistreated or killed before his execution May 25, 1979, saying "marks on the body were consistent with a judicial electrocution."

Airline Unfair To Cubans:

MIAMI (UPI) — A native-born American can fly to Havana for a weekend on the town for as little as $120 but a Cuban exile has to pay at least $743 to go back to visit his relatives, and the Civil Aeronautics Board says that may be unlawful discrimination.

The board has ordered American Airways Charter, a Hialeah-based firm that has exclusive rights through the Cuban government to arrange for exiles' flights to Cuba, to explain the different rates it charges.

In a letter to the firm, the CAB said Charter "may be engaging in unfair 'discriminatory practices' and discriminating against Cuban-born U.S. citizens."

Graham Opposes 65 MPH

TALLAHASSEE (UPI) — Gov. Bob Graham says he believes the 55 mph speed limit saves lives and gas and he opposes a bill moving through the Senate that would let motorists go 65 on superhighways.

Graham stopped short Thursday, however, of saying he would veto a 65 mph bill if passed by the Legislature during the upcoming session, but he reiterated his support of the current maximum speed.

Ex-Madam Tells All: ...They Just Loved It

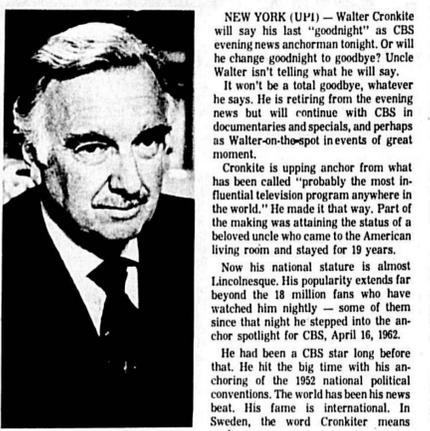

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — A former madam who operated one of the city's most exclusive brothels says she and her girls frequently performed erotic shows for the exclusive Bohemian Club, which lists among its members several prominent politicians — including President Reagan.

Former madam Brandy Baldwin, recently sentenced to a term in a convent, said in an interview published in the San Francisco Examiner that prostitutes in her employ provided entertainment at a cottage near the Bohemian Grove, in the redwoods north of San Francisco, where the club has its annual summer camp-out.

Some of the nation's leading politicians and business leaders are invited to join the summer encampments and Reagan is a member of the club.

The ex-madam was sentenced to spend 90 days of a suspended jail term with the Sisters of the Good Shepherd in San Francisco after her fourth arrest for pimping, pandering and prostitution.

She has since abandoned the flesh trade and is preparing to write a book about her career as a high society madam.

WALTER CRONKITE

Uncle Walter's Last Goodnight Won't Be Permanent Goodbye...

NEW YORK (UPI) — Walter Cronkite will say his last "goodnight" as CBS evening news anchorman tonight. Or will he change goodnight to goodbye? Uncle Walter isn't telling what he will say.

It won't be a total goodbye, whatever he says. He is retiring from the evening news but will continue with CBS in documentaries and specials, and perhaps as Walter-on-the-spot in events of great moment.

Cronkite is upping anchor who has been called "probably the most influential television program anywhere in the world." He made it that way. Part of the making was attaining the status of a beloved uncle who came to the American living room and stayed for 19 years.

Now his national stature is almost inconceivable. His popularity extends far beyond the 18 million fans who have watched him nightly — some of them since that night he stepped into the anchor spotlight for CBS, April 16, 1962.

He had been a CBS star long before that. He hit the big time with his anchoring of the 1952 national political conventions. The world has been his news beat. His fame is international. In Sweden, the word Cronkite means anchorman.

"Like President Lincoln, you have been the people's representative and voice," said a letter after Cronkite announced a year ago he would leave the nightly job in 1981.

Another said: "We were so devastated by your announcement tonight, tears started to flow and I felt as if we were on the verge of losing something which can never be replaced."

Cronkite has outdrawn the other evening news shows for 11 years, and he has been unchallenged as the monarch of American news casting. The rival networks paid him homage and honor on his retirement.

Court Rules On 'Open' Primaries

The U.S. Supreme Court decision in a case stemming from last year's presidential primary in Wisconsin may have a profound effect on the way political parties nominate their national candidates in the future.

The direct effect of the ruling is limited. Ruling in a dispute that arose after the Wisconsin primary, the Supreme Court held that the Democratic National Committee was not obliged to seat delegates from an "open" presidential primary if it didn't want to.

Wisconsin and two other states, Michigan and Montana, permit voters on their primary election day to choose whether they will vote in the Republican or Democratic primaries. Most other states have election laws under which voters must declare a party preference or affiliation prior to a primary election in order to vote for one of the candidates on the party's ballot.

An "open" primary can create situations where the outcome is decided by cross-over voters — Republican voters deciding who wins a Democratic primary race, or vice versa. The Democratic Party went to court in Wisconsin to establish the principle in its party rules that only declared Democrats should participate in choosing delegates to their national convention.

In upholding the Democratic Party's position, the 6-3 majority on the Supreme Court strikes a blow for the supremacy and independence of political parties and their right to run their own affairs. They have that right, says Justice Potter Stewart, under the First Amendment's protection of the right of free political association.

That interpretation provides an opportunity for the leadership of both parties to achieve some reform in the way they nominate their presidential candidates. The proliferation of presidential primaries — there were 37 of them last year — has distorted the nominating process which technically leaves the selection of candidates to national conventions.

Some state primaries involve the selection of convention delegates pledged to one candidate or another. Some are only popularity contests with no binding effect on delegates. The procession of primaries lasting six months drives up campaign costs, and can make or break a candidate's chances before party members nationwide have a chance to register a preference.

The Supreme Court decision permits the states to adopt whatever primary election laws they want. But it also puts the political parties in a powerful position to influence what the states decide to do. The parties will decide what constitutes a duly-chosen delegate to their convention.

This opens the way for both parties to establish more coherence in their nominating process, to bolster their identity in the eyes of the voters, and to recapture some of the power over their own destinies which the fragmented state-by-state primary system has been undermining in recent years.

Around

The Clock

By DIANE PETRYK

Modern historians are worried, I hear. They fear they will be deprived of what has always proved a fertile ground of historical fact: personal correspondence.

There are certain people whom one almost feels inclined to urge to hurry up and die so that their letters can be published. It is chiefly — perhaps only — in letters that one gets the mother-of-pearl shimmer inside the oyster of fact.

But should a historical figure's personal life be subject to such scrutiny?

At the Henry S. Sanford Museum-Library downtown, hundreds of letters between the city's founder and other historical personalities are preserved on microfilm. Henry Shelton Sanford, President Lincoln's first political appointment, kept up an active correspondence with presidents, prominent individuals from politics through the arts, and with members of his family. As a dedicated foreign minister for over 30 years, Sanford had many long separations to bridge via letters. Often these epistles revealed important details about politics, economics and daily life in the mid-1800s.

When Henry is in Paris in 1867, she writes that he should enjoy his invitations. "The only thing I will not permit is your falling in love with anyone or thinking any other woman nicer, cleverer or handsomer. Even in your secret heart, for I would find out sooner or later."

For years, Gertrude's letters to her husband were signed "Wife." But she had a strange nickname for Henry — "Sposo."

Museum curator Mildred Caskey admitted it had puzzled her since she came to the museum in 1974. She said she thought it might have had some private meaning just between the two of them.

But because they lived in Europe so many years, in close proximity to many languages, I thought the term may have come from another language. Checking foreign language dictionaries, it turned out that "Sposo" is the Italian word for bridegroom. Mrs. Caskey had to agree that was probably it.

Perhaps Gertrude thought her husband had a little bit of Italian in him. Anyway, he remained her "bridegroom" all their lives.

"At any rate, all your little love words, even the caresses you give me, perhaps forgotten as soon as given, die away only to find immortal life in my memory..."

When Henry is in Paris in 1867, she writes that he should enjoy his invitations. "The only thing I will not permit is your falling in love with anyone or thinking any other woman nicer, cleverer or handsomer. Even in your secret heart, for I would find out sooner or later."

Museum director Margaret Vitale said it seemed almost an invasion of privacy to be reading her private words to her husband.

One could argue the need for privacy expires at some point in time. And it would be hard to imagine the Sanfords, interested as they were in learning, would object to present generations learning about the past through their lives.

From Mrs. Sanford's letters one finds that things change ("I don't know how to draw the money") and some things never do ("Nothing is as trying as the mails..."). But primarily it is her philosophy that is interesting.

"I don't doubt if your love became as cold as friendship evened, you would be mine, all mine, if you fell I needed you," she wrote to her husband.

"But when there is no great loss or gain at stake, to be always tender, always caressing, is the greatest proof of love, I think.

ROBERT WAGMAN African Image-Building

WASHINGTON (NEA) — The government of South Africa will spend millions of dollars over the next year in an attempt to improve its image in the United States.

The Washington law firm of Baskin and Sears, one of whose senior partners is former Reagan aide John Sears, has contracted to "represent and advise" the South African government and to promote its "political, economic and cultural interests in the United States" for an annual fee of $500,000 plus expenses.

In compliance with federal law, the firm has registered with the Justice Department as a representative of South Africa.

Sears was Reagan's campaign manager in 1976 and early in 1980. He was removed from that position on the day of the New Hampshire primary after having repeatedly ruffled the feathers of some long-time Reaganites.

The more visible portion of the South African campaign is a series of full-page advertisements that will begin to appear on the financial pages of major U.S. newspapers in the next few weeks.

Many of the ads will emphasize the great value that South Africa's wealth of minerals and raw materials could have to the United States. One of them will play up South Africa's potential as a stabilizing anti-communist force in its region of the world.

As we previously reported, the South Africans are eager to improve relations between their country and the United States now that Reagan is in the White House. They hope that the new president will be influenced in that regard by the pro-South Africa sentiments of many of his conservative supporters.

Many in the South African government think that they key to better relations is their advanced synthetic-fuels technology. Their country — which is virtually without crude oil but rich in coal — has developed perhaps the only commercially proven method of refining oil out of coal. This technology could be an invaluable export.

The synfuels issue will undoubtedly give Sears his first test as South Africa's new lobbyist.

Two big synfuels projects using the South African technology were approved late in the Carter administration. They are the $2 billion Great Plains Gasification Project in Beulah, N.D., and a similar project planned for the Crow Indian reservation in Montana. Both are in danger of falling to Reagan's budget-cutting ax.

BUSINESS WORLD No More Free Rides

By MARY TOBIN UPI Business Writer

NEW YORK (UPI) — The "free ride" in housing is over with the advent of variable rate mortgages, but the enormous constituency of 86 million homeowners will prevent "a crash that looks like a crash in housing," says Adam Smith.

George J.W. Goodman, who has adopted the non de plumbe of the 18th Century economist whose views he espouses, said "it was wonderful while it lasted. With the long-term fixed-rate mortgage there was no downside risk in a single family house."

In his latest book, "Paper Money" (Summit Books), Smith traces the boom that turned a house from a place to live into a "national mania" and pushed the median price of a house toward the $100,000 level.

Smith's book concentrates on the fantastic prices of housing in California, Florida, parts of the East Coast and other selected areas, but he said in an interview that the boom is "spotty."

"Money congregates in the manic areas," he said. "In most parts of the country it still is possible to buy a good house for $20,000 or $30,000."

But housing has become a national preoccupation — "home ownership is more widespread than churchgoing" — and it's a fairly recent phenomenon that was fueled by government subsidies of housing.

"The government wants you to buy a house," Smith said. "It will give you a quadruple subsidy if you buy a house."

If you buy a house, you can deduct interest on the mortgage; you can deduct the real estate taxes you pay; if you sell the house at a profit and buy another house you don't have to pay a tax on the profit.

"Most important, however, is that until the advent of variable rate mortgages there was no downside risk in buying a single-family house," he said.

But with the variable rate mortgage, the homeowner will no longer get a "free ride," such as a 30-year 7 or 8 percent mortgage with double-digit inflation.

Smith said, however, that the 86 million houses in the country, 56 million of them owned by the people who live in them — "a very powerful political force" — will prevent a "crash that looks like a crash in housing."

"I suppose it could happen," he said, but "Any government that was around when the crash came would not be there very much longer. Certainly you can have a crash in housing; it is thinkable but unthinkable, like nuclear war."

Smith's book dwells at length on the fact that home buyers were subsidized by the small saver. "The money for those 7 and 8 percent mortgage loans came largely from passbook savers. Christmas Clubs, Chamukah Clubs, children saving for ice skates and stereos — there is $1.176 trillion still outstanding in passbook savings, and those lenders have sponsored the California house millionaires and Chicago condo buyers and all the other house buyers," he said.

When the small saver's passbook becomes a symbol of foolishness, that is unhealthy, Smith told UPI.

ROBERT WALTERS Business Ills: Who's To Blame?

WASHINGTON (NEA) — Leaders of the business community not government bureaucrats, slothful workers or other convenient scapegoats — must accept much of the responsibility for this country's drastic productivity declines in recent years.

That heretical viewpoint was advanced at the recent mid-winter meeting here of the National Governors' Association in a pair of little-noticed speeches delivered by senior executives of two of the nation's most progressive companies.

"For too long now, we've been making big government the big excuse for our business failures," said David L. Kearns, president and chief operating officer of the Xerox Corp. "American businessmen are hiding behind government regulations."

"Some of the complaints about federal rules and restrictions undoubtedly are valid, added Kearns, "but...I don't think we should keep using them to get ourselves off the hook."

William C. Norris, board chairman of the Control Data Corp., complained that the business community's current call for "reindustrializing America" was little more than "a catchy phrase for beefing up the status quo."

"All of the (reindustrialization) proposals I've seen are essentially a rehash of assorted actions such as cutting taxes, changing depreciation schedules and reducing government regulations," said Norris.

"These and similar actions have a role, but overall they don't address the root causes of our deterioration," he added. "We have drifted into a regressive culture and we must break out of it."

Norris offered this highly critical view of a "timid and reactionary" business community:

"Except for those hardy souls who start up and operate small businesses and a few large, progressive companies, there is a lack of new product and service innovations that yield increases in productivity, permit a higher standard of living, subdue inflation and create new jobs. Many big corporations, with their resources and well-established markets, are the most part avoiding risks and are primarily increasing profits by emphasizing improvements in existing products."

Kearns' analysis was even harsher: "The United States is strewn with sad evidence of managerial failure. Whole industries — automobiles, steel, consumer electronics, and others have fallen victim to more aggressive, more efficient and better managed overseas competitors..."

"American businessmen have grown up with a short-sighted mentality tied to the quarterly earnings report instead of the future. Risk — the very cornerstone of our capitalistic system — has become too risky."

Dairymen Maintain Clout In Congress

WASHINGTON — It's safe to say most consumers don't understand exactly how the government's price-support system for the dairy industry works. All they know is that the price of milk, butter and cheese keeps going up and up at the supermarkets.

But the system is really quite simple: Congress authorizes twice-a-year increases in dairy prices. The dairy industry collects the increase no matter how much it produces or how little its production costs have risen. Then the industry's political action committees make fat campaign contributions to members of Congress who control dairy price-support legislation.

It's this usual back-scratching that will make the Reagan administration's hopes of cutting back on dairy subsidies one of the toughest battles it faces this year. The next upward "adjustment" of dairy prices is due in April, and unless Congress agrees to stop the increase, the price of milk will go up 8 cents a gallon, but 10 cents a pound and cheese 3 cents a pound.

The amount of money involved is substantial. An April subsidy slash will save the government about $138 million this year alone. Overall, the annual subsidies will have risen from $1.3 billion in 1979 to an estimated

$2 billion this year if the automatic increases continue to over with the estimated $1.5 billion a year in higher prices paid by consumers or the estimated $2 billion it will cost the government to store the huge surpluses the dairy industry has produced. The Commodity Credit Corporation will buy up and store an estimated 600 million pounds of dry milk this year, along with 275 million pounds of butter and 225 million pounds of cheese.

With money like that pouring into its coffers, the dairy industry can afford to spread some of it around among its friends and protectors on Capitol Hill. The industry's three biggest associations have contributed some $3.1 million to congressional campaigns between 1977 and 1980.

And don't think the dairymen don't know where their campaign contributions will do the most good. My associate Tony Capaccio checked the figures for the 1979-80 campaign period from the Associated Milk Producers PAC ($739,289), the Dairymen's Inc. PAC ($211,908) and the Mid-America Dairymen Inc. PAC ($270,650) against the roster of Senate and House Agriculture Committee members.

Senate committee members got a total of $54,200 from these groups; Robert Dole, R-Kan., led the list with $13,000, closely followed by Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., at $12,000, and Mark Andrews, R-N.D., at $10,000.

The dairy industry's Big Three bulleted members of the House committee with a total of $213,310 in 1979-80. Here are the top recipients: Floyd Fithian, D-Ind., $15,000; Tom Harkin, D-Iowa, $12,500; Tom Foley, D-Wash., $12,000; Ed Jones, D-Tenn., $9,500; Jim Jeffords, R-Vt., $9,700, and Arlene Stangeland, R-Minn., $8,000.

Harkin, the $12,500 man, is chairman of the key Agriculture subcommittee that will handle the administration's proposal to skip the April increase. He has already expressed doubt that his subcommittee will be able to act on the measure before the April 1 deadline.

Footnote: The dairy industry's clout was particularly strong last year. The April support increase was nominated for oblivion by Jimmy Carter's budget cutters, but survived to be announced just before the Wisconsin primary. And when Carter's domestic staff chief Stuart Eizenstat tried to tinker with the subsidy program, he ran into an influential Minnesota — Vice President Walter Mondale.

One down. Distasteful. Seminole Community College, resembling Beaver chewing castor oil, digested Florida College 90-75 Thursday night before 2800 fans at Thurmond Activity Center on the campus of Stetson University in DeLand.

In the evening's last game, Anthony Byrd's dramatic 28-foot jumper lifted Brevard past Pensacola 86-84 at the buzzer. The Titans, who were paced by Byrd's 23 points, play Indian River at 9 tonight. Reggie Meadows, a 6-foot-8 center, had a game-high 24 points for the Pirates.

turned the ball over six times on travelling calls or bad passes. "I was nervous," admitted the former Seminole All-Star. "I got a couple shots blocked and I started rushing my shot after that." The usually deadeye 58 per cent shooter hit just nine-of-21 floor shots.

Cyclones Whirl Two More, Raiders Fall

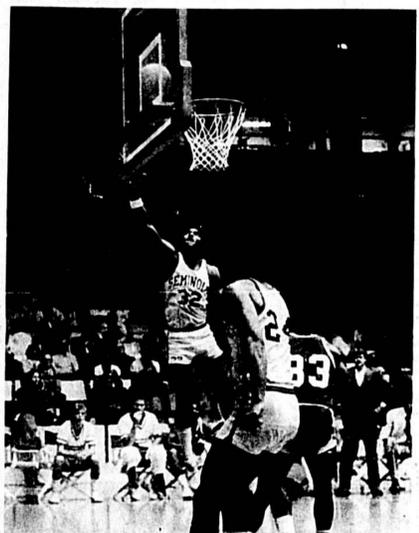

Iowa State continued to run through southern opposition Thursday, but Seminole Community College dropped another in area baseball action. The Cyclones of Coach Larry Corrigan, pushed across two ninth-inning runs with two out to nip Central Florida 5-4. Earlier in the day, ISU whipped Heidelberg 6-3. The Cyclones are 7-0 for the year and wrap up their Wes Rinker baseball week competition today at 1 against Heidelberg at the Stadium.

Bulk May Remedy Mild Diverticulosis

DEAR DR. LAMB—My husband had X-rays taken after a barium enema and he was told he has diverticulosis. The doctor said it was a mild case and he should have bran in his diet. I have heard that people with diverticulosis should not have raw fruits or vegetables and should avoid highly seasoned foods. We were wondering if there is a special diet one should follow. My husband is 67 and in good health. In fact, he jogs about five miles every day. DEAR READER—I gather from your letter that your husband has no symptoms and the diverticulosis was found as a result of X-rays, which may have been part of a regular medical checkup. You may be surprised to know those little pockets of the colon are quite common. Estimates run as high as 70 percent in older people and they are not rare in younger people. They often occur in people who have no symptoms at all and have no evidence of abnormal bowel function. In other instances the symptoms people complain about are from an associated spastic colon. Of course, you can have symptoms from diverticula if one becomes inflamed. That can cause symptoms similar to acute appendicitis but it is usually on the left side. And they can perforate or bleed.

ACS Director Explains Volunteers' Vital Role

The Seminole County Unit of the American Cancer Society recently heard Marjorie Duchano, Director of Patient Education at Orlando Regional Medical Center, speak on the importance and privilege of being an ACS volunteer. Pointing out that volunteers are the key, Mrs. Duchano described her role as helping nurses care for the cancer patient with emphasis on "caring."

There is a group of amateur radio operators and their wives known as the Turkey Group...

There is a group of amateur radio operators and their wives known as the Turkey Group, who meet every Saturday morning at 8 a.m. for breakfast at Denny's just two blocks East of Interstate Highway 4 on state route 436. Ed Hall, the Administrator, "Croc" N4BHL invites no, he dares you to join the group—including many who have talked with on the radio. He says he knows that once you get acquainted, you will have so much fun you will never miss another Saturday morning. Ed explained that the group was started about three and one half years ago when a few couples wanted to meet each other for a morning breakfast. They enjoyed getting together "in person" so much, they set up another breakfast meeting the following week, and agreed to call themselves the "Turkey Group," and to meet every Saturday morning. The group has grown beyond all expectations, and the first annual banquet was held this past year one week before Thanksgiving. Held on very short notice, almost 100 "Turkeys" attended and a great time was had by all, with the unanimous agreement that an annual banquet would be held each year to commemorate this great and proud bird.

When residents of the Highland Hills subdivision in Longwood learned that the Longwood Fire Department did not budget enough money to complete all the necessary furnishing for the new fire house, members of the Highland Hill Homeowners Association decided to try to raise enough money to purchase a dining table and chairs so that the firemen would have a decent place to sit and eat their meals. They held a car wash in the parking lot of Big A Auto Parts in Longwood last Saturday with a donation of $1.50 per car. According to John Crystal Jr., the wet and weary washers attained their goal after a full day of washing cars. The members of the Homeowners Association appreciate the extra efforts made by the members of the fire department for the welfare of the community, and felt they could make a little extra effort to show their appreciation.

Dear Abby

DEAR ABBY: I used to get a manicure every two weeks. My manicurist charges $12, which is all profit because she works out of her home and is self-employed. Considering this, I never tipped her. However, I always gave her a gift on special occasions. Last Christmas I gave her a pair of expensive costume earrings. The next time I went for my manicure she showed me the gifts all her other clients had given her, then she proceeded to return my earrings, saying, "Sorry, I wear only real gold." Abby, I thought this was so rude I never went back to her. Later her neighbor told me that she returned my gift because I had never tipped her. What do you think of her behavior in view of her self-employed status? BETTY E. DEAR BETTY: Her behavior was gross, and her profit was net. DEAR ABBY: After 19 years of marriage, my husband decided he wanted a night out with the boys. I wrote to you, and you said it was good for a man to have a little diversion from his work and everyday routine, so I accepted your answer and have been trying to live with it. The problem is that my husband has been coming home at 4 a.m. and 5 a.m. from his "nights out." By the time he gets home I am not only upset, I am worried sick, wondering what has happened to him. Do you think he is being fair to me? He says he is not hurting me, and I should go to sleep and not worry about him, but I can't go

Use Good Judgement When Applying Water

As home gardeners, we should make it a point to use only as much water in the garden as we need, and never allow a wasteful surplus to run. Water is becoming a precious resource for Floridians and the more water wasted today, the greater the chances of water restrictions being placed on homeowners in the future. As we begin thinking and preparing for the spring vegetable garden, we also need to think about ways to cut back on the amount of water we use in the garden, and find ways of growing vegetables with as little water as possible. One way to save water is to plant fast growing, early maturing vegetables. The sooner a plant matures, the less water it will need. Another tip is to plant the garden during periods of adequate rainfall. For home gardeners in our area, this leaves a fairly wide choice of planting dates. (For a complete list of planting dates and instructions, ask for Circular 104, entitled, "Vegetable Gardening Guide," available at our office.) Try to improve the water-holding capacity of your soil. The sandy soils common throughout most of Florida just don't hold water very well. Therefore, applying generous amounts of organic materials, such as compost, manures, and peat will help your soil hold water better. Another way to save water is to use a watering method that applies water just in the root zone, where it's needed. Overhead sprinkling may be time saving for you, but it wastes a lot of water by wetting areas between rows and by losing water to the wind. Of course, this is the only practical means for a lot of us to supply water to our gardens, but if you can, try to use drip or trickle irrigation. Drip irrigation produces vegetables just as well as overhead sprinkling does, but with eighty percent less water. Another tip is to avoid simply overwatering your garden. Water thoroughly once or twice a week. Young plants don't need as much water as older plants do. And, there's a limit to how much water plants can use. Any more than they need runs off and is wasted or stays around to cause root rot problems. Another way to save water is to keep weeds out of the garden. Weeds use water for their own growth and transpire large amounts of water to the air. I certainly know that weeding isn't the most pleasant aspect of vegetable gardening, but you'll be surprised how much less water the garden will need if weeds aren't allowed to grow. A mulch can be a big help in conserving soil moisture. Use hay, straw, leaves, or plastic. Finally, always use good judgment when running water. The water you waste today, may become the water you wish you had tomorrow.

New Zoo For Kids: Family Oriented, It's A Place To Learn...

By CINDY MOOY
Herald Staff Writer

The children's zoo — "It's where learning begins," said Bill Thacker, education curator at the Central Florida Zoological Park in Sanford.

Since the grand opening of the park's new petting zoo Jan. 11, the youngest of zoo visitors (as well as the oldest) can reach out and touch a part of the world they may have only seen in pictures or on television.

"A lot of information is gained by a child without a word being spoken, through feelings and impressions," Thacker said.

Though the gates of a high wood fence, children enter an area like the 'Old MacDonald's Farm' they sing about. They are likely to be greeted by Molly, a large brown goose, who squawks loudly at visitors and perhaps thinks she's a tour guide.

A large barn-like structure houses domesticated goats and sheep for children to pet and feed, along with exhibits of fish, snakes and birds. Outside, in the barnyard, are exhibits of rabbits and birds.

Additional exhibits are planned, including more birds, a pond for water fowl and a few non-petting type animals, said Ed Posey, Zoo curator. Parrots caged inside the barn are nesting now, Posey said, and could soon provide other additions.

To add to the learning experience for small children, docents or volunteer zoo teachers, will soon be available on weekends inside the children's zoo to answer questions, handle animals and assist with animal-child contact.

What questions do small children ask?

"Believe it or not, today's child will ask, 'What is it? What is that?' pointing at a goat," Thacker said. "The second question is 'What does it eat?'"

"Another question they ask is, 'How did you catch that.' They have visions of us going out into the jungle and trapping the animals."

Volunteer teachers take a 35-hour training course, range in age from 16 to 70, include men and women and come for all walks of life. Their common ground, said Thacker, is a concern for animals and the environment.

The docents (there are currently six) usually give tours of the entire zoo on weekdays to school groups. About 3,000 school children have been on these "learning safaris" since the start of the school year.

"A trip to the zoo is changed into a learning experience," Thacker said. "It's a living classroom. Kids go home with knowledge rather than popcorn and a plastic toy."

The new petting zoo was created to attract people to the zoo and provide a special area for small children in keeping with the family-oriented concept of the zoo, Posey said. The area replaces the former, entirely outdoor, children's zoo, which will be dismantled and re-landscaped.

Tom and Donna Eggers, of Maitland, introduce their 3 1/2-year-old daughter Lori to Molly, a goose at the new area for children at the Central Florida Zoo. Molly sometimes acts as 'tour guide' for the zoo's young visitors.

Alda Directs Only A Few

DEAR DICK: I am a sixth grade student at Anthell Middle School. I am doing a project and I need your help. Is Alan Alda the director of all the "M-A-S-H" episodes? Why do Frank Burns (Larry Linville) and Charles Winchester (David Ogden Stiers) keep switching places as one of the "M-A-S-H" doctors? PAM HART, West Trenton, N.J.

Let's take your second question first, because I imagine other readers are confused. What you don't realize is that you are watching (obviously) some "M-A-S-H" repeats, which are shown from various years. Linville, as Burns, was on the show for the first five seasons, then Stiers, as

Ask Dick Kleiner

Winchester, came in when Linville left. Your first question: No, Alda only directs a few episodes each season.

DEAR DICK: My husband and I recently saw the movie, "Moon runners," on TV, with James Mitchum. Naturally, our talk turned to "Thunder Road," starring Robert Mitchum. I told my husband that James was also in "Thunder Road," playing Robert's younger brother or teen-age son. My husband agreed that James is Robert's son, but said that "Thunder Road" was made about '57 and Robert wasn't old enough at that time to have had a teen-age son. Who is correct? How old are they? LAUREL KIMES, Tucson, Ariz.

James Mitchum was born in 1938 and made his debut in "Thunder Road," which was released in 1958. So he easily could have played a teen-ager at that time. Robert M. was born in 1917.

DEAR DICK: Please tell me who the young boy was in "Lost In Space." Some friends of mine say it was Ron Howard. STEVEN BOHANNAN, Las Vegas, Nev. Boo to your friends. It was Billy Mumy.

DEAR DICK: For many years I have been a fan of Red Skelton. I know of (and agree with) your policy of not giving out the addresses of stars. Could you please tell me how I could get a letter to him. DAVID MOON, East Gadsden, Ala.

I appreciate your agreeing with me, but perhaps I should reiterate that policy again. I won't give out addresses of stars, even if I know those addresses, because who knows what sort of kook might read it and do something kooky? I will give you all a hint (and that goes for you, David, in your quest for Red's address): There is a book called "How to Reach Anyone Who's Anyone," and you will be amazed at what you can find in it.

DEAR DICK: In February 1979, I was in Hawaii on vacation. At the Kona Surf Hotel, on the island of Hawaii, they were making a movie called "The Day the World Ended," with Paul Newman, William Holden, Jacqueline Bisset, Ernest Borgnine and Red Buttons. A few months ago, I saw a large ad for the movie, but I haven't heard a word about it since. GWEN LEFTON, Cleveland Heights, Ohio.

I don't know what happened in Cleveland, but in Los Angeles and most cities, that film came and went quicker than a wink on a guy with the fastest eyes in the West. It was a disaster movie that was a disaster.

DEAR DICK: We have a bet going and maybe you can help. In "Come Back Little Sheba," I say Burt Lancaster played Shelley Winters' husband. My husband says it was Ernest Borgnine. I say he was Shirley Booth's husband in another movie from that story. Will you tell us who's right? CARRIE GREENE, Rock Hill, S.C.

The only movie made from the William Inge play was the '52 version, which had Shirley Booth and Burt Lancaster as the couple. So you have the right husband, but that's about all.

How To 'Sell' Clean Oceans

ements, or PSAs, those pleas for that TV stations squeeze onto the ms and paid commercials, rarely s against air pollution and for blood supplies.

"We should all care about our oceans, no matter where we live," he said in accepting the assignment, "because we all share the gifts of the sea around us. They are a priceless resource that we must protect."

In the Wildlife Week TV spots—which will be distributed, not to networks, but to some 600 local TV stations around the country—Cronkite will share the small screen with a scene-stealing sea otter, a sometimes comic marine mammal that appears on the 1981 Wildlife Week posters.

Cronkite refused to have his script printed on cue cards for the filming of his on-camera segments of the spots. "If I don't know this by heart, then I shouldn't be here," he explained.

The veteran TV newsman narrated the PSAs in near-freezing temperature on a day when a 20 to 25 mile an hour wind was lashing Edgartown, on Martha's Vineyard, where he has a summer vacation home. When a gust of icy wind delayed the shooting, he issued a mock warning to the camera crew: "If we don't finish this soon, it's going to turn out to be a commercial for pneumonia."

As it turned out Cronkite didn't get pneumonia, though his voice was husky on the CBS Evening News for several nights after that finger-numbing filming. What the spots will "sell," instead of pneumonia, is a greater public understanding of the fact that polluted oceans threaten not only sea otters, whales and shrimp, but people, too.

Britons' New Hea

British actor Anthony Andrews made his debut at the age of 6. He undertook the role of the famous White Rabbit at the annual show of his dancing school.

He was, however, a mite over-anxious. "I kept appearing at all the wrong times," says the blond, brown-eyed Andrews. "Every time it even looked like my cue, I'd be right out there on stage."

"But when my cue finally came, I was nowhere to be found. Everyone was scuttling around like mad, screaming and yelling and trying to find me. Eventually the White Rabbit appeared, having to say: 'I'm late, I'm late for a very important date...'"

"Which, of course," Andrews says, smiling, "promptly made me burst into tears."

It was not the last time Andrews was to be embarrassed by a performance, but in light of his current success, the 33-year-old actor can now chuckle at memories of his "professional" mishaps.

For the boy who once cried as the White Rabbit is now billed as the star opposite Sir Lawrence Olivier in "Brideshead Revisited," Granada TV's biggest, most expensive production ever, which will air this fall. He is dubbed "Britain's newest heartthrob" because of his overwhelming success there as the star of the series "Danger UXB," now airing on PBS.

His impressive credits would win respect in any country; starring roles in John Hawkesworth's "Upstairs-Downstairs" and the BBC's "The Pallisers"; British and American television appearances; and theater, where he's played everything from a sulky schoolboy in a play that starred Sir John Gielgud, to Mercutio in Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet."

Andrews, of course, did not jump immediately from the White Rabbit to Mercutio. In between there was school — which he did not do well in — and a try at various occupations, from catering to farming to selling newspaper advertising.

When he walked into the Chichester Theater one day to try to sell ad space, he became transfixed. "I found myself saying, 'Can I work here?'" They said yes, and gave him a job — sweeping the stage.

Eventually, of course, that led to walk-on parts and understudy roles and to the long-running part with

Who Am I?

How did I learn to do what I do? My father, Domingo, taught me the basics of my sport. I began when I was eight. At age 12, I was the New Mexico state champion. Now I'm a sportscaster's wife. But I can earn $200,000 a year.

Need A Funeral Escort In Altamonte? It'll Cost You

By TOM GIORDANO
 And CINDY MOOY

The Altamonte Springs Police Department is the only law enforcement agency in Seminole County charging for funeral escort service.

Those charged for about five years, are passed on to the deceased's family as part of the total funeral costs, spokesmen at both funeral homes acknowledge.

And Jeff Etzberger, city manager at Altamonte Springs for about four months, said he doesn't know if the city commission authorized the police department to levy such fees. The charges for funeral escort service went into effect in 1976 when former Mayor Norman Floyd Sr. was in office and he approved them, according to Lt. Richard Laese, bureau commander.

Etzberger said he did not know about the practice until he was asked about it Friday by an Evening Herald reporter.

Neither Laese nor Etzberger know for certain if the matter ever went before the city commission, they said.

A check by the Herald of the police departments in Seminole County's six other cities, as well as the county sheriff's department, disclosed none of them charge for funeral escort service.

And, in those other cities where funeral escort service is extended, those duties are usually performed by on-duty personnel. The Altamonte Springs Police Department, however, uses off-duty policemen who keep most of the money, according to Laese.

The charge for the escort service is $15 per man, or $20 per man, depending upon which of the two funeral homes in Altamonte Springs is paying, according to Laese.

Laese explained both funeral homes had been paying $15 per man, but that one of them raised the fee recently to "keep up with inflation."

Although the off-duty officers who get paid for the escort service get the money direct, about 10 percent goes into the department's police association account, according to Patrolman First Class Bob Fedi, in charge of traffic.

Average time for a funeral escort is 10 to 15 minutes and requires, generally, a minimum of two officers, but that can increase depending upon the size of the procession. Prime purpose of funeral escorts, according to police in the county, is traffic control.

The Altamonte department provides such service about 50 times a year, and using Fedi's estimate, the funeral homes are paying the off-duty officers between $1,500 and $2,000 a year.

None of that money, except for the 10 percent estimate which goes into the police association fund, goes to the city. Although, according to Laese and Fedi, the off-duty officers use the department's motorcycles and fuel.

Fedi said, however, Altamonte does not charge funeral homes outside the city when escort service is needed for a procession coming through from another city.

Where did Altamonte police come up with the idea of charging for funeral escort service?

"Partly from the Orlando Police Department and partly from the funeral directors themselves," Laese points out.

He explained his department sent its motorcycle officers through the Orlando Police Department.

A typical funeral scene with motorcycle officers on stand-by after the escort service they provide. Altamonte Springs Police Department is the only law enforcement agency in the county which charges for that service.

Reagan Makes Hiring Freeze Stick

President Reagan said Friday he is making permanent the temporary federal hiring freeze that he imposed just hours after taking office on Jan. 20. Said Reagan, "it is time to put Washington on a diet."

The president said "new permanent ceiling" will reduce federal employment by 37,000 jobs by Sept. 30, 1982, at a saving of $1.3 billion.

Administration sources said later that the reduction means an undisclosed number of workers now on the federal payroll will lose their jobs, although attrition will account for most of the cutbacks.

In his second press conference since taking office, Reagan said there is no parallel between El Salvador and Vietnam because this "situation is in our front yard, a neighboring country." The president, who has already dispatched military advisors to the nation, said "we do not force the need to send in American troops." Concerning budget cuts, the president said he senses mounting support in Congress for his proposed budget and tax cuts. He hinted he might use his presidential veto if Congress does not approve the program, but that he is optimistic he "won't have to face confrontation."

Reagan said his proposed spending cuts and tax reductions would remedy the economy, but stressed the program is not an "instant cure." Said Reagan, "If the program is passed, we should begin to see the effects toward the end of the '82 year."

He said he has "no regrets" about his decision to lift oil controls in January and said OPEC price hikes are the main reason cost of gasoline at the pump has risen a few pennies. He said decontrol already has resulted in more exploration and development of oil, and "that is the road to lower prices."

The president said he is undecided on whether to curb Japanese imports in an effort to help U.S. automakers. He said his special task force on the problem would meet next week.

The grain embargo against the Soviet Union, Reagan said, is hurting the American farmer, but he said he is not ready to follow through on his campaign pledge to end the embargo because "the international situation has changed."

The president reiterated his opposition to abortion, but said he saw no need for a constitutional amendment barring it. What is necessary, he said, is "a determination to the best of our ability of when life begins."

Reagan also said his trip to Canada next week is a step toward his goal of building stronger U.S. ties with Canada and Mexico. On the troublesome question of overlapping Canadian and U.S. fishing rights, he said, "I don't want to see them in diplomatic limbo and I want to see a settlement of this whole issue."

Warranty Expired

NEW YORK (UPI) — A judge says a woman whose breast was disfigured by a leaky silicone implant cannot collect $2.5 million in damages from Dow Corning Corp. because the warranty on the device has expired.

Judge Jack Weinstein ruled Friday in U.S. District Court in Brooklyn Joy Klein, 47, of Manhattan was not entitled to any money from the Michigan based company that made the implant because the device leaked four years after it was implanted and the warranty had expired.

Papers filed with the court showed Miss Klein had the implant done in 1965 for cosmetic purposes.

In April 1978, because of a leak of the implant, she suffered discoloration of her breast followed by severe disfigurement and had to have the implant surgically removed.

Miss Klein's attorney, Lawrence Goldirsch, said he will appeal the ruling.

Pair Arrested For 8-Year-Old's Murder

The former girlfriend of 8-year-old Tshwanda Rene Leacock's father and the woman's ex-husband are in the Orange County Jail today, charged with first-degree murder in the child's death. The girl was kidnapped while on her way home from school Feb. 20.

Katherine Daniels Waters, 29, and her ex-husband, Alfred Daniels, 48, were arrested by the Orange County Sheriff's Department late Friday evening and are being held in the Orange County Jail without bond.

Ms. Waters, former girl friend of the Leacock girl's father, Willie Miller, is charged with kidnapping and first-degree murder. Daniels is also charged with first degree murder.

The girl disappeared on her 8th birthday from Orlando's Rock Lake Elementary School and her body was found Feb. 23 in the parking lot of an Orlo Vista Park.

She died of a gunshot wound to the upper torso.

Witnesses saw the Leacock girl entering a blue and white car with another girl, who was identified as Ms. Waters' daughter, in front of the school on Feb. 20. The witnesses said the pair left to go to a birthday party for the Leacock girl. Ms. Waters' 1976 blue and white Oldsmobile was later seized by sheriff's deputies and sent to the Sanford Crime Lab for analysis after investigators found pine needles, bloodstains and what appeared to be black hair in the car's trunk.

Pine needles were found in the girls' hair and a bloodstain was on her face when the body was found. Blood in the car matched the girl's blood type, investigators said.

The girl's mother, Annie Leacock, told sheriff's deputies that Ms. Waters and she argued on Feb. 7 but two days later Ms. Waters returned to the Leacock home and apologized for the incident, asking at the same time about plans for the girl's birthday.

Ms. Waters, a bus driver for the Orange County School system, did not report for work on the day the girl disappeared returning to work on the afternoon of the day the body was discovered.

Ms. Waters was first placed on a paid leave of absence from her job and was later fired, according to a school spokesman.

A juvenile arbitration hearing in Sanford, for youthful first offenders charged with minor crimes, an alternative to court.

Juvenile Arbitration Program Helps Kids Avoid Court System

(Editor's note: The war on juvenile crime is like no other: a war without front lines, elusive yet every-present. What follows is the story of Seminole County's Juvenile Arbitration Program, an isolated outpost in that continuing struggle.)

By BRITT SMITH
 Herald Staff Writer

It was obvious the kids didn't belong in jail. Basically, all they were guilty of was some roughhousing that got awkwardly out of hand. They knew it. The four of them — three boys and a girl, ages 13 and 14 — sat making faces and giggling as the hearing got underway.

Unfortunately for them, the man who held their fates in his hands wasn't amused.

"We're not here for that," he snapped. "This is serious stuff. You're all charged with battery, a crime, a first degree misdemeanor which, if you were being treated as adults, could get you one year in jail or a $1,000 fine. Anybody here have a year or $1,000 to spare?"

He looked around the table. No one spoke. Smiles vanished. Eyes looked away. The children's parents sat grim-faced against the wall. It wasn't funny anymore.

The 12-year-old victim of the kids' "prank" had never seen the humor in it. After all, what's so funny about having three bigger boys hold you down and a girl try to take your pants off? When you're only 12, that can be more than a little embarrassing.

Although this was a judicial proceeding, the scene and format would baffle courtroom buffs. There was no jury or casual observers at the confidential hearing. There was no black robe or gavel to maintain tradition. The fact is, it was all very Untraditional. There wasn't even a judge. Non-lawyer Ed Schuckman was in charge. He is called an arbitrator.

Something of an umpire in these legal disputes, Schuckman begins as he always does by stating his case simply: "I'm here to find out exactly what happened and then decide what to do about these charges. Now, who wants to go first?"

Silence. Kids and parents squirm. No one so much as coughs. The arbitrator's voice goes frigid, his eyes positively glacial. "O.K., you can talk here or we go to court. Take your pick." Choose arbitration and your Fifth Amendment right to remain silent goes out the window; along with right to an attorney, a speedy trial, and trial by jury.

Tongues quickly loosen. Stories vary. It's difficult to determine exactly where the horseplay ended and criminality, if indeed there was any, began. In the end, the charges are dropped and the youngsters get off with a warning. But, Schuckman adds grimly, "if you get in trouble again, this whole affair will be brought up and it will go hard on you."

Everyone seems satisfied. No one got punished, and the 12-year-old victim was assured of not getting picked on anymore. But one couldn't shake the feeling that he had just lost four friends.

This particular hearing ended well. Some don't. Hearings have been known to degenerate into shouting matches and name calling. Participants have gotten up and stalked out. When this happens, there's only one recourse: "They get to tell it all to the judge," says Gayle Hair, director of the county's two-year-old arbitration program. "But that doesn't happen often."

For example, of the 366 cases heard in Seminole County last year, only 25 could not be resolved through arbitration and wound up in court.

And of the roughly 1,000 cases handled by Hair's office since the program began in Oct. 1978, there have been only six complaints — either the kid, his parents, or the victim thought they got the short end of the arbitration stick. In five of those cases, the arbitrator's decision was upheld. A rehearing was granted in the sixth and a mutually agreeable solution arrived at.

What are some of the offenses of which these kiddie criminals have been accused? Last year, nearly half involved

Battalion Comrades Gather In Sanford

By CINDY MOOY

Memories of World War II are being recalled this weekend in Sanford as members of the 805th Aviation Engineer Battalion meet for their annual reunion.

The comrades gathered this morning near the flag pole at the Lake Monroe Holiday Inn for a ceremony in tribute to their departed brothers. They were welcomed by Sanford Mayor Lee Moore, followed by a flag raising and 21-gun salute.

Tonight at 7, a dinner preceded by a business meeting and election of officers. The 805th Battalion, established several months before the start of World War II, was assigned to build, maintain, defend, and camouflage military air fields.

At the war's start, the battalion was stationed in Panama and was placed on immediate alert to defend the canal against possible assault and sabotage. When at full strength, the battalion consisted of about 800 men. Small squads of men from the 805th were dispersed to many locations throughout South and Central America, to establish airfields or to improve existing ones. In 1942, a detail was enroute to Guatemala when its ship was sunk by a German submarine.

In April 1943, the 805th Engineers transferred to the Army Air Base at Richmond, Va. There some of its men were chosen to form a cadre for other engineer battalions. Many new recruits were then assigned to the 805th for an intensive training program. The training was completed about Thanksgiving 1943 and the battalion embarked for Hawaii by way of Camp Stoneman, Calif.

In Hawaii, the 805th set up headquarters at Bellows Field and quickly dispersed units to several locations where they undertook runway improvements that would accommodate larger aircraft. Some new airfields and support buildings were established to handle the larger number of aircraft that was being brought to the islands.

In June of 1944, the 805th Engineers were enroute to Saipan in the Mariana Islands where one of the bloodiest battles of World War II was fought with the Japanese. After securing a beach head, the group camped at a spot overlooking the channel between Saipan and the island of Tinian. Within a few days the battalion took up more secure and permanent quarters by establishing a tent city and commencing work on Aslito Airfield, the major air strip taken from the Japanese.

With bulldozers, shovels, carry-alls, and graders, the 805th opened a large coral pit that supplied the materials which it used to build roads and surface runways. Before Saipan was secured, the 805th began the construction of a new airfield in the northern sector of the island. The site was an old cane field within sight of open tank battles between
