Hartack's Obsession: The Right To Say No

He had just ridden his fifth Derby winner, a feat equaled only by Eddie Arcaro. Now, beside the locker with "Tack" written above it in the jockey's quarters, unsmiling Bill Hartack informed a group of newspapermen what they have come to expect: No interview, unless they have a written guarantee to let him see the story they plan (and mained. He introduced himself and extended his hand, only one did) to print. Even if they did have such a offering congratulations, Bartack looked up and shook the document. Hartack said he still has to like the guy to talk | man's hand, cordial to a point.

"I'm in the driver's seat today," said Hartack.

LOUISVILLE, Ky. - (NEA) - It was a beautiful day, a Hartack was dressed now in blue blazer, long blue knotted triumphant day, one of the greatest days in the turbulent, neckerchief, cream-colored bell-bottom trousers and black people who bug him to go to hell. Sadly, that seemed the Big heels. He walked into the jockeys' recreation room and overriding issue, bigger, even, than winning the Kentucky was greeted by his peers with congratulations and glasses filled with champagne and friendly gibes. He was relaxed here. His face, which often exudes the tenderness of marble, broke. A smile opened at the side > Again, Hartack refused an interview request. The reporter asked why.

"Why should I?" said Hartack, "after all the lies and misquotes written about me. I used to give interviews, but not any more unless there's a guarantee. I don't need the publicity anyway. I do my thing out there, out on the track. And I'm not going to compromise my principles. I have a right to say no. I'm human, too.

"Now I have the upper hand. I don't need you - I don't mean you individually because I don't know you - but I mean the press in general. I don't need them to tell me I'm good. I've ridden almost 4,000 winners in 17 years and I should know by now what abilities I have. I don't mean to be nasty or cocky. I just mean to state the facts.

point: That I don't need you. A man has a right to be himself. Sure, I could get a good press if I kissed your feet. But why? I wouldn't be honest. It wouldn't be me. And a man has a right to be himself."

"That's right," said a jock, looking up from a gin rummy game. "I've been around when Bill was interviewed and said one thing and the next day it came out something else. I don't blame you Bill."

"I've got my friends here," said Hartack. "at least 1 hink I do. And I've got friends other places. They know me. They can put themselves in my shoes. The press "Besides, I don't have any time for interviews tonight.

Another jock, watching television, hollered, "Hey Tack they're rerunning the race. Wanna see it?" "Oh, no," said Hartack, grinning. "I might lose this time." The other jockeys laughed. Nearby, a black attendant in the jocks' room was saying. "You treat Bill fair, he'll treat you fair. He's straight, a
