Elderly face isolation Greater community spirit needed

Herald Correspondent

Editor's Note: This is the fourth in a series of those who may be left behind as Sanford grows.

SANFORD - For some, growing old can mean becoming a "stranger in a strange land.

The town no longer feels familiar, family and friends move away, and even the simplest tasks become more difficult. Isolation engulfs many elderly, it's not a problem unique to Sanford. But, it is a community-wide

Jeanne McKee, director of services for Seminole County Better Living For Seniors, sees isolation as the biggest problem the elderly face. While quick to add that she doesn't single Sanford out, she says too many elderly find themselves alone.

"Many of the people we serve have no one to talk to," said McKee in an interview Tuesday. "There's a communications breakdown. Many of the elderly are used to this area being rural, and now it's urban. People lead busier lives, and they don't take time for others. It's not selfishness, it's just a lack of time.

One common theme expressed in this series on those who may be left behind in Sanford's growth is the need for greater community spirit. Whether focusing on the elderly, underprivileged youths or the very poor, caring about neighbors cuts across borders. "It's hard to define community spirit," said McKee.

Springs concert welcomes 2,000

By Vicki Desormier Herald Senior Staff Writer

LONGWOOD - Organizers of the Springs Concert, which was revived on Saturday after a three year hiatus, were very sharp.

Their strong efforts to return a second popular music festival to complement the October Lakeside Pops on Lake Brantley was anything but flat.

"The audience was absolutely wonderful," said coordinator Bonnie Bromberg, "They were perfect,"

Nearly 2,000 music lovers, most of whom sat on elegantly decorated blankets, sipping fine wines and bottled waters and sampling delicate treats they had wheeled on on red wagons or carried in by hand.

"I think this is one of the best concerts I've ever attended," said Dolores King of Longwood, "It is really nice and the location is beautiful."

"I'm so glad they brought back this second concert," said David Landon of Orlando. "Lused to come to the Springs Concerts a few years ago and it was a shame when they were discontinued. I went to Lakeside Pops last year and that was fantastic. I'm glad to see that there will be two of these concerts a year from now on."

Bromberg has promised that she will keep the annual tradition alive from now on the Springs.

"I definately want this to be an annual event," she said.

On the playground, not far removed from the concert area. youngsters hung upside down on the jungle gym or whisked quickly down the slide, but occasionally, they would stop and cock an eartoward the orchestra and listen, if only for a moment before returning

Fishermen don't trust ald programs

OAK HILL. Fla. - The old-fashioned cafe sits on the edge of Mosquito Lagoon, alongside a clump of weather-beaten buildings constituting the Goodrich family's seafood company.

Inside the family's restaurant, 78-year-old Millard Goodrich. his three sons and other fishermen drink coffee around a bench-like table and lament the coming extinction of a way of life: fishing for mullet, sea trout, whiting, drum and flounder with large nets.

The Florida Legislature is considering proposals to provide job retraining and buy back equipment to help thousands of fishermen losing their livelihoods because of the new constitutional amendment banning most net fishing in state

But folks in Oak Hill, just north of Cape Canaveral, don't rust "the suits" in Tallahassee. No state-sponsored compensation or retraining can make up for the loss of generations of fishing tradition and livelihood, they say.

Many of the same sentiments are being voiced in fishing communities throughout the state, from Panaces in the Panhandle to Fort Pierce on the Atlantic.

In Oak Hill, 105 fishermen and their families will be hurt by the ban that takes effect July 1 — about 10 percent of the town's population. But almost everyone else is indirectly affected because fishing is Oak Hill's only industry.

TAMPA - Three people died and another was injured in a two-boat collision in Tampa Bay.

Peter Suri, 60, Gary Adkins, 47 and his 44-year-old wife. Marilyn, were killed early Sunday when another boat slammed into them. The Adkinses had just befriended Suri and his wife, Linda, two weeks earlier.

'Two seconds later, Bang." "He came right over our boat," said Mrs. Suri, who was in fair condition today. "It killed everybody except for me."

The two couples had planned to spend the night aboard the Suris' 20-foot Dolphin boat before anchoring in the bay later Sunday to watch Airfest '95, an air show at MacDill Air Force Basc, Mrs. Suri said.

Next-to-last week opens with debate on prisons

By The Associated Press

TALLAHASSEE - The House planned floor action on anticrime bills and the Senate scheduled confirmation hearings for department heads for the penultimate week of the 60-day legislative session.

The House passed bills late last week to give violent career felons mandatory prison sentences and house more inmates in state prisons before postponing debate on the remaining measures.

Slated for debate today were bills to require offenders to serve at least 85 percent of their sentences and to change sentencing rules so property offenders like burglars and auto thieves can be imprisoned.

The Senate passed its anticrime bills early in the session. President Jim Scott, R.Fort Lauderdale, said the House has spotled his boasts - until last week - that the Senate could finish ahead of the slated May 5 end of the session. "It's waited so late on public safety we can't get out of here early or get the budget con-cluded early," he said Friday.

But House Speaker Peter Rudy Wallace said he didn't see any danger of an extended session, scheduled more than 30 hours of floor session this week. 'I'm confident the House is in a posture to bring these issues to a conclusion," he said. Wallace, D-St. Petersburg, said he urged Scott to quiet rhetoric. resolve issues and "focus on bringing this session in for a soft

A mother's ordeal Telling President Clinton of birth—and death in bombing

By JULIA PROOIS
Associated Press Writer

OKLAHOMA CITY - When Baylee Almon was born a year ago, her mother sent President and Mrs. Clinton a birth announcement and the White House sent back a note of congratulations.

On Sunday, the young mother met the Clintons, and this time she told them her baby - the subject of a dramatic rescue attempt pictured on front pages worldwide - was dead. She wept in their arms.

"I'm sorry. I'm so sorry," a glassy-eyed Clinton said as he hugged 22-year-old Aren Almon after Sunday's memorial service.

Clutching a long-stemmed pink rose and a teddy bear, Aren gazed up at the president with puddled eyes, looking for reassurance that someday she could be happy again. Holding back tears, the president clenched his jaw and nodded warmly. His eyes didn't waver from hers.

She handed him the teddy bear she got at the memorial service and asked him to sign it.

"God bless you," he wrote in black ink on the bear's cotton

For Aren, it had been a week of shock, grief and comfort as she tried to make sense of the bloody death of the 1-year-old child her family called "Miss Baylee."

"The reality of it hasn't really hit her yet," said a friend who accompanied her to the memorial service.

Aren knew her daughter was dead before she saw the photos, shot by a bank credit specialist who worked three blocks from the federal building.

One shows police Sgt. John Avera clutching the limp body to his chest, running to hand her to firefighter Chris Fields, his arms outstretched. The second shot shows Fields cradling the diaper-clad baby in his arms.

"It was the photo that was felt around the world," said Tommy Almon, the baby's grandfather.

on the front lawn of the home where Aren is staying with relatives - her downtown apartment was evacuated after the blast - she thanked Avera and Fields.

"Thank you for getting her out of there as fast as you could," she said, sobbing in their arms the day after the bombing.

Avera had run into the smoking ruins of the federal building, beckoned by screams and a baby's cry. A fellow officer pulled out the crying child and Avera clutched little Baylee. She was motionless, her head cut open and her face covered with insulation dust.

Charles Porter IV's camera was focused on Avera as he ran the baby to Fields. On Saturday, Aren met the photographer.

"We never would have known she was treated so good if you didn't take those pictures." Aren said during the tearful meeting around the dining room table. "I'm relieved. I thought, 'What must they think of me?' I hope it didn't hurt you," Porter, 25. replied quietly. "Of course it broke our hearts, but it let us see how much they did care," said the baby's grandmother, Debble Almon.

Death row, inefficiency of death penalty focus of book

By DEBORAM MEMBEZ Associated Press Writer

DENVER - In 1976, the U.S. Supreme Court resurrected the death penalty in a decision supporters thought would become the final solution for getting killers off the streets of America.

Yet, about 3,000 prisoners sit on death row across the nation today and, according to author David Von Drehle, only 1 percent each year eventually will sit in the electric chair or gas chamber, or get a lethal injecanswer is at best uncertain. With riveting detail, Von Drehle re-creates the circumstances surrounding the cap-ture, prosecution, death row stints and executions of Bundy and other convicted murderers. His exhaustive research into the childhoods and family ties of the killers and their victims humanizes all involved, taking capital punishment out of a black-and-white realm. In three chapters filled with testimony to the ineptitude of the justice system's handling of death sentences, Von Drehle convincingly argues that the system isn't obtaining the end of violence, murder and mayhem. But he offers no alternatives to dealing with violent crime. Von Drehle, a Denver native educated at the University of Denver and Oxford University, became interested in the death penalty as a Miami Herald reporter covering a high-profile murder trial.

He wondered why the process took so long. "It hasn't failed because they wanted it to fail. They worked hard, giving an incredible amount of time and energy to try and figure out how to make it work." Von Drehle said of death penalty advocates.

capital punishment — including

U.S. Supreme Court Justices Harry Blackmun and Lewis Powell - have "thrown their hands up in frustration" at cases that can drag on for years in state and federal courts, said Van Drehle in a recent interview in Denver.

In March, U.S. Supreme Court Justice John Paul Stevens called for a review of death penalty laws, saying they inflict "cruel and unusual punishment" on prisoners who languish on death row for years.

The cost of prosecuting death penalty cases can be up to 18 times more expensive than imprisoning killers for life, according to Mount Holyoke sociology and criminology professor Richard Moran.

'This makes the conducting of a death penalty trial, a capital trial with death as a possibility, extremely expensive (for tax-payers). Moran said. 'It basically turns regular trials into an O.J. trial." In 1976, Florida became the first state to draft a death penalty law the U.S. Supreme Court believed could be fairly implemented. Four years earlier, in the landmark case Furman vs. Georgia, the high court had abolished the nation's death penalty laws, saying they made

Get it and keep it clean

There is an agency to do just about anything. One examines rivers across the nation, and publishes a yearly report on the most endangered. While a major river in Colorado has been declared in the worst condition, Florida's rivers are nowhere on the list. (At least not yet).

This is excellent, and speaks well of our natural soil conditions and plant life which help eliminate many of our problems.

One look at the shores of the St. Johns River however, does not speak well of the people who frequent one of the most outstanding waterways in the world.

For people who want an eye-opening experience, take a look anywhere along the shoreline of Lake Monroe. It's yucky, and getting yuckier by the day.

Empty drink cans line the shore, along with paper products tossed from a passing boater or motorist. There are pieces of lumber floating around which have apparently been placed too close to the shore and ignored when they became washed into the water by the wind or rain.

There are often dead fish, probably discarded by fishermen who might be in it for sport and didn't want what they caught, nor bothered to throw back an unwanted catch before it perished.

Thankfully, there are some people who care. A few have been known to frequent the lake shore carrying a litter bag and helping keep our waterways clean. Some do the same from boats. Others are part of the Friends of the St. Johns or Friends of the Wekiva, and also undertake similar cleanup projects from time to time.

They can't do it alone however.

Unless we want to eventually see the St. Johns and Lake Monroe listed as one of the dirtiest waterways in the nation, everyone's cooperation is needed to keep it clean.

Boaters should carry litterbags to use when they wish to dispose of unwanted items. Fishermen should make every effort possible to put unwanted fish back in the water before they died. They should also refrain from using our waterways as trash recepticles.

It's been a long time since we have seen a report of someone being charged with littering on the St. Johns. We believe it's time we saw some of our laws enacted, although we doubt if it will bring a complete end to this littering.

Probably of most significance, let us see everyone who not only uses our waterways, but even journeys near them, begin to exercise more respect.

Let's get it clean, and keep it clean. It's one of our most beautiful resources and we should treat it as such.

A 15-year-old challenges high court

In 1981, the Supreme Court denied review in the case of a 15-year-old girl who — along with everybody in her Indiana junior high school — had been subjected to a general, warrantless drug search by school officials, police and police dogs. No individual student had been under suspicion before the raid.

Diane Doe claimed violation of her Fourth Amendment rights. Her lawyers pointed out that "being a teen age schoolgiri is neither a crime nor a cause for suspicion." However, the lower federal courts said the dragnet searches were constitutional, and the Supreme Court did not disagree with them.

In angry dissent, Justice William Brennan accused the school authorities of having "made no effort to focus the search on particular individuals who might have been engaged in drug activity at the school." Brennan did not believe in the presumption of mass guilt.

Last month, another 15-year-old, James Acton, was represented before the high court. The Veronia School District — in the small town of Veronia, Ore. — has been requiring all students in athletic programs to be tested for drug use by providing a mandatory urine sample. Three years ago, Acton, then in the seventh grade, refused to take the test.

"The school district," he says, "had no reason to think I was taking drugs. I never even got a referral to the principal's office." Acton. who had not been taught about the Fourth Amendment in school, said, "It may seem a little difficult to believe that a 12-year-old thought of this all by himself. But it's not too difficult to understand the right to privacy. I think everybody should be taught that they have that right, before it's taken away."

School officials insist that they had to test everybody in the athletic programs. however suspicion before the raid.

Timothy Volpert, the school district's lawyer, explained before the Supreme Court that there had been a "startling and progressive" increase in the use and talk about drugs. However, in the five years of drug testing — including additional random testing of 10 percent of the students every week — there were, the lawyer admitted, only two or three students who tested positive.

In 1992, a federal district judge upheld the school district's program, but two years later, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals reversed that decision, ruling that the school district had violated the United States and Oregon constituthusiasm for civil liberties — supported the Veronia school district.

Slate is never again quite clean

BOSTON — What it comes down to is the nature of forgiveness, redemption, or maybe rehabilitation is a better word when we talk about crime and punishment. Do we really believe in clean slates? Are there some dues that are never fully paid?

For over a week now, the talk of this town has been a Cambridge high school senior named Gina Grant. On April 2, this 19-year-old appeared in The Boston Globe as a model of how resilient kids can be. She was an all-A student, the captain of the tennis team, a devoted tutor for disadvantaged kids.

Gina Grant had succeeded, despite the fact that she was an orphan. At 11, she'd lost her dad to cancer. At 14, she'd lost her mom to circumstances that, she said, were too painful to describe. To top it off, she'd won acceptance to Harvard.

Within days, however, we learned about the death that was too painful to describe. In 1990, Gina Grant had murdered her mother. The model student was a matricide. She'd done time — six months in a South Carolina juvenile facility — before being allowed to come here, to start again.

Maybe Harvard had been impressed by what one source called "the orphan angle" on this applicant. But now they had second thoughts. The statement reversing their offer said, vaguely, that admission can be rescinded if students lie on their application or if they behave in ways that "bring into question honesty, maturity or moral character."

Since then, the debate from Harvard Yard to

Since then, the debate from Harvard Yard to "Nightline" has been about the rights of a juvenile offender and the behavior of the university " about unsealed records and second chances.

Those who take Gina Grant's side talk about the "exemplary life" she has led since the "mistake" which resulted in "the tragic death" of her mother. Those who do not, talk about the mother's crushed skull, about the repeated blows from a candlestick, about the blood.

Defenders characterize the 14-year-old as an emotionally battered girl who finally struck out against her alcoholic mother. Detractors dismiss this Menendez-sister-defense and portray her as a rebellious teen who with her boyfriend tried to concoct a suicide story by sticking a knife in the dead mother's throat.

There are people at her new school in Cambridge, Mass, who talk of her as strong, a survivor. There are people in her old town in Lexington, S.C., who talk of her as hard, remorseless.

In the same dialectic, some see Harvard as "arrogant," intent on imposing its own, second, punishment on a 19-year-old. Others see the university as stung by the orphan, wary of explaining Grant's past to her future roommate's mother.

But underlying this noisy argument is a quieter, more complex question: is there any such thing as a truly fresh start?

Most of us believe in rehabilitation, the idea that people, like houses, can be stripped down to the walls and rebuilt. But we also believe that the old structure may remain intact under the new wallpaper. When Mike Tyson was freed from jail, we say he paid his dues. But many recoil from his renewed clebrity. When a sex offender is released. he's done his time. But more than one family would want to know if he moved onto the block. What student wouldn't want to know if a convicted rapist was on her dormitory floor?

The juvenile justice system is built on the premise that a child deserves a second chance. It promises to seal the records, wipe out the past. But it can't wipe out a community's memory. In this celebrated case, Grant was never more than a Nexis search away from revelation. The people protesting Harvard's arrogance today might have had a lot to say about its ignorance tomorrow.

Do we really believe in clean dues that are

Gina Grant was not, after all, convicted of shoplifting. She is guilty of murder. I have no idea what is in her mind or in her nightmares. Not even the people who wish her a clean slate would. I imagine, wish her a clean conscience.

No matter what the protesting students believe, being denied admission to Harvard is not one of life's cruelest blows. It's not reneging on the world's promise that a juvenile offender can lead a full life. Ask the other high school seniors who applied to Harvard — nine out of 10 of whom got rejection notices this week. In the case of Gina Grant, Harvard was well within the boundaries of fairness when it acted on its doubt.

This enormously bright and yes, resilient, young woman, has the respect of her teachers and all those who have watched her survive and help others these last years. She will make her way. But I suspect she already knows that there are acts in life that are simply irrevocable, utterly irreversible. Murder is one of them. Afterwards, the slate is never again quite

Boutros-Ghali no stranger to threats

UNITED NATIONS — The Secretary General of the United Nations. Boutros Boutros-Ghall, understands what it's like to be in the cross-hairs of a terrorist. As he puts it, he's either been on terrorists' "black lists" or "waiting lists" for 18 years.

In one dramatic incident. Boutros. Ghali confidentially warned then President George Bush about an alleged terrorist who was residing in the United States. Six months before the February 1993 World Trade Center bombing. Boutros-Ghali alerted Bush to the danger posed by Shelk Omar Abdel Rahman. The Muslim cleric now

last week's explosion in Oklahoma City
was the costliest terrorist incident in American history.

After the FBI infiltrated Rahman's fundamentalist group, they learned that the organization also planned to blow up the United Nations — preferably while Boutros-Ghali occupied his 38th floor suite.

The "SG," as he is known at the U.N. building, takes the death threats and attempts in stride. "I am a fatalist," Boutros-Ghali told our associate Dale Van Atta during an exclusive interview. "I believe very much that the day of your death is known in advance."

Boutros-Ghali's fatalism may be derived from his family history. His grandfather, Boutros Ghali, was Egypt's only Coptic (Christian) prime minister. He was assassinated in 1910 by Muslim nationalists who believed he was a British puppet for allowing the Sudan to be carved out of Egypt.

By the time his granden Boutros was

By the time his grandson, Boutros, was born 12 years later, the family had added the slain ancestor's name to the family name so all would be named Boutros-Ghali thereafter. That's why the sixth secretary general of the United Nations has the much-stumbled over double name, Boutros Boutros-Ghali.

Boutros-Ghali's rise to power came amid turmoil. When Anwar Sadat made his historic visit to Jerusalem in 1977 to discuss peace with Menachem Begin, Sadat's foreign minister resigned in protest.

The deputy foreign minister, Boutros-Ghali.

The deputy foreign minister, Boutros-Ghali, stepped forward and into history. He labored with diplomatic distinction to help craft what became the Camp David Accords, and peace between Egypt and Israel.

This earned him enmity from Palestinian terrorist groups. He explained: "I was on the blacklist of the Palestinians because they believed I was the mastermind behind the 1977 Sadat visit to Jerusalem. 'He is the mastermind,' they charged, 'and he has betrayed us.' When I would enter a room (at an Arab League meeting, for instance), all of the Arabs would leave the room. They refused to shake hands."

Friends were assassinated during those days, and he poignantly remembered flying to Cyprus to collect the body of an Egyptian peace-negotiating comrade killed by Palestinian commandos. Or the time two Palestinians in 1978 tried to plant a bomb in his office, but were discovered.

Is his life still in danger from the same groups? "The people who are on their blacklist change. Now perhaps I am not on it. But I am always on their waiting list." he quipped.

Threats against his life are many and varied. His life was in some peril from warring Somali clans, for instance, when he visited Mogadishu in late 1992. Security was so heavy that he had to skip a lunch planned in his honor and instead dined on army rations in the safety of an area secured by the U.S. military.

partment of Heath and Rehabilitative Services, said. "We hope to be able to take a proactive stance when it comes to health care."

In tracking the immunization status of infants and children in child care facilities and kindergarten students in schools throughout Seminole County during the 1993-94 reporting year, the health unit found they had reached more the 90 percent of the youngsters in each of those categories.

"That far exceeded the statewide goals," said Doyle.

While goals are being set at the state level that keep the state below the national average. Seminole County has among the lowest mortality rates in the country, he added.

According to Doyle, the increased immunization rate, has beem the largest factor in decreasing the county's infant death rate.

For the state, the death rate in the reporting period was 8.6 per 1,000 births. In Seminole County, the rate was 1.3 per 1,000 live births.

The state picture is much different, however.

"Due to the combination of past neglect and current growth. Florida remains among the most dangerous states in which to be a child," Jack Levine, director of the Florida Center for Children & Youth, said Sunday.

According to the 1995 "Kids Count" survey, which compares states' statistics from 1992, only Tennessee, Mississippi, Louisiana and Washington, D.C., posted figures worse than Flor-

In 1992, 8.8 of every 1,000 bables born died before their first birthday, down from 11.3 in 1985. Florida ranked 29th in infant mortality in 1992, compared with 36th seven years

Fewer children are dying be-fore their 14th birthdays because of greater public awareness of things like bicycle safety, seat belts and water safety, Levine said. He also attributed the improvement to the state's anonymous hotline for reports of suspected abuse and neglect.

The bad news for Florida in the latest Kids Count Data Book: a 57 percent increase in the number of juveniles between the ages of 10 and 17 arrested for violent crimes and a 43 percent increase in the number of unmarried girls between the ages of 15 and 19 having babies.

According to Laura Bosco, juvenile division chief of the State's Attorneys Office, the number of Seminole County voungsters ages 10 to 17 rrested in 1992-93, the most recent statistical year available, was 1,926. That number compares with 1,892 teens of the same age arrested during the 1991-92 statistical year and 982 in the 1982-83 year.

The Teen Age Parent Program (TAPP) at the Crooms School of Choice in Sanford has reported increasing numbers of young women who are enrolling in the

The young ladies are from all areas of the county.

Levine attributed both increases to Florida's failure to invest in programs for children in the early 1980s, which led to "a half-generation of kids who are living without hope.

Improper nutrition becomes a bigger problem for people on medication, because the medicine "might have the wrong effect or you might not feel like eating," said McKee. Then, there is the problem of not being able to afford the right foods.

NATIONAL BRIEFS

Kent State 25 years later

BOSTON - Twenty-five years ago, they made history from opposite ends of a camera lens.

Then a 14-year-old runaway, Mary Ann Vecchio was photographed kneeling in horror over one of the four students slain by the National Guard during a Vietnam War protest at Kent State University on May 4, 1970.

"I hitchhiked right into history." she said. "I couldn't believe that people would kill people over what they thought."
On Sunday, she finally met the photographer who made the image into an enduring symbol of a nation divided by war. John Filo, now deputy picture editor at Newsweck magazine, won a Pulitzer Prize for the picture he took as a 21-year-old student at the university in Kent, Ohio. The image launched Filo's career, but Vecchio says it caused her "25 years of trauma." For years, Vecchio shunned publicity. She had never seen or spoken to Filo until they hugged Sunday at a conference about the shootings. 'I'm glad we're OK, we've been through hell. I feel like I know you," she said. Vecchio cried frequently during the conference at Emergon College, which was attended by about a 100 people. But she The famous photograph shows Veechio kneeling beside the body of Jeffrey Miller, who was fatally shot in the mouth after throwing a tear-gas canister fired by the National Guard.

suld she wanted to be there, to make a stand for peace.

Her hands are raised in grief, her mouth twisted in a grimace. Vecchio was hounded by the news media after the photograph, and reviled by people who supported the war. Florida Gov. Claude Kirk claimed she had been planted on the campus by agitators.

Mrs. Mandela was hospitalized April 18. Doctors found she suffered from an electrolyte imbalance that was affecting her kidneys, blood pressure and blood sugar. After being fired on March 28 from her post as deputy

FSU gets past Clemson

TALLAHASSEE - Jeremy Salazar's single in the bottom of the ninth scored Scott Zech with the game-winning run as Florida State defeated Clemson 9-8 in Atlantic Coast Conference action

Scott Winchester (3-1) walked Zech to open the inning. Zech stole second and moved to third on Steve Nedeau's ground out to first. Salazar ripped Winchester's first offering over the head of third baseman Paul Galloway to end the game.

DeLaNuez boosts Suns

JACKSONVILLE - Rex DeLaNuer's three-run homer carried Jacksonville to a 5-3 Bouthern League victory over Carolina on Sunday.

Heat finish with win

MIAMI — Glen Rice received the Miami Heat's MVP award at haiftime. In the second haif, he showed why he deserved it.

In a game that meant nothing but an end to a miserable season, Rice scored 32 points as the Miami Heat beat the Detroit Pistons 129-105

The Heat (32-50) finished the sesson with 10 fewer wins than last season despite making a coaching change after the All-Star break. Coach Alvin Gentry led the team to a 15-21 record after taking over from Kevin Loughery.

After getting hammered for eight runs on 10 hits over four innings during an 8-0 loss in the first game, SCC freshman Heather Hutchinson came back and tossed a two-hit sh utout in the nightcap as the Raiders won 1-0.

"This was a nice way to end the season, winning five of our last six games," said SCC coach Courtney Miller. "The last game today was a well-played game by both teams. Polk: has a fine team. They won their conference and will be heading to the state tournament. "Overail, I feel we had a very successful year for our inaugural season of fastpitch. The kids worked hard all

What's wrong with this picture? During a conversation with an aquaintance, he told me that his son wasn't playing baseball for his high school team this year. The reason? The teenager was either busy working to support the truck he bought or working to repair it. It's inconceivable to me. Too busy to play ball? In this space a while back, the topic was high school athletes who'd rather play ball in their spare time than take part-time jobs. While both activities are rife with impor-

For almost all of us, that decision is made by responsibilities created by other life choices . . . families, mortgages, and the like.

Am I suggesting that parents should buy their kids automobiles. pay the insurance, and keep it filled with gas?

Not even close.

What I suggest is that teenagers take a hard look at their priorities and get a handle on the difference between the things they want to do and what they have to do.

Certainly, the appeal of mobility that a car and personal finances represent is undeniable. But in a round about way, the perception of freedom that teens associate with having their own wheels is the very freedom they discard when they choose to go to work to support that

Reduce energy costs Plants influence home air comfort

How you arrange the plants in your landscape can influence the costs associated with maintaining comfort inside your home. Plants can be used to either divert or channel air movement away from or toward your home. Air movement around the home may raise energy consumption by increasing conductive heat loss (in winter) and heat gain (in summer) through walls and windows, and infiltration of outside air around the edges of windows and doors.

In Florida, winds prevail from the north in winter. Plantings situated on the north, northwest and, to a lesser extent, northeast exposures of the home can provide significant energy savings. The height and foliage density of trees used will directly influence their effectiveness as wind barriers. Evergreen trees with dense canopies provide the most complete protection, but extremely dense or solid windbreaks tend to concentrate their effects over a much shorter distance than those of moderate texture. A multi-layered canopy of shrubs and trees of moderate density planted in two to five rows is the most effective windbreak design, but even a single row of trees will provide some windbreak action. Windbreaks significantly reduce wind velocity for a distance equal to 10 times the height of the trees, less significantly to 20 times the height. The greatest amount of protection occurs within a distance of five times the height of the windbreak.

In Florida, summer breezes prevail from the South and Southeast. In North Florida, breezes during the "dog days" of July and, August originate from South or Southwest: in South Florida they largely remain southeasterly. How best to use plants to interact with summer air movement is largely determined by the means with which the home will be cooled.

GARDENING

For a home in which air conditioning will be used only minimally, trees and shrubs should be strategically situated to channel cooling breezes toward the windows. Lowbranching trees should be avoided on the southeastern and/or southwestern exposure. or the low branches removed. Plants used to shade windows from the sun should be far enough away to not restrict air movement. Shrubs near the windows can be positioned to further funnel moving air into the house. Winter wind barriers on the north and northwest sides of the home will also deflect cooling breezes from the South back toward the house in the summer.

During Florida's 5.7 months of uncomfortably warm temperatures, some residents find it impossible to stay cool without air-conditioning, regardless the cost. Wind movement around the home during the cooling season will substantially raise the energy costs for air conditioning by increasing the infiltration of hot, humid outside air around windows, doors, and through cracks.

Shrubs and trees should be positioned around the air-conditioned home to divert the prevailing southern breezes away from the house. A multi-layered summer windbreak should be designed along the southern exposures and away from the home. The tallest components of the windbreak should be the closest to the home. Along and close to the walls that face the direction of summer winds, a foundation planting of shrubs should be used to create a dead air space that will reduce or eliminate warm air infiltration. Deciduous shrubs, or at least more open-branched species than recommended for north-facing foundation plantings, should be used on the south side to allow the sun to heat those exposures in winter.

During the mild transitional months of fall and early spring, natural ventilation is desirable, even in homes that will be air-conditioned during the peak of the hot scason. The south-facing foundation shrubs can be pruned in September to permit air movement, and then allowed to fill out again the following spring, if such pruning will not disrupt the aethetic integrity of the landscape. Shade trees positioned between windows and prevailing summer winds should be low-branching to provide maximum protection against air movement. Additional tall shrubs can be placed nearby but on the windward side of east and west windows.

Excerpts from article by Dr. Robert J. Black, University of Florida. Barbara Hughes-Gregg, Seminole County Extension director, is the guest gardening columnist this week.

Girl's weight loss could lead to tragedy

DEAR ABBY: My daughter, who will soon turn 16, was a heavy child from the time she was 7 or 8. In the last nine months, she has lost 145 pounds! (She weighed 260, but now she weighs about 115.)

She doesn't need to lose any more weight, but she won't stop. All she will cat to a half-cup of rice and a half-cup of steamed broccoli — once a day! She takes a daily prenatal vitamin (although she isn't pregnant). She stopped menstruating last fall.

Her mood awings are so bad that she frequently burst into tears. My questions are: What are my legal rights in getting her professional help? What kind of help can I get her before she turns 18? AT MY WIT'S END DEAR WIT'S END! Your daughter is a minor, so of course you have a right to seek help for her. After she turns 18, you should consult an attorney.

Your daughter appears to suffer from anorexia nervosa. It is urgent that she be evaluated by a doctor or therapist who apecializes in eating disorders. Anorexia can be fatal — so don't delay. You can obtain information and emotional support by contacting: The National Association of Anorexia Nervosa and Associated Disorders Inc. ANAD has 400 chapters nationwide, and overseas service. For a free packet of information and referral to a therapist in your area write to: ANAD, P.O. Box 7. DEAR ABBY: I own two beautiful boxer dogs. I named them Max and Shadow.

A few weeks ago, I was walking my dogs when I noticed a man walking his rottweiler. I immediately crossed the street and shortened the leashes on both my dogs.

At the moment we passed each other, this man's dog started to growl and bark at my dogs; then to my amazement, the man deliberately let his dog go. The dog jumped on Max and bit him severely on the chest. How I got the two dogs separated, I'll never know, but the visit to the vet cost me $204.

My questions are: Do I have the right to ask the owner of the rottweller to pay for Max's vet bill? And should I have called the police on that man for deliberately letting his dog go?

My husband says "No" to calling the police.

ELIZABETH N. IN TAMPA.

DEAR BLIZABETH: | agree with your husband. You would have a difficult time proving that the owner of the rottweller deliberately released his dog in order to attack your dog. However, the owner of the rottweller should pay the vet's buried my father. I feel so empty. If I never accomplish anything else in my life, I would like the world to know that, with a little practice,it's easy to say, "I love you."

I realized during my dad's critical illness that sometimes it's very hard for people to say what's in their hearts. So I beg of you: Start today. Those three little words get easier every time you say them.

A GRIEVING DAUGHTER. BETHEL PARK, PA. DEAR DAUGHTER: My sumpathy on the loss of your beloved father. Your letter carries an important message. Sometimes words that are the most difficult to say are the ones that the listener most needs to hear. Among the phrases that come to mind are: "I'm sorry, "I was wrong," and of course, "I DEAR ABBY: Just yesterday | love you."

Microsoft, feds appeal in court

BY EVAN RAMSTAD --- AP Business Writer

WASHINGTON - Despite their hopes three months ago, Microsoft Corp. and the Justice Department are back in court.

They asked a federal judge in January to approve the settlement they reached last summer in the nation's most-watched antitrust case. But the judge turned them down and the two parties have moved on to the U.S. Court of Appeals, where a three-judge panel planned to hear arguments today.

The settlement forced Microsoft to change the way it sells, or licenses, operating software to personal computer makers. Such programs run the basic functions of a PC, like opening files or sending data to a printer. Microsoft's operating systems, MS-DOS and Windows, are the programming foundation of about 75 percent of the world's PCs.

Critics said the settlement did not change the company's most troublesome practices, such as announcing new products months or years before they're ready in order to put off competitors.

Known as vaporware, the practice is only marginally illegal and federal prosecutors said in January they did not have evidence last summer to bring a case within the law's narrow definition of vaporware.

U.S. District Judge Stanley Sporkin, charged with reviewing the settlement under a law known as the Tunney Act, rejected it Feb. 14, saying he could not get enough information to know whether the Justice Department was acting in the public interest.

The judge raised questions about vaporware and other Microsoft practices that he had read about in a book and that were cited by rivals who sent him objections after the normal Tunney Act filing deadline had passed.

in their appeal, Microsoft and the Justice Department cite those filings as evidence Sporkin was trying to conduct an investigation beyond the scope of the Tunney Act.

in a brief filed to the appeals court, the Justice Department said Sporkin's action could set a precedent that would deter it and defendant companies from settling antitrust cases.

"This procedure is an invitation to anarchy in the enforcement of antitrust laws, which depend on the ability of the Department of Justice to dispose of most or many cases by the agreement of the parties," the department said.

The dispute has riveted the computer industry because Microsoft's dominance in PC operating systems makes it a pivotal player. Other , programmers and innovators want their ideas to work on the PCs controlled by Microsoft pro-

Ironically, while Microsoft and the Justice Department were on the same aide at the appeals hearing, they may be fighting each other again

The department is reviewing Microsoft's proposed $1.5 billion acquisition of intuit inc., maker of the personal finance program Quicken. Several competitors have objected to the deal, saying Microsoft would be able to take advantage of its dominance in operating system software to become strong in the nascent market of on-line financial transactions by consumers.

- A decision from the department is expected within a few weeks. If it opposes or puts conditions on the deal, Microsoft may choose to fight, raising the possibility of a second court action.

Drug therapy may have caused adema

DEAR DR. GOTT: I' ve been given Adalat for high a blood pressure. I took four pill s a day for six weeks. My feet, ankles, legs and hands swelled . up and were very painful. My vol ce was hoarse and I coughed a lot. I stopped taking them for a week and the swelling decrease: 1. I'm also on Lodine, Axid, an ıltriptyline and a multi-vitamin. Am I allergic to the Adalat or is it a combination of the medical lions that caused the problem?

DEAR READER: Adalat, a calclum-channel blocker used for treating hypertension and he art disease, can - like other drugs i in its class -- cause edema (pu filness from water retention) as nd joint soreness. Some patien ts suffer congestive heart failu re (causing cough and difficult y breathing).

I do not believe that your othe r medications were to blame for your symptoms. You probably had an adverse reaction to Adalat. Ask your doctor to change you to another drug, such as Vasotec or Capoten (which are in a different class), if you need medication for your cardiovascular system.

To give you more information. I am sending you a free copy of my Health Report "Hypertension." Other readers who would like a copy should send $2 plus a long, selfaddressed, stamped envelope to P.O. Box 2433, New York, NY 10163. Be sure to mention the

DEAR DR. GOTT: In your column, you addressed a problem called keratinous cysts. However, you did not offer any treatment, either medical or surgical. I am afflicted with many of these cysts. Are they treatable? Are there any methods known to prevent more cysts from occurring? Are there any types of makeup that should be used or avoided? My dermatologist seems to have little to offer me in either eliminating them or preventing more.

DEAR READER: Keratinous cysts, more popularly known as wens or schaceous cysts, are common and harmless. Due in large part to plugged follicles in the skin with the resultant accumulation of fatty sweat residue, these cysts appear as painless, squishy, sometimes movable lumps anywhere on the body -- especially on the trunk or thighs. Although most wens are small (one-half inch in diameter or less), some can enlarge to the

Those that are large, unsightly or appear at points of irritation

(such as bra-or belt-lines) can be casily removed surgically. Your dermatologist had little information to offer because there isn't much to offer.
