Things in Germany are not as rosy as the propagandists would have us believe, far from it. Life there, is, based on our standards, intolerable. We don't believe many people in this country would consider the issuance of ration cards as a sign of "happy days," and we don't believe many Americans would be gullible enough to believe that a huge standing army and millions of people employed in armsment factories is any cure for unemployed in this country would submit to having their propagands and private utterances accrutinized and punishable by government edict.

Flying Is Safe

Because they are usually spectacular, airplane actions was aid-share of publicity. This together with the fact that plane crashes generally result in a high mortality rate for those involved has caused flying very often to be looked upon as a dangerous mode of transportation, when as a matter of fact it isn't.

The Tampa Tribune points out that "although com-mercial airlines reported 42 accidents and 35 deaths durher level of 1935, the Bureau of Air Commerce reports that the lines flew 6,704,615 miles per fatal accident and 796,168 miles for every mishap.

"Only five of the crashes resulted in fatalities to passengers, but in each case the death list was greater than past accidents of the same character. Included in the 1936 deaths by accidents to scheduled plane carriers were four pilots, two co-pilots, two members of plane crews and 27 passengers.

"The most serious mishap was the crash of the TWA plane in Pennsylvania last April, in which all except two of the 14 persons about were killed.

"Personnel errors caused 41.07 percent of the necidents, the report said, while airplane or structural failures were blamed for 23.81 percent. Weather, motor failure and landing conditions were responsible for the remainder."
