Seminole manager offered Volusia post

DELAND — Ron H. Rabun, who has served as Seminole County Manager for four years, will be packing up and moving east on I-4 to become Volusia County manager soon.

Rabun was chosen this morning by the Volusia County Council to replace long-time county manager Tom Kelly, who retired after two decades in the post. The search for Kelly's replacement has taken 15-months. Contract negotiations must be completed before Rabun officially accepts the job.

The Volusia County post was advertised at $115,000 while Rabun makes over $117,000 in Seminole County.

"It's a good feeling," Rabun said this morning after being picked, "and it's nice to know that the county council has such confidence in me."

The acting Volusia County manager notified Rabun of the council's unanimous decision about 9:30 a.m.

Rabun is excited about the challenges of the new job but has mixed emotions about leaving Seminole County noting the wonderful support he received here and numerous accomplishments. Rabun expects to complete most of the work on the 1995/96 Seminole County budget before leaving his local post. After notifying county officials of his intent to leave, he will remain on the job for 30 days which is a provision of his contract.

Accused of crime

SANFORD — After nearly 17 months of investigation, Seminole County sheriff's deputies arrested a murder suspect Thursday when Sherry Perry, 38, of Milton, was located at a Sanford hotel.

Perry was indicted on a first degree murder charge by a Seminole County grand jury yesterday. She is accused of killing her husband on January 20, 1994 at their residence.

According to sheriff's spokesman Ed McDonough, David Perry, 33, was shot once in the face with a shotgun as he sat up in his bed at Death or jail time?

SANFORD — The emotional reaction of some jurors Thursday when they viewed a videotaped confession by Eddie James prompted his attorney to move for a mistrial. The judge denied the motion.

Edward Thomas (Eddie) James, 33, admitted killing 58-year-old Elizabeth Dick and her 8-year-old granddaughter, Toni Neuner at the woman's Casselberry home on Sept. 20, 1993. The defendant had roomed at Dick's home for several weeks. He was a friend of her grown children.

SANFORD — The students of Sanford Middle School work very hard to accomplish great things academically, officials said.

Last evening, the school took the time to honor those students who have accomplished much during the last academic year.

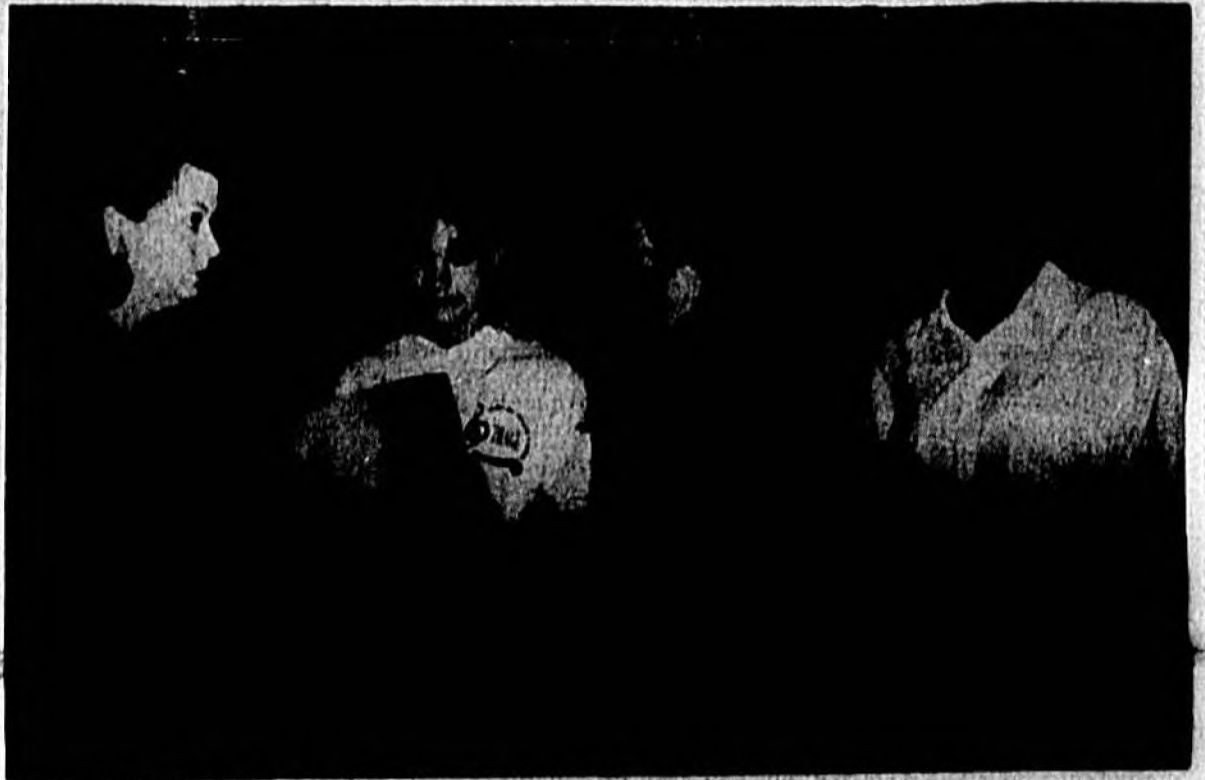

"We have given out awards to some very outstanding young people," assistant principal Helen Goodson said. "The teachers have each selected young people who represent the school and their classes well."

Last night's awards ceremony attracted a large crowd to the school to cheer on the students who have accomplished so much over the last school year.

The following students were given awards during the event:

Police radio communications being upgraded

By NICK PFEIFAUPE
Herald Staff Writer

SANFORD — Radio communications between local law enforcement agencies are rapidly improving. Upgrading of the systems for Seminole County and across the state is presently in progress.

Seminole County Undersheriff Steve Harriett said the county is presently funding an upgrading of communications systems for police forces in Altamonte Springs, Casselberry, Oviedo and Winter Springs. He said the radio system is expected to be completed by October of this year.

The sheriff's department and police in Sanford, Lake Mary and Longwood are already using this new system.

"What will be established throughout the county," Harriett explained, "is a new 800 megahertz system which will give better communications between all officers." He said it would come in especially handy in such things as high-speed chases which may go through several jurisdictions, as well as emergency crisis situations.

"This will immediately let everyone know what is going on and where it is taking place, so we can undertake cooperative action. It will be a big assist in apprehending criminals and suspects," he said.

Meanwhile, with state funding, work is ready to begin in Seminole County on the second phase of the

Saratoga sails final voyage to scrap yard

MAYPORT NAVAL STATION — The USS Saratoga left the naval station downriver from downtown Jacksonville on its final voyage — its destination a scrap yard in Philadelphia.

Lt. John Wallach, who served on the 38-year-old ship for two years beginning in 1963, said he had an empty feeling as he watched Thursday the once glorious ship, now disemboweled, towed to its graveyard.

"As far as I'm concerned, the Saratoga stopped being a ship the day the crew left," Wallach said. "It was tough."

The ship's storied past has included deployments in many of the world's most notorious hot spots, including the Persian Gulf War, Achille Lauro hijacking in 1985 and the Vietnam War.

Wallach said the ship's last deployment was in the Adriatic Sea near the former Yugoslavia last year after Serbs bombed a crowded market in Sarajevo.

A Jacksonville group had tried to raise money to turn the Saratoga into a museum, but fund-raising efforts fell short.

The navy decommissioned the ship, known to its crew as the Sara, last August.

Librarian convicted on sex charges

TAMPA — A junior high school librarian was convicted on charges she carried on a sexual affair with a 15-year-old student.

LaWanda Wright, 35, showed no emotion Thursday when the jury returned after two hours with convictions on charges of lewd and lascivious acts with a juvenile. The alleged victim, now 17, testified it began when he was in the eighth grade as a casual friendship. It escalated, he said, into an affair in which the pair had intercourse as many as 10 times.

Assistant State Attorney Karen Stanley said she would not seek prison time, but would ask a judge to revoke Wright's license to teach in schools and order her to receive counseling "for her problem."

Immigration guard indicted

MIAMI — An immigration guard has been indicted on federal charges of beating a Haitian detainee unconscious and then claiming the man had assaulted him.

Edward J. Calajo, who worked at the Krome detention center for the Immigration and Naturalization Service, went to extraordinary lengths to cover up the September 1983 beating of David Bernard, prosecutors say.

Calajo, 35, is accused of having other guards hit him so he could claim he had been attacked by Bernard at the detention center west of Miami.

Federal officials say these other officers apparently were not knowing accomplices.

Calajo is accused of violating Bernard's federal civil rights by beating him, lying to FBI investigators, trying to convince a witness to lie and filing a false worker's compensation claim for his injuries.

Bernard was treated at the Krome clinic and then later taken to a hospital. He has since been released from INS custody and is living in South Florida.

General hospital to close doors

BARTOW — Polk General Hospital, a publicly owned medical center which has treated the county's poor since the 1920s, expects to close its doors this fall because of financial problems.

The trust that runs the hospital is losing money and expects to be sold to private hands.

Chairman George Beck said the trust, chartered in 1983, would require between $14 million and $18 million from the county to continue operating. The hospital now gets about $5.9 million from property taxes, but Polk County commissioners planned to reduce the subsidy in the next fiscal year.

Hospital officials have developed a plan to continue treating the county's poor by keeping open the hospital's five outpatient clinics and contracting in-patient services to private hospitals in the area.

Teen-ager pleads in cabbie's death

WEST PALM BEACH — The third of three teen-age girls charged with shooting a cabdriver to death over a 90 fare has pleaded guilty to second-degree murder.

Stephanie Powell, 14, faced life in prison if convicted of first-degree murder at her trial next week. She entered her plea Thursday.

"She's very sorry for this man and this man's family," said her attorney, James Eisenberg. "She never in her wildest dreams intended to hurt this man."

Powell was the youngest of three teens charged in the shooting death of Yves Quettant in January 1984. She admitted Thursday she put the gun to Quettant's head and pulled the trigger. The cab fare they avoided paying was 90.

Tap water polluted

Environmentalists oppose easing standards

By BILL FERRULO
Associated Press Writer

TALLAHASSEE — One in six Floridians drank polluted tap water on one or more occasions in 1985 and 1986, say environmental groups fighting proposals before Congress to relax drinking water standards.

The Natural Resources Defense Council and the Environmental Working Group released reports Thursday citing 140,417 violations of Environmental Protection Agency health or treatment standards, affecting water consumed by 53 million Americans.

That included 503 violations by systems serving 2.35 million Floridians during those two years, Mark Ferrulo of the Florida Public Interest Research Group told a Tallahassee news conference.

The most frequent contaminants in Florida water supplies were coliform bacteria, which can indicate fecal contamination, and chemicals or radioactivity, the groups said.

Florida officials questioned the degree of the health threat posed by some of the cited violations, saying many are quickly corrected.

New Port Richey — on the Environmental Working Group's national list of cities with "drinking water to watch" due to coliform contamination — hasn't exceeded coliform standards in this decade, according to the state Department of Environmental Protection's bureau of drinking water.

But the reports are correct that maintaining water purity is a continuing struggle, said Greg Parker of the drinking water bureau. "It is useful to give us a wake-up call to make sure we are doing our job."

The groups released the studies to back their opposition to proposals before Congress they say would weaken the 1974 Safe Drinking Water Act.

Proposals include imposing new hurdles before the EPA can control contaminants, eliminating its authority to require public disclosure of some contaminants, allowing state variances from some EPA standards, and providing exemptions for small systems.

"The solution is not to lower the standards," said Ferrulo. "That may mean fewer violations, but it will mean more dangerous chemicals and parasites in our drinking water."

In Florida, the NRDC report cited the most violations for small systems, serving fewer than 3,300 people.

Topping the list with 11 violations in two years was the Spencers Pinewood system, serving 63 people near Gibesonton, 10 miles south of Tampa.

The system topped acceptable coliform levels once, in April 1985. The rest of the incidents involved exceeding radiation levels.

Radiation is sometimes a problem in water supplies in areas of phosphate deposits such as those found in central Florida, Parker said.

Because radiation can be cancer causing, water systems with high levels are required to install treatment equipment similar to a home water softener, Parker said.

Among large Florida systems, serving more than 10,000 people, none had more than 5 violations in the two years.

Principal slimed to make good on a deal

By PAT LEISNER
Associated Press Writer

TAMPA — A principal was slimed with gelatin and coated in ketchup to make good on a deal she made with her pupils if they read 25,000 books.

"They did their part and I had to do my part," Bay Crest Elementary Principal Mary Laaris said Thursday.

The educator issued a reading challenge to 830 children in kindergarten through fifth grade on Literacy Day last September. If they read 25,000 books by mid-May, they could layout an obstacle course.

There was a catch. Even the course had to be designed around reading. The youngsters had to hide a book in it for Ms. Laaris to find.

"We had to do something," the principal said. "We needed to focus on reading. They weren't picking up books. They weren't taking them out of the library."

To throw down the gauntlet she climbed atop the roof of the school and sat there reading aloud books and poetry. "I don't like heights, but that's how important reading is to me," she told the children.

Last year, an average of 79 books a day were checked out at the school's media center. This year that soared to nearly 300 books a day.

Children were encouraged to use the library during lunch; reading time was built into the class day, and into homework assignments. Parents were recruited as volunteers to help keep tabs on progress.

Sammy the Worm snaked through the school. He was made of plastic plates — one for each 100 books.

"Everything was geared around reading," Ms. Laaris said. "The whole focus was to get them into the habit of picking up a book."

By May 12, the 5- to 12-year-olds had checked out — and presumably read at least in a fashion — 28,101 books.

On Wednesday it was the kids' turn.

As children toiled water balloons, the 49-year-old Laaris went on her book hunt. She had to dig through bags of stuffed fish and break through paper walls.

She slid headfirst down plastic coated with ketchup and mayonnaise to uncover a book buried beneath a pile of hot dogs. And finally, she crawled through a kiddie pool filled with ice and lime gelatin and used her teeth to flip the book out of the slimy pond.

Second-grader William Bumgarner said some books took him almost a week to read, others only a few minutes. "I found you get to go different places and meet different characters. Sometimes you go all over the world."

Eight-year-old Jim Vickers said he found reading was fun.

"But what I liked best was the obstacle course."

Big changes for death row appeals?

By LARRY JONES
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — State death row inmates who challenge their convictions in federal court may have a right that has been called the "symbol and guardian of individual liberty."

Now, Republicans and Democrats seem ready to enact some fundamental change in the way prisoners can exercise the right written into the Constitution 200 years ago.

Fed up with reports of inmates spending a decade or more on death row while pursuing various legal strategies, many Democrats are willing to limit the filing of such appeals.

Republicans support that, but they want to go even further by setting a new legal standard that would make it harder for such appeals to succeed.

The GOP proposal is "an change of a sort that withdraws 200-year-old rights," says Columbia University law professor James S. Liebman, an expert on the process known as habeas corpus — Latin for "you have the body."

The Constitution allows people who are in custody to challenge the legality of their confinement by seeking a writ of habeas corpus. Latin for "you have the body."

That means death row prisoners and other state inmates whose convictions have been upheld by state appeals courts can go to federal court to argue that their rights were violated at trial.

It's known as the "Great Writ." In 1986, Chief Justice Earl Warren called the provision the guardian of individual liberty.

The scope of that appeal right has been narrowed in recent years by the Supreme Court. In 1981, the justices gave most inmates only one chance to file a federal appeal.

Senate Republicans would write a similar provision into federal law. Separate proposals by Senate and House Republicans would set a one-year time limit for filing federal appeals — and less time if the state provided a lawyer for the state habeas appeal. They also would set strict time limits for federal courts to act on such appeals.

That's the main issue on which Republicans part company with the Democrats. The Clinton administration and former Senate Judiciary Chairman Joseph Biden, D-Del., want time limits for filing appeals, coupled with incentives for states to provide adequate trial lawyers for poor defendants. But they don't want to curb the review power of federal judges.

Federal courts always have made their own independent decisions on issues of law in such cases.

Liebman says the Republicans' proposed standard would require a federal court to uphold an incorrect state ruling, as long as it was not unreasonable.

That could increase the chances of an innocent person being executed, according to lawyers who defend inmates. Stephen Bright, director of the Southern Center for Human Rights in Atlanta, says that deferring to decisions by elected state judges can bring too much political pressure on cases.

But Texas Attorney General Dan Morales, who backs the Senate Republicans' bill, says it's entirely proper for federal judges to defer to reasonable state court rulings. "Texas courts are fully capable of ensuring that legitimate review is had," he says.

Morales wants to shorten the habeas appeal process to four years at most. After that the system begins losing its legitimacy, he contends.

Setting time limits for filing appeals would be a huge change in itself. There is no limit now, which means death row inmates can wait until an execution date has been set to file a habeas appeal.

What's in a name?

Shakespeare gave us the question, "What's in a name?" When it comes to the airport in Sanford, people are wondering.

The Central Florida Regional Airport, located within the city limits of Sanford, is now the Orlando Sanford Airport. The Sanford Airport Authority decided on the change and that's all it required.

Yesterday, a who's-who in Central Florida was on hand for the official dedications of the new 57,000 square foot A. Kay Shoemaker International Terminal and J. S. "Red" Cleveland Boulevard. They also saw the groundbreaking ceremony for a new International Departures facility immediately to the east. When finished, it is expected to serve over 100,000 British vacationers during the first year.

During tours of the new Shoemaker building and various activities, comments were whispered back and forth about the airport's new name. Most of it however, was in private conversations. While hardly anyone denies the marketability of using "Orlando" in the name, almost everyone acknowledged that they would have preferred using the name "Sanford" first.

Why? In most cases it is a matter of pride. Long-time residents are proud of living in Sanford. They become irritated whenever someone tries to take away even the smallest recognition.

Orlando aviation authorities have also voiced their objections and threatened to look for other airports that people flying to Central Florida from England, Germany, or for that matter, almost anywhere within 300 miles from here, don't know where Sanford is. They have no idea that it is considered in the Orlando Metropolitan Statistical Area (MSA). Actually, all of Seminole County is in it.

Of course, we may suggest that many people who know of Walt Disney World don't know it's located near Orlando. Should Orlando change the name of its airport to the Disney Orlando International Airport?

Ten to 20 years from now, this will be forgotten. People will have accepted the name as it is, and objections will be lost with the passage of time.

In the meantime, we agree with those who would prefer that Sanford's name be placed first. We however, are not members of the Sanford Aviation Authority, and as such, will have to learn to live with it.

LETTER

Political agenda

I am writing this letter to respond to recent editorials as well as statements made by political figures attempting to link the tragedy in Oklahoma City to conservative thinking. One example is a recent article published in The Washington Post's Outlook section entitled "Understanding Oklahoma ... Ideas Have Consequences" by Michael Lind, senior editor of Harper's Magazine. President Clinton has also strongly criticized conservative radio shows in light of the bombing by condemning the "loud and angry voices ... whose sole goal seems to be to keep some people as paranoid as possible." Several other columnists and television commentators have made similar suggestions to use the horror of the bombing to point to "an atmosphere" created by prominent conservative figures.

As an American, I strongly resent any person using a horrible tragedy, perpetrated by mentally deranged persons, for the selfish advocacy of their own political views. This bombing has literally devastated hundreds of innocent families and will leave scars that will never heal. It has left scars on all Americans who have witnessed the event on television and have felt violated that such a thing could occur here. It is encouraging, however, that so many people have rallied across the nation to provide support in so many ways for Oklahoma City.

Even some Democratic senators are uncomfortable with the criticism of legitimate conservatives. On a recent Sunday talk show, Senators Biden, Bradley, and Moynihan were all critical of Clinton for starting this rhetoric with his attack on conservative radio shows.

There is a time and a place for political maneuvering, but this is definitely not it. For anyone to use this event for their own political gain is to stoop lower than the perpetrators themselves.

What juvenile boot camps can do

SEMINOLE OPINION

DANIEL L. DALY, PhD
and PAULINE PATRICK, MSW

Juvenile boot camps are growing in popularity as a solution to youth crime today. This is easy to understand. Juvenile boot camps offer two things to citizens worried about growing youth crime.

First, the military style discipline of the camps provides accountability to the young people who break the law. This pleases a citizenry who believe youthful offenders often get off too easily simply because they are not adults.

Second, these programs offer the promise of rehabilitation. Most people remember their own boot camp experience with a sense of pride and accomplishment. Consequently, there is a sense that military style boot camps are just what juvenile offenders need.

Because the public likes boot camps, politicians support them. There are currently six sheriff's boot camps in Florida with plans to develop seven more. But are more juvenile boot camps what Florida needs to rehabilitate juvenile offenders?

There is little in the way of scientific information on juvenile boot camps. The concept is too new. The best available studies on boot camps come from young adult (18 years and older) programs. For instance, Dr. Doris MacKenzie found little reduction in the likelihood of repeat offenses for young adult boot camp attendees in a 1989 study conducted for the National Institutes of Justice. Her 1994, multi-state study of young adult camps produced similar results. Dr. MacKenzie concluded that the traditional boot camp model, with heavy reliance on military discipline, has not proven successful.

Thus, juvenile boot camps that focus primarily on paramilitary discipline are not the hoped for answer. Why not? A close look at actual military training gives some clues. Military boot camps usually last 10-12 weeks. They are followed by a minimum of 30 months of continued training and work experience. And all of this takes place under the watchful eyes of concerned officers and non-coms who will not let youth stray too far.

Most juvenile boot camps last around four months. That is a very short time period to produce long term effects unless much more than para-military discipline is taught. Upon going home, camp graduates are unlikely to run five miles a day, march in formation, or bounce quarters on their tightly made beds. They are, however, going to face the same school in which they were failing and the same peers who supported troublesome choices like car theft or gang violence.

One Florida juvenile boot camp that is putting the comprehensive program concept to work is the Manatee County Sheriff's Office Boot Camp. Early studies on the program indicate that high percentages of its graduates do not re-offend. Boot camp discipline provides a "wake-up call" for its residents, but quickly fades into the background. Sheriff Charles Wells and Commandant Lee Vallier, who developed the program, emphasize that the program would not likely succeed without a wide range of treatment elements. There is a focus on the academic skills and self esteem that will produce school success.

Should juvenile boot camps get the boot? No, it is not that simple. What should get the boot is the idea that military-style discipline is all that juvenile offenders need to straighten out their lives.

ELLEN GOODMAN

Far right side of cultural divide

BOSTON — Some years ago, one of my paper's great sportswriters, the late Ray Fitzgerald, wrote up a mythical interview with the coach of the country's worst college football team.

In this parody, Ray's reporter asked the coach how the team was shaping up for the new year. The coach thought for a while and then answered, "Well, we didn't have anybody last year and they're all back."

I keep remembering that line as I watch the Republicans getting ready for the next electoral season. Is it possible that they are actually going to replay their 1992 election, or at least the 1992 convention? Are they going to run again on the social agenda of the religious right?

It's not just the nine men they're fielding for president who seem familiar, although they do. The perennial Bob Dole, the ever-blustering Pat Buchanan. Eight of them are spending their days courting the right. With Arlen Specter as the only Republican pro-choice moderate, I'm beginning to wish for repressed memory syndrome to help forget his grilling of Anita Hill.

But the ideology is also familiar. Republicans seem to be cheerily heading back into the Christian Coalition corral. Or the far right's blind canyon.

Recently, congressional elders from Gingrich to Gramm rallied in praise of the coalition's "Contract with the American Family" as if they were supporting apple pie. They paid obeisance to the cherubic Ralph Reed, the coalition's head who has become the city savior of the religious right. He rolled into Washington and grabbed headlines, while the left stood around like country bumpkins scratching their heads.

The coalition's "Contract II: The Sequel" is another classic in right-side ideology, although you may need a linguistics expert to find the meaning locked inside the words.

For one thing, the old school prayer amendment is back. But the move to dump the First Amendment and get official religion in the school is disguised as a plea for "religious equality."

The abortion wars are also back under the heading "Restoring Respect for Human Life." In this scaled-down, foot-in-the-door form, they call for a ban on abortion funds for the poor and on late abortions. The full ban comes later.

The contract also strives to "privatize" the arts and culture. That means no more money for public television, the NEA or the NEH — which they compare to welfare queens receiving "government handouts."

On the other hand, they want to give public money to private and parochial schools. But this isn't a government handout; it's a "school choice."

There are some safe spots in the contract —

most notably a bill to allow retirement funds for homemakers that's also supported by women's groups. But in substance and style "Contract II: The Sequel" is a hand-delivered reminder by the coalition that anyone who wants their vote better be on the (far) right side of the cultural divide.

Ralph Reed repeatedly said, in his best sound-bite voice, that the contract contains "the Ten Suggestions, not the Ten Commandments." But I don't know anyone who would confuse a contract with a suggestion list.

This is where we came in almost three years ago at the Houston Astrodome. With Pat Buchanan saying "There's a religious war going on in this country." With buttons reading "Dan's Right, Murphy's a Tramp." With Newt Gingrich suggesting that Woody Allen's affair with Mia's daughter was basic Democratic behavior.

We came in with Hillary-behaving and working-woman trashing. With the suggestion that Republicans were godly and Democrats godless. With conservatives as pro-family and liberals as anti.

We came in with opposition to abortion as an admission test for getting under the Republican tent. With the order that no one need apply for membership without a pro-life bumper sticker.

By the end of the Republican convention, TV-watchers were shaking their heads and asking each other: "Who are these people?" The party lost the presidency.

The Republicans and the religious right seem to be stuck with each other. About a third of the Republican vote comes from evangelical Protestants. Can't get nominated without them. Can't get elected to the White House with them.

So, here we go again. The ideological hot buttons are all being polished up for a 1996 revival. And the leaders are lined up to sign on the dotted line of the contract.

Are they actually going to do this again? You bet. As the coach put it, "They're all back."

Is CIA repeating its mistakes

WASHINGTON — The Central Intelligence Agency, which is still reeling from the Aldrich H. Ames spy case, is quietly investigating allegations that it has another embarrassing scandal on its hands.

The latest scandal is tied to the French spy case that flared up in February but has since drifted out of the headlines. In a rare diplomatic brawl between allies, the French government publicly accused the United States of conducting unfriendly political and economic espionage, and called for the expulsion of five CIA agents stationed in Paris.

Classified U.S. intelligence reports reveal that France's action was triggered by sensitive information it had gleaned from a female CIA agent in Paris. According to the intelligence reports, the agent passed secrets to a French-Brazilian man with whom she was romantically involved in the early 1980s.

"She spilled the beans to the French-Brazilian," one intelligence source told us. "In having her liaison with this French-Brazilian, she told him who the spies were in our embassy, the names of CIA agents in Paris, our safehouses — pretty damaging information."

Knowledgeable sources say that both the Senate and House Intelligence Committees are closely monitoring an investigation into the matter by the CIA's inspector general. It's unclear whether the agent deliberately leaked the information for money or just carelessly shared it with her lover.

But intelligence sources say that two elements are crystal-clear: The French-Brazilian relayed the information to French government officials, which — in the words of one source — "caused the French to come after us." More importantly, the CIA identified the agent in 1992, but agency mismanagement let her off the hook and allowed the problem to fester until it exploded onto the front pages in February.

The security breach is certainly not as devastating as the transgressions of Ames, who is serving a life sentence for taking more than $2 million from the Soviets in exchange for classified information that compromised the lives of at least 12 Americans. Yet sources say that the CIA's mishandling of the French matter is all too similar to its botching of the Ames case. Just as CIA ineptitude let Ames operate undetected for nine years — despite telltale signs that he was living far beyond his means — the female agent operated within an agency in desperate need of reform.

"The issue here is that we have another Ames case," one intelligence source told our associate Ed Henry. "The CIA culture wanted to protect this woman rather than really discipline her."

One difference is that Ames was stopped in his tracks when the CIA finally realized what he had done. The female agent was allowed to stay on the CIA payroll even after she admitted her indiscretions. According to one source, the breach came out in a polygraph that CIA agents periodically have to take.

But rather than fire the agent, the CIA kept her on a contract basis, allowing her to continue handling sensitive cases for $25,000 a year. Intelligence reports show that the CIA claimed it could not fire the agent because she was so distraught that she may have overreacted and leaked even more information.

"She said, 'I will not be fired!'" explained one intelligence source. "So the agency caved in and said, 'OK, we'll make you a contract employee.' But if you did something wrong, you've got to be fired."

The latest scandal is tied to the French spy case that flared up in February but has since drifted out of the headlines.

On Thursday, James occasionally cried on the tape describing the crimes and expressed frustration at not being able to recall details. He said he had consumed drugs and alcohol before the attacks. Although James pleaded guilty in April, a jury was seated this week to recommend whether he should die in the electric chair or receive life in prison without the possibility of parole for 25 years. Judge Alan A. Dickey will make the final sentencing decision. James stabbed Dick over 20 times, bound and gagged 9's sister, Wendi Neuner, then 9, and awakened the 8-year-old sleeping on a couch by strangling her until her neck broke. James told investigators he dragged her body to his room and raped her. Wendi escaped from the house and got help. Defense attorney Gary Anderson asked for a mistrial noting some jurors viewing the nearly hour-long video in the darkened courtroom were heard sobbing. The jurors' emotional state could overcome their ability to follow the law in making their penalty recommendation, the attorney claimed. Anderson suggested that reading the transcript of the confession at a new trial might have less impact. Prosecutor Tom Hastings objected to a mistrial noting what the defendant said is relevant. The impact of his statement is one of the aggravating factors. The state is seeking the death penalty for James. The defense team had the video to review for several months, the prosecutor added, and the audio was edited to remove portions of James' statement which the defense requested. Before denying a mistrial, Dickey said, "Of course it had an impact on the jury. Quite frankly it had an impact on me." Although portions of the tape are "clearly prejudicial," Dickey said the tape is also relevant. "The bottom line is Mr. James is the person speaking describing what he did and what he remembered," Dickey said. "That is a piece of evidence in a proceeding like this. The state has a right to show the video and there is nothing you can do about it." Dickey ruled the defense was not entitled to a mistrial because the probative value (of the video) outweighed the prejudicial value. Testimony will continue today and Saturday with closing arguments scheduled Monday. The defense has 15 witnesses slated to testify and will begin presenting its case after the state rests sometime today.

statewide law enforcement radio communications system. It will give law officers across the state communications capabilities similar to that being worked on for Seminole County. "This is separate and in addition to what we are working on here in Seminole County already," Harriet stressed. "This will make our communications even better than what we are doing on the countywide basis." John DiSalvo, chief of the state's Bureau of Communications Engineering, Division of Communications in Tallahassee said that law enforcement and public safety personnel in Seminole and 11 additional counties should have this useful tool at their fingertips in approximately two years. The other counties include Brevard, Volusia, Orange, Osceola and Lake counties, as well as Palm Beach, Martin, Saint Lucie, Okeechobee, Indian River and Flagler. Phase one involved expanding the statewide system into Dade, Broward and Monroe counties. It was completed in June of 1994. DiSalvo said the state-of-the-art system is an outgrowth of the outdated and insufficient avenues of communication which have been available to law enforcement. Problems, including the lack of available frequencies on which to communicate, encouraged the governor and Cabinet to initiate the efforts toward the statewide system. The system was designed by the State Division of Communications, and implemented with equipment provided by Motorola Land Mobile Products located in Plantation, in Broward County. The 800 megahertz radios cannot be monitored by outside detection devices since they are based on digital technology. Rather than two channels presently in use, it will have capabilities of up to 256 channels with built-in emergency features including the ability to pinpoint the location of an officer who might have an emergency.

The system is partially in use through the initial five counties. Overall, it links five agencies: Florida Highway Patrol, Florida Marine Patrol, Game and Fresh Water Fish Commission, Division of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, and Florida Department of Law Enforcement. With the proposed expansion however, other agencies such as the Department of Corrections and University System Police will be included. These will be in addition to Dade, Broward and Monroe counties already on the system, plus Seminole and 11 other counties now being added. DiSalvo said the digital system in Florida will be the largest in the world.

the couple's home at 2316 Poinciana Road, in the Tanglewood subdivision in South Seminole County. McDonough said Sherry Perry then reportedly fabricated the story about two Panamanian men committing the crime. At one point she even cooperated with officers in providing information which enabled them to compile artist's sketches of the two Panamanians. Perry was reportedly at the Marina Hotel in Sanford after accompanying her children who had been called to testify before the grand jury. McDonough said the apparent motive in the murder was to get Michael Perry's insurance money and the couple's community property. Perry was booked into the John E. Polk Correctional Facility and is being held without bond. She was scheduled to make an initial court appearance at 1:30 this afternoon in the courtroom of the correctional facility.

Westerners confide concerns

BILLINGS, Mont. — From a schoolgirl frightened for her father's safety to a woman uneasy about pro-militia colleagues, anxious Westerners confided their concerns about growing anti-government sentiment to President Clinton in a very public forum.

The president used his first TV town hall in more than a year to exhort them to fight back, suggesting: "You ought to stand up and double your fist and stick it in the sky and shout 'em down.'"

Clinton's hour-long conversation Thursday night with the people of Billings produced little in the way of confrontation and plenty of opportunities for him to hone a message that Americans need to learn to disagree in less hostile terms.

"The answer is not to join the militia and opt out," he said. "The answer is to ... opt in and be a vigorous voice of citizen responsibility."

John Doe No. 2

OKLAHOMA CITY — He has been variously considered an AWOL soldier in California, a drifter in a Missouri motel, an Arizona fugitive and numerous others stopped because of resemblance or coincidence.

Even so, in the search for the elusive John Doe No. 2, one persona has always remained clear: that of a conspirator in the worst act of terrorism on U.S. soil, the bombing of the federal building.

Now, as the flood of tips about his identity chokes to a trickle, federal authorities are apparently backtracking on John Doe 2's importance to the case.

At a news conference Thursday in Washington, Deputy Attorney General Jamie Gorelick raised the possibility that the subject of a nationwide manhunt may not have actively participated in the April 19 bombing that killed 168 people.

No flood of cards for agency on 60th birthday

By JEFFERSON BRON
 Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON - To Social Security officials, it seemed like a simple idea: Ask grateful Americans to flood the agency's mailbox with birthday cards on the 60th anniversary of the national retirement system.
 But it backfired when seniors groups learned that they were supposed to buy 800,000 postcards, lick the stamps and round up people from across the country who would write heartfelt notes of thanks for Social Security's employees and the benefits they dole out.

Advocates for the elderly grouched that they have better things to do than help Social Security congratulate itself.
 "Saving Medicare and Medicaid from huge cuts in the budget, that's top priority. We're going to concentrate all our energy on saving those two programs," said Joe Ervin, senior policy analyst at the National Council of Senior Citizens.

"We thought they should take this (anniversary) as an opportunity to draw support for the program, not to congratulate themselves, which is what we felt they were doing," he said.
 Social Security celebrates its 60th anniversary on Aug. 14, and the postcards were to be a big part of the birthday bash.

According to documents outlining the agency's proposed plans. Also on tap, the papers show, are radio spots, a salute to the agency in the Congressional Record, a presidential proclamation, a "historical page on the Internet" and an appearance by Social Security Commissioner Shirley Chater on network television.

Plans for generating 600,000 postcards, however, fassled fast after several advocates for older Americans denounced the idea at a May 24 meeting with agency officials, who had sought their help in producing, distributing and collecting the anniversary cards.

Joan Wainwright, Social Security's associate commissioner for communications, said the postcards were meant to give Americans the chance to tell what Social Security has meant to them.
 "It would have been a way to hear from our customers, about what works and doesn't work," she said. The cards would have been displayed at the agency's suburban Baltimore headquarters and compiled in a report.

 Richard Thau, executive director of Third Millennium, an advocacy group representing people in their 90s and 30s, said the focus on the past misses the point.

Instead, he said, "these advocates for the system could more valuably expend their energies on ensuring it will exist for another 60 years." Third Millennium released a poll last year that showed young people have more faith in flying saucers than Social Security.

An official of the union that represents Social Security field office workers, the American Federation of Government Employees, called the postcard plan "pointless self-promotion."

Witold Bkierszynski, president of the AFGE National Council of Social Security Field Operations Locals, said the agency should instead be lobbying Congress for the staff and resources "so we can continue to do a good job, and to improve our services where we aren't doing a good job."

The other signings included: Second-round picks Brian DeMarco, a 314-pound offensive tackle from Michigan State, and 255-pound linebacker Bryan Schwartz of Augustana (S.D.) College, and safety Chris Hudson, a third-round choice from Colorado.

Jones, 18, chosen on the sixth pick, is listed by Baseball America magazine as the best pure high school hitter in the nation and the No. 2 power hitter.

The 6-foot-4, 190-pounder set a county record with 32 career home runs. Jones is batting .452 with 12 homers and 32 RBI in his senior season.

Magic go for knockout tonight on Pacers' home court

By WENDY S. LANE
 AP Basketball Writer

INDIANAPOLIS — The Orlando Magic are approaching tonight's sixth game of the Eastern Conference finals like it's Game 7. For that matter, so are the Indiana Pacers.

"We know and understand that if we lose, we're done," Pacers guard Reggie Miller said. "You can't get too high because you are down 3-2. I think we're in a great position."

And just the kind of position Miller and his team thrive on. The Pacers have engineered enough improbable comebacks in this year's playoffs to approach an elimination game brimming with confidence.

That's precisely the reason Orlando wants to win up the series in six games.

"We don't want to come back here (Orlando Arena), even though we know we can win it," the Magic's Dennis Scott said Thursday. "You never know what can happen. Reggie Miller might go 18-for-18. Something crazy could happen, so let's not even take that chance."

Adding to the sense of urgency is the emergence of an NBA Finals opponent — the defending champion Houston Rockets, who beat San Antonio to win the Western Conference on Thursday night.

Ask any member of the Magic, and he'll give you plenty of reasons why the Magic are due for a win at Market Square, breaking their eight-game losing streak there and the home court chokehold that's characterized this series.

Orlando won both its first-round series with Boston and the second-round set with Chicago on the opponent's floor.

"Hopefully, we can do it again," point guard Anfernee Hardaway said. "They're going to feel the pressure from the fans and the whole city."

For another thing, the Magic feel they've played better each successive visit to Indianapolis. They lost the two regular-season games there by 12 and 10 points, respectively.

Game 4 on Monday was lost by the slimmest of margins — an incredible buzzer-beating shot by Rik Smits that lifted the Pacers to a 94-93 victory. And the Magic were in Game 3 until the final minute, eventually losing 108-100.

"Even though we have our share of losses there, we've been playing well up there and giving ourselves a chance to win," Scott said. "The ball just didn't go in."

That loss didn't prove to be the psychological turning point it was predicted to be. Back on his home court, Shaquille O'Neal produced 28 points and 13 rebounds, helping give the Magic a 14-point fourth-quarter lead that proved just large enough to hold off a push from the Pacers that cut the lead to three with 16 seconds left.

Indiana had a shot to tie it with under four seconds left, but Mark Jackson missed a 3-pointer.

To the Pacers, the loss proved nothing more than how close the series is.

"We've known that we've got to win one down there sooner or later," said Byron Scott, no stranger to playoff tension in his 12-year career. "Now we have to protect our home court, and then go down and take our chances in Game 7."

On their home court, they want to keep the Magic under 100 points and keep Rik Smits in the game. He fouled out with 3:44 left, severely curtailing the Pacers' offensive options down the stretch on Wednesday after he went 9-for-11 shots and scored 20 points.

Smits, who has averaged 19.3 points in the series, hopes he'll be able to get O'Neal in foul trouble tonight.

"I'll try and do the same things that I did in Game 3 and Game 4," said Smits, who got O'Neal in enough foul trouble that he played only 30 minutes in each game. "They did a good job in Game 6 ... playing on him. He seemed to be playing a little more careful."

Talk it over Keep love alive in dual-earner marriages

May and June are primary months for marriage ceremonies. Here are some tips that might help start that new marriage off right — and help rekindle the not so new marriage!

Fairy tale endings have helped our culture develop the mind set of getting married and living happily ever after, stopping short of realizing the effort required to keep vital the exchange of ideas, feelings and sexuality. In order for contemporary dual-earner marriages to survive, couples must insist on taking time to enjoy each other and learn the skills necessary to explain feelings and desires, to really listen attentively, and to negotiate solutions to problems.

Following are some strategies

CONSUMER FOCUS

BARBARA HUGHES/GREGG

for bridging the barriers and reconnecting as a couple:

- Talk with each other. Partners make a powerful commitment to each other when they take regular time to actually talk with and listen to each other, giving their total attention without offering advice or judgment, or interjecting their own experiences. They benefit greatly by talking about their priorities, goals, expectations and feelings. This is best accomplished with the television off and other distractions eliminated.

- Plan for and take "couple time" without the children. Trade child care services with other parents and take occasional weekends away by yourselves.

- Share family work equitably so no one feels resentful and exhausted. Daily chores completed together can become special sharing times.

- Say at least one thing you like and/or appreciate about your partner every day. Put in writing a list of qualities and attributes you like about your partner.

- Look back on your week, month or year and think of the things your spouse did to make it better. Jot them down, include a big thank you and leave it on your partner's pillow.

- Expect changes in your relationship and work to make them positive. View the problems life gives you as challenges to be faced together. Spend your energy fixing problems rather than assigning blame.

- Establish the marriage as top priority on the list and make a commitment to making it growthful and enjoyable. Work can be seductive and addictive.

Should woman try 'a little cocaine?'

DEAR MARY: My boyfriend and I are in our early 20s. I've never been in drugs but my boyfriend likes to use a little cocaine on the weekends. He thinks it would be great if I'd share the experience with him. He says it's not addictive and doesn't do you any harm as long as you're careful not to overdose.

I've refused so far, but I can tell it hurts his feelings when I do. I'm afraid he's going to dump me if I keep refusing, but I'm really a little scared. Do you think it would be OK if I just do a little hit now and then?

SCARED STRAIGHT
DEAR SCARED: Let me give you some facts and useful information, then you can decide for

FAMILY COUNSELOR

yourself whether the risk is worth the hope of maintaining your relationship.

Stroke-related deaths have declined 50 percent over the past decade, but the number of cocaine-related strokes have increased dramatically in that same period. A study from the University of California which reviewed cocaine-associated strokes revealed that the majority of cocaine users who died or were disabled by strokes were in their 20s; 75 percent of the patients were men.

Some of these strokes occurred within minutes after cocaine use, while others occurred the day after ingestion. It appears that cocaine-related strokes result because the drug causes the blood vessels to constrict and spasm. When that happens, blood doesn't flow to the brain and a stroke results.

However, stroke isn't the only severe physical complication associated with cocaine use. Heart attacks are another potential killer. Strokes and heart attacks associated with cocaine use aren't confined only to regular or heavy users. Certain people are simply more sensitive to the drug. If you're one of those people, and there's no way of determining in advance who is, you could have a stroke or heart attack whether it's your first hit or whether you've had a little or a lot. Recreational users are not immune.

Armed with this information, the decision is yours.

Prejudice—not sexual preference—is ugly

DEAR ABBY: I saw the letter in your column from a man who complained that he was being hurt by the rumor that he was gay because he was sharing an apartment with another man instead of a woman. I was shocked by your reaction. You labeled the rumor an "ugly accusation." If someone thought this man was Jewish, Catholic or African American — would you call that an "ugly accusation"?

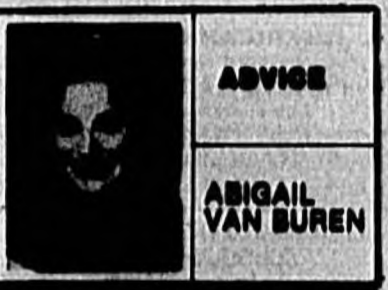

As a gay man, I strongly object to your response, which implied that being gay (or thought to be gay) is ugly. Remarks such as yours serve to fuel the prejudice against us.

Perhaps your comment should have been: "Just tell people that your sexual orientation, like anything else about you that you choose not to discuss, is none of their business." Abby, you are too widely read to permit yourself to thoughtlessly feed homophobia.

It is prejudice that is ugly — not being gay. I believe you owe all of us an apology.

GAY, PROUD AND OUTRAGED

DEAR GAY, PROUD AND OUTRAGED: Anyone who has read my column for any length of time knows that not only am I not homophobic, but for decades I have spoken out to promote understanding and acceptance of gays and lesbians. You have my profound apology. I completely agree with your statement that what is ugly is prejudice — not one's sexual orientation.

ADVISE

You are only one of many who wrote to say they were disturbed by my responses. Read on:

DEAR ABBY: Your response to "Joe From Little Rock" reflected a common but unfortunate attitude. People inferred that Joe was gay because he was single and had male friends to visit. You referred to these inferences as "allegations" and "ugly accusations" — as if being gay were something to be ashamed of, like molesting children or robbing banks.

Abby, perhaps the "accusers" view gay people this way, but you appear to have given your approval to their prejudice. Please set the record straight. The appropriate response to the "accusation" of being gay is, "And ...?" Optional follow-ups for the ensuing silence include, "No, I am not gay, but would it make a difference to you if I were?" or, "Yes, I am gay; does it matter?"

DAVE AND BOB IN PORTLAND

DEAR ABBY: I am writing in response to the letter in your column from "Joe From Little Rock," who was disturbed that his gossip neighbors thought he was gay because he shared an apartment with another man. He called the rumors "ugly" and "vicious."

Abby, I understand that being misunderstood can be annoying, but being gay is not a bad thing — so if people were to think that I am gay, I would not feel they were being vicious or ugly. I would just think that they were wrong.

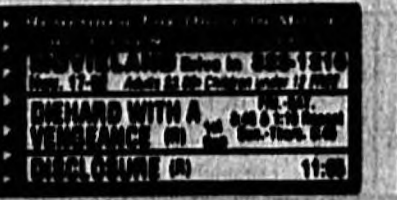

Please do not add to the prejudice against homosexuals by considering it an insult to be called gay.

My twin sister is gay, and she is 100 percent wonderful.

ALEXANDRA IN LOS ANGELES

DEAR ABBY: I found the letter from the bachelor in Little Rock both mystifying and troubling. He said people assume he's gay if he has a male roommate or male friends visit him.

It's mystifying because I'm a gay man who had a straight-male roommate, and male friends over, all through my 30s — and I was presumed to be straight. I know this because of the surprise that was expressed when I came out. In his case, I wonder who the "people" are, and how he knows what they assume.

I find it troubling because of his assumption that being called gay is "ugly" and "vicious." There is nothing ugly about being gay.

Ask the preacher questions

Question: What is God able to do for me?

Answer: There are many four letter words that are descriptive of God. Consider the following: Holy, Just, Meek, Kind, Pure, Love and more. But the word I like the most about God is the word, Able. God is able. Let's notice some things that God is able to do.

1. God is able to change my life. Remember the story of Zaccheus in Luke 19:1-10.
2. God is able to forgive my sins. Acts 2:38
3. God is able to free me from my guilt. Romans 8:1
4. God is able to keep me by His side. Romans 8:35-36.

God has the ability to alter our lives and our eternal destiny. What we need is the ability to believe in His power and love. God wants us to succeed. He wants us to be winners in life. In fact, "God is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us," according to the Apostle Paul in

Minister Tony Black

Ephesians 3:20. Imagine how much growth is available to those who truly believe that God is Able. There is a great hymn that states, "Our God is able to deliver thee. He is able to deliver thee. The by sin oppress, go to Him for rest; Our God is able to deliver thee."

Women celebrated at St. James

By SUSAN WENNER
Herald Correspondent

SANFORD - Entertainment was abundant at Historic St. James A.M.E. Church as the women of the church held the annual Women's Day Celebration last Sunday.

Chairpersons for the special day and the activities leading up to it were Mary Hardy, Alberta Merrierson and Sylvia Stallworth.

Two dynamic speakers were invited to deliver the message for the young women's 11 a.m. service and the regular 4 p.m. Women's Day program.

Music for the 11 a.m. service was provided by the Gospel Choir under the direction of Elaine Turner. The men's choir, under the direction of Sylvia Stallworth, provided music for the 4 p.m. service.

The speakers were Minister Curtis Robinson and the Rev. Shirley Williams. Minister Robinson heads the women's ministry at Barrow, Florida's Mt. Zion A.M.E. Church which is pastored by her husband, the Rev. Fred Robinson.

Her educational background includes graduating from U.C.F.

(University of Central Florida) and receiving an R.N. degree from Valencia Community College. She is currently completing her first year of graduate studies in public health at St. Francis College in Orlando.

The 4 p.m. speaker, the Rev. Shirley Williams, is a former Sanford resident who now resides in Orlando. She is also in the nursing profession and her educational background includes the following schools: Orange Vocational School of Practical Nursing, Folk Community College and Emory University's School of Nurse Practitioners in Atlanta, Georgia. She is a Board Certified C-N-CYN Nurse Practitioner. Her present title is Senior Community Health Nursing Supervisor of Women's Health Service in Orlando.

Accepting the call of God to preach in 1976, she was ordained in 1987 by Bishop Philip R. Cousins. She presently serves as minister of Mt. Tabor in Altamonte Springs.

Preston Adams is the pastor of Historic St. James A.M.E. Church which is located on the corner of 9th and Cypress Ave. in Sanford.

Baptists minister to families with seminar

By SUSAN WENNER
Herald Staff Writer

SANFORD - First Baptist Church, 599 Park Ave., will host an ADD/ADHD seminar titled "One the Edge" Monday, June 5 at 7 p.m. The seminar will take place in the Youth Activities Building and will be conducted by Anna Martin, R.N., Educational Therapist.

Topics discussed will be "How to Build a Child's Self Esteem" and "The Parent and the Child's School."

The main objection of this seminar is to reach hurting families with a positive message of hope. Children with attention deficit disorder and attention deficit hyperactivity disorder can be a challenging group.

The Minirth Meyer New Life Clinic has also produced many radio shows on the topic of adult ADD. A book by author Stephen Austerlun titled "Honey are you listening?" covers a wide range of suggestions and behaviors to look for when trying to diagnose the ADD person.

The church hopes to reach these families and offer assistance in dealing with the numerous symptoms and reactions to situations.

Sidney Brock, youth minister for First Baptist, commented, "We're concerned about students and children," he said. "We're seeing a lot of differences in them that need to be addressed. We want to minister to the kids as much as to the parents."

He further added, "We want to teach about ADD and how to deal with it. We had 40 people at our first seminar in March. This is the second of the four part series. Next session is set for August."

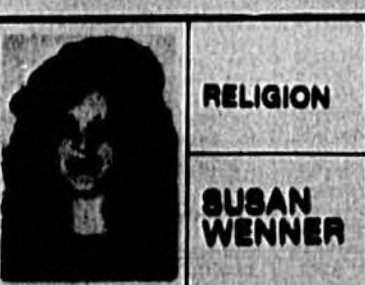

Christians and church minister to all

SANFORD - Webster's Dictionary defines Church as "the collective body of Christians; all who are identified with Christ as His sincere followers."

Of all the definitions that are offered this one seems to be set apart in a more holy way.

Christ established his Church as a group of people encouraging and uplifting each other through the trials of life. We are to teach and admonish one another and bear each others burdens.

The body of Christ has many ways of doing this. There was a time when the worship service was the only avenue of praising God.

RELIGION

Now through increased awareness of the devil's attacks many conduct seminars to help and assist others in their walk with the Lord. Men's and women's groups meet and celebrate their liberation from sin. Classes are taught to uplift parents struggling with disabled children or children with learning differences.

Bible studies in various homes help new Christians learn more about the word of God. Vacation Bible School and numerous activities are offered to the community as an outreach for the Gospel.

Many ministries carry the Good News to prisons, jails, low-income neighborhoods and other places. Clowns distribute Bibles and tell of Jesus in a way to capture the attention of little students of the Word.

Some may think gimmicks don't work and it only tickles the ears and doesn't make committed Christians. Jesus knew the importance of attracting the attention of an audience when he used parables get his point across. As they came to know the Lord they committed their lives to service.

Our main objective in life should be to find the talents that God gave us and use them to His glory to bring others to Christ. Are you using your gifts for Him? We are all ministers to others in some way through the life we live.

An important closing thought to remember is, "Your life is the only Bible that some people read."
