secessity for readjustment of the wage system, urging the adoption of a yearly salary instead of the hously or weekly wage. He sited president of the E. I. Du Pont de Vemours and Co., and one by Donald Richberg, executive director of the national emergency council.

Du Pont was quoted as saying: 'All government regulations of business, as such, and as distinguished from any other forms of activity, should be treated as an individual-no better, no wome."

Richberg was quoted with the words: "It has become possible for businessmen to prey upon each other and the public by methods that are just as vicious and time-dishonored as forgery and embezziement."

"Mr. Du Pont is only representative of his class," Father Coughlin said in launching an attack on what he termed the faire" principles on which the Du tified in demanding the removal of Pont fortune was founded.
