It would appear that some people are apprehensive of Mr. Mellon's great wealth, his connection with "big busi-ness" and his ability to make money. They believe they see the head of the financial department of the nation taking advantage of his position to further his own interests That Mr. Mellon is not guilty of this, we believe to be true, but even if, it were we would still be against any ruling which would prohibit the secretary of the Treasury from being even remotely acquainted with finance.

Mr. Mellon is frequently referred to as the greates escretary since Alexander Hamilton, and it is not unusual that he should be, what with all his experience in the banking business, the possessor of one of the largest fortunes in the world, and at the same time with a character commanding universal respect. It appears that the tendency is changing rapidly in favor of selecting capable men for public offices rather than the gumshoeing politician who has been a potent factor in making people despair of good government. #### Curbing Drunken Driving

A great deal has been said concerning the dangers of drunken driving and as the Miami Herald points out agreement is beneral that the practice constitutes a menace that should be removed. Toward this end enforcement officers and courts have worked atrenuously in many states. Heavy fines have been assessed and jail sentences have been meted out in an effort to curb the evil, which threatens the safety of so many others. The Miami newspaper comments favorably upon a bill recently introduced in the Florida Legislature by Senator King of Orange county, who recognizes something more must be done to stop drunken driving. Says the Herald:

"Senator King has introduced a bill which provides that the individual convicted of driving an automobile while intoxicated shall be barred from driving a motor vehicle for birthday, May the Breeze blow on a year. Most states that require drivers of motor cars to and continue to waft a good, be licensed revoke the license when the holders are convicwholesome influence upon its ted of driving when drunk and such action is common. Fines and jall sentences have been tried but are not effective. Indeed, jail sentences are seldom inflicted because in most cases they impose suffering on wives and children and courts hesitate to punish the innocent. Keeping topers letnd, Local physicians merely from behind the steering wheel of an automobile would work no such hardship on the relatives of the offender.

"Opponents of the proposed law call attention to the dif ficulty of enforcing it. That there is such difficulty is admitted. It is hard to prove drunkeness legally and the in-dividual often wins on appeal but such appeal is expensive and if theelaw is framed so that enforcement of its provivisions is not suspended pending decision on the appeal few cases would be taken to the higher court.

Barring the drunken driver from handling a motor vehicle would protect other citizens when the law is enforced and it would surely have a tendency to cause the man who takes a drink to exercise care and to keep away from the driver's seat when riding in a motor car. Senator King's
