Grave tampering reported

SANFORD — Seminole County Sheriff's deputies report finding evidence of grave tampering Tuesday at Shiloh Cemetery, on 25th Street at Hardy Street.

Sheriff's spokesman Ed McDonough said three above-ground tombs had been broken open. Remains were exposed in two of them, with the skull missing from one grave.

McDonough said there are no suspects at the present time, but the deputies are investigating. There have been reports of vandalism at Shiloh Cemetery for a number of years.

Disturbing the contents of a tomb is a third degree felony punishable by a maximum of five years in prison.

Charity scam

ALTAMONTE SPRINGS — Sheriff's deputies are looking for the man who solicited donations Tuesday for a non-existent charity in Altamonte Springs. The suspect reportedly was asking for $10 donations for the "Family Health Education Services" reportedly located at 100 N. Westmonte Drive. Sheriff's investigators say there is no such organization at that address.

Sheriff's spokesman Ed McDonough said the solicitations were made to businesses on SR-436 near Interstate-4. At least three service stations reportedly gave to the charity.

The suspect is a black male, 35 years of age, five feet 11 inches tall, 175 pounds, with brown eyes and a shaved head. He reportedly wears a black business suit, white shirt and tie, and carries a brown leather portfolio.

Lake Mary targets industry

By NICK PFENAU
Herald Staff Writer

LAKE MARY — As many municipalities have found out, attracting business and industry to an area often requires a great deal of give-and-take. Lake Mary is presently exploring its own proposed Target Industry District (TID). Mayor Lowry Rockett describes the city's target industry area as basically from Rinehart Road west to Interstate-4, and from SR 46A, south to almost Sun Drive. "The exact boundaries haven't been formalized yet," Rockett said, "but that's the area where we believe it would serve best for some types of clean industry such as we already have in Lake Mary."

This Thursday, the city commission has scheduled a special work session to consider both sides of the matter. According to a priority list of considerations included in the meeting agenda package, questions are expected to deal with what is required to implement a TID, what amendments to city codes or the comprehensive plan may be required, and what is presently happening in the city. On the other side of the coin, is what the city commission may be willing to offer in incentives for a Target Industry District.

These include the possible consideration of reductions in open space requirements, buffer sizes, and landscape breaks. There is also the possibility that higher building □ See Industry, Page 5A

It keeps rainin' all over the land

Rainfall so far in the month of October has been registered as slightly over six and a half inches. Several areas, especially in Lake Mary, continue to suffer from flooding. Above, Main Road near Country Club Road continues to have an overflow. Elsewhere, Liberty Park has been closed for three weeks because of flooding in the parking lot. Parks and Recreation Director John Holland says there has been no damage to the pavilions or bathrooms at the park, but the playground and driveways are still flooded. At Lake Mary City Hall, Central Park continues to have high water. Holland says the city is looking into ways to reduce the level. The rain is expected to continue today.

FLORIDA BRIEFS

Complaint dismissed

TALLAHASSEE — The state Ethics Commission has dismissed a complaint filed by a union representing Florida's classroom teachers against Education Commissioner Frank Brogan.

The panel found no legal basis to pursue the complaint from the Florida Education Association-United, accusing Brogan of unethical and possibly illegal use of state money.

Brogan and the teachers' union have been clashing since January when he became the first Republican to hold the statewide post.

He said the decision confirms the charges were without foundation and were politically motivated.

Gary Landry, a spokesman for the union, denied politics was behind the complaint.

The complaint claimed Brogan paid a former aide more than $150,000 for lobbying and paid salary bonuses to superintendents for training.

Brogan, a former Martin County school superintendent, has said a state law allowing the education commissioner discretion on allowing administrative bonuses was created in 1986 when Democrats, supported by the union, controlled Florida politics.

FEA/United is one of two unions representing classroom teachers in the state. The other is the Florida Teaching Profession/National Education Association.

Seventh launch attempt set

CAPE CANAVERAL — NASA will try Friday for the seventh time to launch space shuttle Columbia on a laboratory-research mission.

The flight was delayed a record-tying sixth time on Sunday because of bad weather. It's now three weeks late. Columbia also set the six-scrub record in 1986.

NASA could have tried to launch Columbia on Thursday, but that plan was scrapped when an unmanned Atlas rocket failed to blast off Tuesday because of high wind. The Atlas launch slipped to Wednesday and Columbia consequently was moved to Friday morning.

The Air Force tracks all launches from Cape Canaveral for safety purposes and needs one to two days after one flight to get ready for the next one.

Atlas rocket maker Lockheed Martin Corp. long ago had reserved launch dates for early this week, and NASA has to wait its turn.

If the Atlas isn't off the ground by Wednesday, then NASA will assume priority. And if Columbia isn't aloft by early next week, then Atlantis will be the next shuttle to fly and Columbia's 18-day mission will be bumped to late November.

Catfish carcasses cause stink

ST. PETERSBURG — The mystery has a fishy smell: bodies everywhere and no clues. The victims belong to a single species of catfish living in Tampa Bay.

For days, carcasses of hardhead catfish have been washing ashore on public beaches and waterfront lots throughout the bay. The Florida Marine Research Institute in St. Petersburg went out Monday to investigate.

Paul Forstchen, the institute's chief of fish kill investigations, inspected the shoreline from Fort DeSoto north to the Courtney Campbell Causeway.

Fish kills aren't unusual in Tampa Bay. Red tide, oil spills and sewage overflows have been the culprits before. But it is odd that this kill has been limited to a single species — and a hardy fish at that.

This "has not happened before, to our knowledge," Forstchen said. "Not with this many fish involved."

Right now, Forstchen said, officials have no idea what's killing the fish.

What marine investigators need is a not-quite-dead catfish. Those scattered along Tampa Bay shores have been dead too long to yield any clues.

Illegal immigrants picked up

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico — The U.S. Coast Guard said Tuesday that it picked up 147 Dominicans trying to illegally enter the United States through Puerto Rico.

The Coast Guard found the Dominicans Friday on a 45-foot yawl 25 miles northeast of the eastern Dominican point of Cabo Engano. The boat was headed for Puerto Rico, said Petty Officer Jeff Hall in Miami.

The Dominicans were taken aboard the Port Canaveral, Fla.-based cutter Vigilant and given food, water and minor first aid.

They were transferred Saturday to a Dominican naval ship for return to their homeland.

Woman challenges Wal-Mart Jotting down prices a company no-no

By LISA ROLEWA Associated Press Writer

TAMPA — Virginia Berger says she was looking for the best buy on Tylenol, Maalox, Ben-Gay and other over-the-counter medications when a Wal-Mart clerk told her to put away her pen and paper.

Jotting down prices, she was told, is against store policy.

"I was so angry and embarrassed. I thought they were going to throw me out," Mrs. Berger said Tuesday.

She sent two letters of complaint to corporate headquarters in Bentonville, Ark., but hasn't received a response.

A company spokeswoman — contradicting an earlier statement from a company spokesman — said the whole thing was a misunderstanding. "That was a mistake that shouldn't have happened," spokeswoman Jane Bockholt said. "All customers have the right and are invited to write down prices."

That's not what Mrs. Berger, 60, was told in mid-July, after she received a mail-order catalog from her insurance company listing prices for common over-the-counter drugs.

Since she and her husband live on pension and disability benefits, she decided it was time to shop around. She started at the Wal-Mart near her home in Spring Hill, about 35 miles north of Tampa.

Catalog and paper in hand, Mrs. Berger started her list of prices. A store clerk told her to stop, she said. She explained her purpose and continued.

An assistant store manager told her to put the paper away, she said. She went to the customer service department and asked to speak to another manager.

"She said, 'I'm sorry you're embarrassed. I'm sorry you're upset. It is store policy. You cannot write prices down,'" Mrs. Berger said.

Wal-Mart spokesman Keith Morris told The St. Petersburg Times that the huge discount chain has long had a policy prohibiting shoppers from writing down prices. The idea is to keep competitors from doing item-by-item comparisons.

Wal-Mart applies the policy without exception because "it's very hard to distinguish between who's a competitor and who's a regular shopper," he said.

Mrs. Berger countered: "If we're not allowed to write down prices, how can we compare? We're not all geniuses."

After the incident at Wal-Mart, she made her way to a nearby Kmart, where she asked to speak with the manager before even walking down an aisle.

"I said, 'May I write down prices in this store?'" Mrs. Berger said. "And he said, 'I don't see why not.'"

She is still awaiting an explanation from Wal-Mart's corporate headquarters.

"All I wanted was for them to say, 'I'm sorry you were embarrassed. Mrs. Berger. It is store policy. Please shop with us again.' And that would have been it," she said.

The irony, she said: Wal-Mart's prices were lower on many of the items she compared.

"But tough beans," she said. She won't shop there anymore.

Well, not much, anyway. The store, she explained, does have a nice selection of craft supplies.

"But otherwise," Mrs. Berger said, "I won't go near there."

World police approve of death for child killers

By TOM WELLS Associated Press Writer

MIAMI BEACH — John Walsh, whose abducted son's head was found in a canal, had some advice for police chiefs from all over the world when they deal with child kidnappers.

If you can't get information out of them, "let a father of an abducted child in the cell with him for five minutes, and they'll get what you want to know."

It was clear as Walsh spoke Tuesday to the International Association of Chiefs of Police that he still deals with the pain and the rage of his son's 1981 disappearance.

The host of "America's Most Wanted" drew thunderous applause when he called for the death penalty for people who kidnap and kill children.

"Parents are desperate. I have walked in their shoes," Walsh told a hushed audience of thousands of law enforcement officers.

He was referring to his 6-year-old son, Adam, kidnapped from a mall near Miami. The rest of the boy's body and his killer were never found.

Walsh said parole boards contribute to crimes against children by turning out child killers instead of leaving them in prison for life.

He told of Arthur Shawcross, who was paroled after 15 years of a life sentence for strangling two Watertown, N.Y., children.

The parole board sent Shawcross to live in Rochester, N.Y. He murdered 11 women there and is now serving 250 years in prison. New York did not have the death penalty when Shawcross was sentenced. It was eliminated in 1985 and reinstated last month.

People who think child killers should not be executed should tell that to "the husbands and fathers of those 11 women and their 14 children," Walsh said.

If someone kidnaps a child, they should know "they will die for the death of that child," he said, drawing cheers, whistles and loud applause from his audience.

Last year's federal crime bill allows the death penalty for kidnapers who kill children. Walsh testified several weeks ago before the House Judiciary subcommittee on crime, pointing out that the law refers only to kidnappings for ransom or reward.

The committee is considering an amendment to the law to close the loophole.

Walsh, who helped establish the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children in 1984, distributed flyers after he spoke Tuesday on the disappearance of a 10-year-old boy from the Miami area.

Jimmy Ryce vanished Sept. 11 after he got off his school bus and before he could reach his home three blocks away.

Walsh drew prolonged applause in speaking out for gun control.

"No one needs an AK-47. No one needs a MAC-10 with a 50-round clip. No one needs a cop-killer bullet," he said.

The IACP has 14,000 members worldwide; several thousand attended the convention, which ends Thursday.

SCC theatre season opens

'Rimers' exposes good, bad, ugly in people

By DIANA OLLANDERS
Herald Staff Writer

Review ★★☆☆

"The Rimers of Eldritch" by Lanford Wilson has opened at Seminole Community College's first play of the season. There are 17 roles, all equally shared. The actors are on stage together moving about in various tableaux suggesting the different seasons and locations of the play's action. The set is stark and simple, rough-hewn wooden platforms piled up in angular fashion to suggest the town of Eldritch, a ghost town in the Middle West. The time is the present.

Eldritch has fallen on hard times, a one-industry town; the coal mines have dried up. The coal company has raped the land, exhausted the coal. There are fewer than 70 people living there now and most of the entertainment seems to be in the nearby town of Centerville.

Eldritch seems to be a town of no hope. The young people want to escape to the big cities. The farmers scratch out a meager living on the hardscabble earth. Its inhabitants share a secret; a puzzle for the audience which reveals itself by its fast forwards and flashbacks in time.

Skelly Mannor (Brent Kimball), the town recluse and cast-off, has been killed. The puzzle is who did it and why? Mary Windrod (Jenny Strickland) and/or her daughter, Neily (Candice Burridge)? Mary is an old lady who thinks the town evil. She is abused by her daughter for her thoughts.

There's the tender amity between Robert Conklin (James Dunlap) a young man, who befriends Eva Jackson (Heather Danenhowler), a crippled girl of fourteen. Robert's older brother, Driver, was the town's pride and joy, a race car driver who has been killed in an accident. Eva's mother Evelyn (Amy Lynn Bowser), self-centered, complains to all within earshot. "Why has God cursed me with this burden?" A preacher/judge (Haywood L. Pittman) summons the characters to his court to find the answers. He asks them to share the responsibility of what has happened and to pray to the Lord for his grace.

Also featured is Cora Groves (Cynthia Roberts), a woman scorned by the town's gossip, Wilma Atkins (Lealie King) and Martha Trullitt (Stacy Lynne Lane). Cora's husband has left her with a truck-stop cafe where she has taken in Walter (Sam Martin), a newcomer to the town and a newcomer to Cora's bed. A trucker (Eddy Coppens) stops every few days to fuel up and share some conversation over coffee.

Patsy Johnson (Christy Moore) is the small-town beauty, a girl who desperately wants to escape her humdrum existence. She accuses old Skelly of looking at her through her bedroom window, watching her undress. Her parents, Mavis (Nichole M. Preston) and Peck (Bryan Douglas) and brother Josh (Fred Urfer) downplay the incident, but the incident alienates Skelly even more. Skelly has become a subject of derision by the town's young men.

Patsy's best friend is Lena Trullitt (Jennifer Singer). Lena, kind and affable, is Patsy's alter ego. She shares Patsy's dreams in running off to marry a better class of boy than can be found in Eldritch, but knows she'll never do it.

This is a cheerless landscape, a bitter life. Its inhabitants bask in self-righteousness and inertia. The young men drive their cars around the square with nothing more to do. As Robert says, "They eat in them and sleep in them and change clothes and drink and get sick and vomit and make out with their girls — ..."

Poor, sweet Eva who talks about autumn and "the hoarfrost, the rime which covers everything, every little blade of grass and every tree and houses and everything. Like it's been dipped in water and then in sugar." Eva who thinks of her world as pure and white.

As the shot rings out and Skelly is felled, the people of Eldritch retreat, retreat into the poverty of their souls.

Karen Copp has directed this play with discipline and an understanding of human frailty. She instills these talented and diverse actors with the idea of community — a community of real people, the good, the bad and the ugly. The repetitive lines, the resonant exhortations of the preacherman, and the soft hymnal renditions have a hypnotic effect.

Think and plan

Serious thinking is required regarding youngsters' activities for Halloween. If done and executed properly, it could be a memorable evening. If not, disaster could result.

There are several points to bring out concerning the need for safety and protection for the children. We'll discuss some of this more extensively prior to the October 31st event.

Right now, pre-planning is the most pressing need. Now is the time when parents seek a costume for the small-fry. Some of the youngsters may absolutely demand they want a certain costume. If it doesn't appear safe however, don't buy it no matter how they may carry on.

One of the big needs is for adequate ventilation in masks, as well as large eye-holes for proper sight. Preventing a youngster from seeing a passing motorist or other danger could prove to be a serious problem.

If there is to be a party at your home, again, proper preparation is needed. Be certain there is adequate transportation provided, especially for the very young. By the time Halloween arrives, it will be getting dark much earlier in the day, and darkness causes kinds of difficulties.

Also connected with a home party should be appropriate supervision. Letting a dozen or so youngsters invade a home for a Halloween party and leaving them to fend for themselves could easily result in more problems than a parent wants.

If your children have been invited to someone else's home for a party, do some advance checking to find out the times, whether there will be proper supervision, and how the children will get to and from the party. You may hesitate, thinking that you don't want to appear overly-protective to someone who has invited your children out for the evening, but isn't this an excellent example of "better safe than sorry."

Halloween parties for the youngsters must require thinking, planning, and discussion. Don't just be content with accepting anything which may come along, and that includes club and church functions as well. Be sure everything will be safe, then follow it up to be absolutely certain.

In past years, the few days following Halloween's trick-or-treat activities, we have, almost on a regular basis, carried news stories about injuries and even deaths which occurred during the observance. Almost without exception, they could have been prevented with thinking and exercising caution.

Let's have a good Halloween this year. Start thinking and planning for it now. You'll find everything will go smoother later.

Dark days

There is almost nothing to celebrate in the resolution of the O.J. Simpson trial. Millions of Americans, mostly white, thought Simpson was guilty. Millions of Americans, mostly black, thought he was innocent. All of us, hopefully, recoil at the racism of a rogue white cop. But we are also repelled by the ugly racial appeals of defense lawyers.

In short, the trial shows that after billions of dollars and hundreds of laws, America is just as divided today as we were in the dark days of segregation. If there is hope, it is not in government, or more laws, or our liberal culture or lawyers. The only hope is that before it is too late, white and black Americans realize that, "If God is your Father, than I am your brother."

Dole, Powell: The GOP dream team

Bob Dole crossed paths with Colin Powell recently. Powell mentioned that he had just purchased a house in a fashionable Washington, D.C., suburb. And he informed the Senate majority leader there was another house for sale nearby.

That's all right, Dole told Powell. "I'm interested in a certain house in downtown Washington." They both got a chuckle out of that.

Dole recounted this story to me in a visit last week to his Senate chambers. It seems clear that the Republican presidential hopeful has a genuine affinity with the retired general turned celebrity author.

All of which raises the following questions: Will Colin Powell run for president? If so, will he run as a Republican or an independent (he's all but ruled out running as a Democrat)? If not, would he be willing to accept the second spot on the GOP ticket? And if so, would Dole be willing to offer it (assuming he wins his party's nomination)?

I was surprised, during my recent visit with Dole, that the favorite to oppose Clinton in November of next year really has no clue about Powell's presidential intentions. That suggests that Dole genuinely views Powell as a potential rival. That he doesn't think the retired general is simply playing coy with the media and the public to pump up sales of his best-selling autobiography.

But, then, I really don't think that Powell will run for president. While I'm sure he fancies the idea of sitting in the Oval Office, I'm not so sure that he wants to subject himself to the ordeal of campaigning for the White House.

He'd have to raise at least $50 million over the next year. He'd have to log maybe a million miles of travel from state to state. And he'd have to completely surrender his privacy to the political press which enjoys nothing more, it seems, than cutting down to size a larger-than-life figure like the former chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

It seems clear that the Republican presidential hopeful has a genuine affinity with the retired general turned celebrity author.

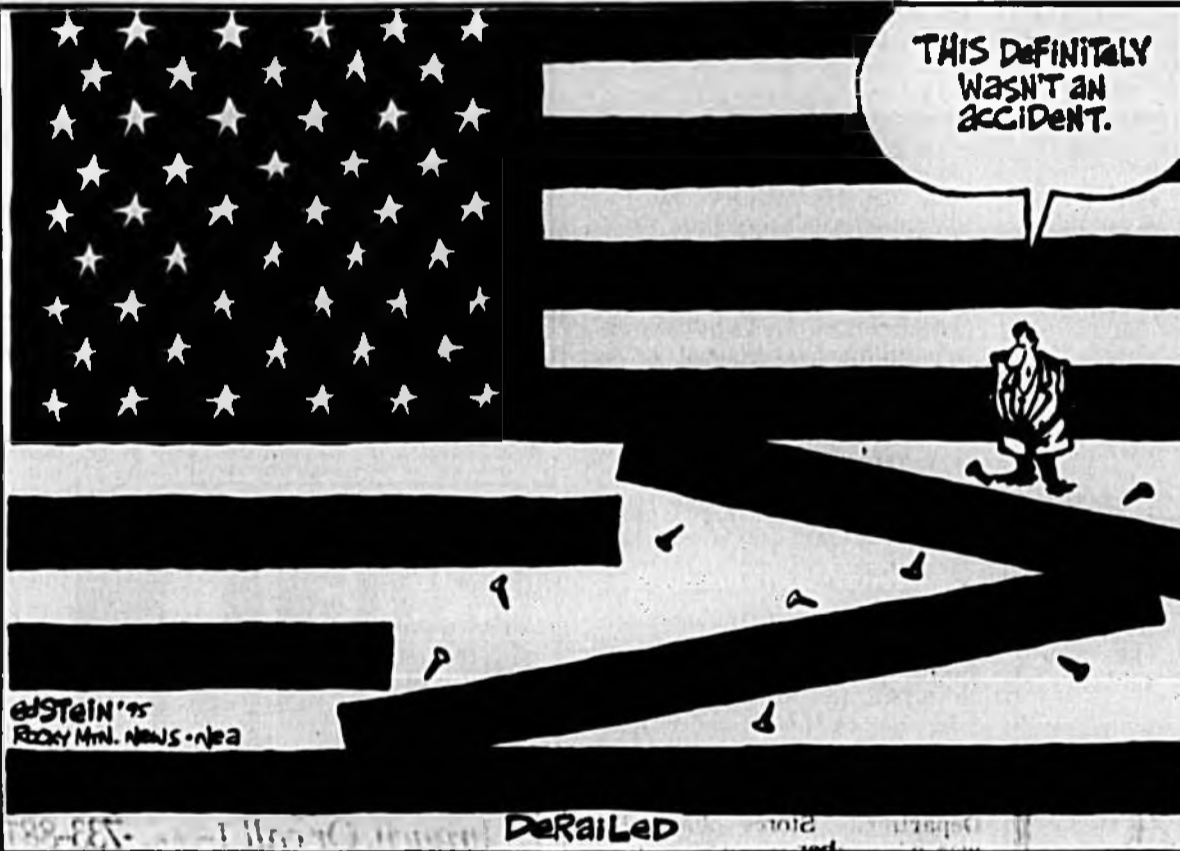

Powell will decide that the price of a presidential bid is higher than he is willing to pay. But he'll also decide - I wager - that a vice presidential nod is in his price range. And since Clinton's got a running mate and Powell's not about to play second banana to Ross Perot or some other independent candidate, that leaves him and Dole on the Republican ticket.

Such a political merger would be a win-win proposition for both Powell and Dole.

Here's how Powell wins: As the Republican standard-bearer, the onus would be on Dole, rather than Powell, to raise the bulk of the money they would need to win the White House. Whatever millions Powell brought in would be gravy.

Dole would be expected to spend the most time on the road stumping for votes. Powell would spend less time on the campaign trail, pinching hitting for Dole when he was faced with conflicting, but equally important, engagements in different parts of the country.

As the presidential nominee, Dole would be expected to face most of the Republican ticket's media scrutiny. As the vice presidential nominee, Powell would be spared the media dissection of his life and political philosophy that almost certainly would occur if he were at the top of the ticket.

O.J., not pope, captures U.S.

What does it tell us about America that 150 million people - the largest audience in history - watched the culmination of the O.J. Simpson trial on all of the major TV networks, but that not one of the networks went live to cover any of Pope John Paul II's messages?

It's more evidence of a sick popular culture in which ratings-mad media give people the sensations it has trained them to demand, and at the same time deprive people of the inspiration they crave on the grounds that there's no market for it.

Whether intentionally or not, the pope's messages were an antidote to the poison injected into the nation's bloodstream by the O.J. controversy. His speeches contained repeated reminders of the unique success the United States has had in blending disparate ethnic groups - and repeated calls for the United States to live up to its heritage by welcoming immigrants, helping the poor, and reconciling our differences.

The pope's words, almost certainly on purpose, were a rebuke to the priorities of congressional Republicans, whose prevailing everyone's-on-their-own philosophy seems drawn more from the writings of Ayn Rand than the Gospels many Republicans profess to revere. The pope preaches a doctrine of solidarity, emphasizing "we're all in this together."

The pontiff's words could have sparked a lively series of debates on television had not the media been fixated on O.J. and preoccupied with keeping the public fixated on it. Even high-IQ shows like "Nightline" were forced, as during the trial, to devote hour upon hour to the O.J. aftermath.

The media turned the murder trial into a national obsession itself representing cultural decline. In this national myth, Nicole Brown Simpson is a fast-lane Deaddeona, and O.J. is a low-life Othello - no great and noble general, but a wife-beating former football player, lousy actor and TV pitchman.

Now, unable to let loose of O.J. as a ratings and circulation winner, the media - TV in the lead, magazines and newspapers tagging along - are wallowing in the diagnosis that America is hopelessly divided racially. No one is constructively discussing remedies, least of all the country's political leaders.

This is the moment for President Clinton, Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., Speaker Professor Newt Gingrich, R-Ga., retired Gen. Colin Powell, and others to mount their bully pulpits and speak to the divisions and ills of America, offering solutions and not just rhetoric.

Instead, the next person arriving on the media screen is Louis Farrakhan, whose "Million Man March" offers white America yet another excuse to, as Ayn Rand would recommend, "shrug" instead of shouldering its responsibilities to heal the American family.

The leader of the Nation of Islam and his co-sponsors of next Monday's march claim that its purposes are spiritual - "atonement," "rededication" - but media attention is concentrated on Farrakhan's record of racist and anti-Semitic diatribe.

Black America - all of America, for that matter - desperately needs a spiritual awakening to find its way out of the cultural morass, but it's doubtful such a thing is going to be led by a prophet who extols Hitler and claims that Jews were responsible for slavery.

It's still unknown whether O.J. Simpson will show up at the march or not, but it would be demoralizingly fitting if he did. Along with Farrakhan, he is a symbol of black defiance toward white America. Farrakhan decrees that blacks should separate from white America, while O.J. suggests that a rich black can beat the system just like a rich white. Both men project poor messages to black young people, but at the moment they are dominant in the media and the mind of America.

On the other side of the racial divide, whites are being offered the most divisive possible interpretations of the problems of black America in books like Richard Herrnstein and Charles Murray's "The Bell Curve" and Dinesh D'Souza's "The End of Racism." The former suggests that blacks, on average, are genetically inferior to whites, while the latter claims that white racism, past or present, has had little to do with black poverty and social pathology - or even with slavery!

If there's a path out of the swamp that America is in, it has got to lie partly in a vastly improved education system. As a Washington Post survey demonstrated, Americans are so ill-informed that whites think that blacks comprise 24 percent of the national population and Hispanics, 15 percent, when the true figures are 12 percent and 9.5 percent, respectively. Blacks and Hispanics are just as ignorant of basic facts about the nation's makeup.

Not one of the networks went live to cover any of Pope John Paul II's messages.

U.S. becoming U.N. deadbeat

UNITED NATIONS - In celebration of the U.N.'s 50th anniversary, more heads of state will be gathered in New York this weekend than at any other time or place in history. But only one of them will be forced to wear the Emperor's new clothes: President Bill Clinton, whose country has now become the superpower of deadbeats.

No matter what Clinton says in his speech, the other leaders will be listening with the knowledge that America is far behind on its payments to the U.N. - and that the Republican Congress has no plans to make amends. Knowledgeable sources here and in Washington have told our associate Dale Van Atta that the Republicans' ill-advised plan to defund the U.N. will precipitate its worst financial crisis ever. No one knows better than readers of this column the flaws and failings of the U.N. We have needed the organization in the past, and will do so again in the future. But no survey will show that Americans want to shut down the U.N. - though many object to putting American troops under foreign command. If polled, we'd bet that a majority would come out against making poorer countries bear the brunt of America's recalcitrance.

America's deadbeat status dates back to the Reagan administration. When Reagan left office in 1989, the United States was already $300 million in arrears to the world body. Presidents Bush and Clinton managed to get the debt down to $212 million - while keeping the country generally current with its annual assessments. This year will be the exception.

The United States is supposed to pay about $315 million to the regular U.N. budget this year. Added to the outstanding debt, the total bill comes to $527 million, according to U.N. figures. (American officials dispute some of the sum.) In addition to the regular budget, America also owes, by its own admission, at least $742 million for peacekeeping assessments. The grand total: At least $1.27 billion overdue to the U.N.

Among the hardest-hit victims of the Republican budget cuts will be the U.N. peacekeeping budget. Republicans have long argued that the United States shouldn't be asked to pay 31 percent of all peacekeeping operations, as was the case until Republicans rammed a bill through Congress last year ratcheting that down to 25 percent. Although that bill produced the perennial grouting at U.N. headquarters here, it pales in comparison to what's in store.

Neither the Senate nor the House currently has a spending bill that would cover even half of what America owes for peacekeeping this year. The House bill proposes paying only $425 million. The Senate bill calls for even less - $225 million, or a quarter of what will be owed.

Behind the scenes, White House officials have discussed the possibility of covering the difference with a supplemental appropriations bill - which is what last year's Congress did. According to one State Department source, however, "Congressional leaders told us not even to bother sending the request over. It won't even get a hearing."

And that's what makes this year different from the others. America's debt was never taken too seriously in the past because U.N. officials knew the money would eventually come. With almost no hope of getting paid this year, however, officials are having a difficult time planning for future needs.

The other leaders will be listening with the knowledge that America is far behind on its payments to the U.N.

NATIONAL BRIEFS

Uniform policy for deadly force

WASHINGTON — After hearing a drumbeat of criticism of the FBI's unique shoot-on-sight rules in the standoff with white separatist Randy Weaver, the Clinton administration has adopted a uniform policy for federal agents' use of deadly force, officials say.

Attorney General Janet Reno has approved the new policy, administration officials said Tuesday.

Under the policy, law enforcement agents may use deadly force only when they have a "reasonable" belief there is an imminent danger of death or serious physical injury to the agents or others, said the officials, speaking on condition of anonymity.

The policy also spells out conditions under which agents may shoot in circumstances involving fleeing felons and escaping prisoners, they said.

Deputy Attorney General Jamie Gorelick was to announce the new policy today during an appearance before a Senate subcommittee that has been looking into the deadly 1992 siege at Ruby Ridge, Idaho, the officials said.

Reliance increases

WASHINGTON — A Pentagon plan to use perhaps 2,000 or 3,000 reservists in any U.S. force sent to Bosnia for peacekeeping is an example of increasing reliance on America's citizen soldiers.

Reservists, who typically are in uniform one weekend a month and for an annual two-week training session, make up about one-third of the total U.S. military. But they play a more active role now than during the Cold War.

Gen. John Shalikashvili, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, told senators Tuesday of the likelihood that reservists would be given a Bosnia peacekeeping operation as part of a U.S. contingent of 20,000 heavily armed troops.

He gave no details on what missions they might perform. Typically, however, an Army-dominated operation such as Bosnia would require reservists for combat support jobs such as heavy-lift helicopter crews, medics and transportation crews.

It was not immediately clear whether the Pentagon intended to amass the 2,000 to 3,000 reservists by asking for individual volunteers, as is often done, or by requesting presidential authority to mobilize entire units.

Global system to contain disease

WASHINGTON — Chimpanzees in the Ivory Coast get the deadly Ebola virus every other autumn, but doctors have never had the money to study them for clues about the baffling disease that kills people quickly and horribly.

Now the United Nations' World Health Organization is starting the first global system to contain emerging diseases like Ebola fast when they infect people, and eventually to prevent them through such research as a now-pending study of those chimps.

"This is a new way of acting for WHO," said Dr. David Heymann, who describes the emerging disease division he started Oct. 1 as the agency's "first kind of SWAT team effort."

It's a poorly funded team, he admits. Heymann has a two-year budget of just $1.5 million to send in doctors within 24 hours when a new disease strikes anywhere in the world, and to raise research dollars.

Take Ebola, a usually fatal virus that lurks in some unknown animal species, attacking people every dozen years or so. It killed 245 in Zaire last summer, U.S. and European experts had to await visas to enter Zaire before they could treat the victims and contain Ebola's spread.

Heymann's program holds U.N. passes to enter at will, something he predicts will cut by a week the time it will take to contain the next emerging disease outbreak.

Federal arson charge

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — A white principal who threatened to cancel the prom if interracial couples attended may have set an arson fire at the high school because his job was in danger, a defense lawyer said.

But prosecutors alleged that Christopher Lynn Johnson, a black activist's son, was so angered by the principal's threat that he set the fire that destroyed the school in August 1994, after months of racial turmoil.

Johnson, 25, a poultry worker, was implicated in tape-recorded statements that were expected to be presented today in his trial.

A jury of four blacks and eight whites was chosen Tuesday to hear federal arson charges against Johnson, who also was charged with possession of a destructive device. He faces up to 30 years in prison if convicted.

Bands

the 21st annual Seminole County Band Festival, sponsored by the Sanford Optimist Club and the Sanford Herald, will fit the bill on Saturday evening.

Don T. Reynolds Stadium at Lake Mary High School will be the site of the festival which will bring all six Seminole County high school bands together for performances uninterrupted by athletic competition.

The festival is not a competition, though the bands will be performing under competition conditions, Audrey Ogden, the secretary/treasurer of the Optimist Club and one of the organizers of the festival, said.

"It gives them the chance to look at the other bands and to get out and perform under competition conditions," she said. "And it gives them the opportunity to get the kinks out before they go out there and start competing outside the county."

The festival is an opportunity for the schools to raise money for their programs through the sale of tickets to the event. The money raised is used to purchase uniforms, to pay for travel to competitions or to purchase instruments and music for the band members.

According to Terri Pattishall, band director at Lake Mary High School, there are close to 1,000 students from all the schools combined who will take part in this year's festival.

"All the bands have at least 100 members," she said. "And some of us are at 200 or more. I think there are at least 1,000 kids who will benefit from this festival."

This year's festival will feature a special presentation by John Blair, the former arts and music director for the Seminole County school district.

Blair, who oversaw much of the band festival activities for many years, will return this year to narrate the reading of the Pledge of Allegiance and the Preamble to the Constitution during the mass band performance before the event begins.

Money raised through program ad sales for the festival is used to finance a $500 scholarship to one band member who will be selected by the Seminole County Bandmasters.

At this year's event, Sheriff Don Eslinger will be on hand to present each band with a trophy to commemorate their participation in the event.

Tickets for the event are $2 for adults and $1 each and may be purchased from band members, from members of the Optimist Club and at the Sanford Herald office.

expensive to operate than schools on a traditional calendar.

Some board members did express their displeasure with the recommendations of a second committee which suggested that single track elementary schools and all middle schools be placed on a common calendar that would mirror the high school schedule. That committee recommended the common calendar for the 1996-97 school year begin Aug. 7 and end on May 23, with no intersession times for remediation.

Parents have been clamoring for a return to a more traditional calendar that gives families more time together, especially in the summer when they would be able to take long vacations together. Orange County schools have recently decided to revert from year round to the traditional calendar.

The calendar committee found that teachers overwhelmingly disliked the year round schedule and parents, though not by as large a margin, also wanted to return to a more traditional calendar.

Board member Nancy Warren argued against the common calendar saying that it would return the district to the days when students were left to fend for themselves through a long, hot summer with nothing to do.

"I don't believe that would be fair to the students," she said. "And that is not in anyone's best interest."

While teachers have argued the need for remediation is increased as students get more breaks throughout the school year, some board members believed the intersessions are a better time to do remediation than at the end of the traditional schedule (summer school).

Board member Jeanne Morris expressed her displeasure in the recommendation by the schedule committee that failed to provide any intersession time in which remediation could occur.

A bronze for Tribe

Seminole boys clinch a tie for third in SAC

By GARY COATMAN
 Herald Sports Writer

OVIEDO — Seminole got six service points from Greg Pegram and five more from Erick Ho Tuesday during a 15-4, 15-12 win over Oviedo in a battle for third place in the Seminole Athletic Conference.

Before the match, the Lions honored graduating seniors Travis Weeks, Ken Reel, Jason Eans, Rob Holtery and Jose Cebollero. Oviedo coach Dale Reichard spoke highly of the five players after the match.

"I've had four good years from my seniors," Reichard said. "They have done a lot for the program, and I'm really going to miss them next season."

Pegram finished the match with nine kills, nine blocks, five digs and three aces for Seminole, while Spangler finished with five assists and one service point. Pegram, Ho, David Campbell, Sam Juinto and Chris Louwsma combined for eight service points to put the Tribe ahead 8-0 in game one.

"Overall, I liked the way we pulled together and did what we had to do," said Seminole coach Beth Corso. "Toby Spangler did a good job running the floor, and Greg did a good job on the front row."

Justin Weeks, Cory Radford and Brad Combs combined for four service points to pull the Lions within 9-4. Juinto, Louwsma and Brent Bradshaw then closed out game one for Seminole, anchored by four service points by Bradshaw.

"We started so slowly in game one," Reichard said. "I can't complain about this season. We have had more wins this year than we have the last two seasons combined."

Weeks and Matt West teamed up

The trio of Sam Juinto (No. 11), Brent Bradshaw (No. 2) and Chris Louwsma had a major hand in Seminole whipping Oviedo to ruin Senior Night for the Lions and clinch at least a tie for third in the SAC for the Tribe.

Weird happenings in Chase Softball

What's Cooking?

The art of stir-frying a dish with flair

By SHARI BRODIE
Herald Staff Writer

SANFORD — The days of home cooked meals with all of the family around the dinner table are fewer and far between now with dual-income families, non-stop schedules loaded with extra-curricular activities and the greater accessibility to food prepared in the restaurant setting, but the art of cooking is far from dead.

As people "eat out" more, the more they are exposed to different cultures and styles of cooking. And, the more they enjoy the food they eat in restaurants, the more they want to try and cook it themselves. This trend has been noted by the proprietors of stores that specialize in cooking utensils and other kitchen equipment. One such store recently opened in Seminole Towne Center.

Butterfields etc. joins two other locations, in the Altamonte and Florida malls, all owned and operated by Larry and Sandie Ivers. The specialty store caters to people who like to cook and carries all of the latest utensils and equipment to meet the needs of an increasingly popular pastime.

"We try to carry things that people can't find everywhere," said Kathy Pizzola, assistant manager at the Altamonte Mall store. "More people are trying to learn how to cook." Pizzola said and the trend is toward cooking food from different cultures instead of perfecting Mom's recipe for meatloaf.

Another trend that brings people into stores such as Butterfields is an emphasis on healthy cooking, cooking with less oil, cooking in woks and cooking with steam. The store carries all of these things and takes it one step farther. They will show you how to do it!

Using items featured in the store, cooking demonstrations are held on a regular basis at all three locations. Done by a professional demonstration company or sometimes by employees such as Pizzola, the demonstrations have proved to be very popular with the clientele. On occasion, celebrities such as Graham Kerr, whose cooking shows air on public broadcasting and cable channels, or Sophie Kay, well known in this area for her Daytona Beach restaurant, will do demonstrations. Or the demonstrations will feature a line of utensils used by other renowned cooks.

A recent demonstration featured the stir-fry cooking made popular by Joyce Chen in her restaurants in the Cambridge, Mass. area, in her cookbook and on her nationally broadcast public television series "Joyce Chen Cooks."

"Stir frying is a fast way to cook good healthy dishes," Pizzola said. "Healthy, because stir frying locks vitamins and natural flavors into the food." Butterfields carries a full line of Chen's products, including pans, oils, utensils, steamers and cookbooks, some of which were demonstrated at the Seminole Towne Center and Altamonte Mall stores.

As a service to our readers, the Sanford Herald will carry the schedule for demonstrations to be held at the Butterfields etc. at Seminole Towne Center every Wednesday on this page. For more information on upcoming events, contact the manager, David Pineda at 322-4060.

STIR FRY SPINACH

This is a quick and healthy way to cook fresh spinach. Be sure to wash loose spinach thoroughly to rid it of all grit and sand. All Chinese, including my whole family, are fond of leafy, green vegetables. The small amount of sugar in the recipe brings back the natural sweetness of just-picked vegetables.

- 1 lb. fresh spinach
 - 2 TBS cooking oil
 - 2 cloves garlic
 - 1/2 tsp salt
 - 1 tsp sugar
- Wash spinach several times in cold water and drain well.

Heat oil in wok or stir fry pan over high heat. When oil is hot add garlic and salt. Stir a few times and then add well-drained spinach.

Stir fry until spinach begins to wilt, then add sugar and continue stirring until well wilted, about one to two minutes. Spread flat on shallow platter and serve immediately. Serves four.

BEEF WITH MUSHROOMS

- 1 lb. beef, preferably flank steak
- 4 TBS stir fry sauce (Szechuan, zesty or lemon)
- 1 TBS corn starch
- 4 TBS stir fry oil (Szechuan or savery)

6-8 oz. fresh mushrooms, cleaned and sliced

Cut beef across the grain into thin (1/4") slices, not more than 2" long. In a mixing bowl, combine beef with stir fry sauce and corn starch. Set aside.

Pour oil into wok or stir fry pan. When oil is hot, add mushrooms and stir until they begin to wilt, about one minute.

Add beef mixture and continue stirring until beef is done, about two minutes. Serve immediately. Serves four to six.

Forbidden love brings man lifetime of pain

DEAR ABBY: I can answer the letter from "Upset and Impatient," the married woman who was waiting for her married lover to leave his wife.

I cheated on my wife for years. Then, about 10 years ago, I had an affair with a woman and we fell in love. When you are "running around," it's always under ideal conditions and for short periods of time. Everything is well-planned, and you always look your best. It's romantic, forbidden and exciting.

But we really didn't know each other.

The love we thought we couldn't live without destroyed our lives and caused untold pain to our families. We gave up children, our careers and our homes for a marriage that lasted only three years.

Since that time, I have remarried. This wonderful woman has taught me how to be faithful to her, and to myself. My daughter lives with us and she has forgiven me, but she has not forgotten. My son, who is younger, still carries scars from my neglect.

I have spent more time trying to repair what I messed up than I ever did enjoying myself. When people cheat, the pain they cause is always greater than the pleasure they get. Please tell your readers this.

HOME LOVER, NOT WRECKER

DEAR HOME LOVER: Thanks for the testimonial. Forbidden fruit may taste sweet at first — but it spoils faster. If your letter causes just one person to stop and reconsider, it will have served its purpose.

DEAR ABBY: Please do not bother us Texans with advice from Californians about how to deal with the heat.

My experience as a lifelong Texan who has visited California tells me that its reputation as warm and sunny is all marketing. (I was the only one around with a tan in May.)

"Cool Lady in Fort Worth" was absolutely right: It takes all night to cool off enough to mow here. And as for the grass needing all night to recover — tough!

A man once wrote that if he owned Hell and Texas, he would rent out Texas and live in Hell.

How to curb hair growth on face

DEAR DR. GOTT: I'm a 40-year-old woman of Italian extraction. I have always been troubled by facial hair. As I've grown older, the hair growth is getting worse. Is there a hormone I can take to solve this problem? I appreciate any advice you can give, because I'm very embarrassed to ask my doctor about this.

DEAR READER: Excess facial hair in women is frequently a genetic trait. As you've noticed, the situation is worsened by age, because less female hormone is produced in the body and it's estrogen that prevents facial hair growth.

Rather than fight your genetic pattern, you may be more content treating your facial hair with cosmetic techniques, such as bleaching, waxing or electrolysis.

However, some women with your problem do, indeed, have a hormone imbalance. This can be caused by ovarian or adrenal gland disorders - or, even, early menopause. Therefore, you should bring your problem to the attention of your doctor - or, better still, to your gynecologist.

Using appropriate blood tests, the doctors should be able to determine if your hormones are in balance. If there is a deficiency, estrogen replacement may solve your immediate problem, as well as improve your general health.

DEAR DR. GOTT: I suffer from boils. Would I be helped by adding Lysol, bleach or vinegar to my bath water?

DEAR READER: Probably not. These skin infections are usually caused by staph bacteria that enter the skin's pores and cause inflammation.

Such infections are more common in diabetics, so you should have a blood sugar test to make sure you don't have diabetes.

Also, if you work in a dirty environment, you must scrub thoroughly each day. Many patients have discovered that anti-bacterial soaps - such as Dial or Lever 2000 - will reduce the incidence of boils by killing many of the staph bacteria that normally inhabit the skin. In some cases, prescription antibiotics may be necessary to eradicate the bacteria.

With the thought that you might decide to be tested for diabetes and would like further information on this condition, I am sending you a free copy of my Health Report "Diabetes Mellitus." Other readers who would like a copy should send $2 plus a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope to P.O. Box 2017, Murray Hill Station, New York, NY 10150. Be sure to mention the title.

WIN AT BRIDGE

By Phillip Alder

Bridge is a fight for every trick, but at least - usually - no one gets physically hurt. You don't have to worry about the warning that you shouldn't fight an ugly person because he has nothing to lose. Bridge players care only that an opponent's cards come from the same deck.

Today's deal was played by four players from different ethnic origins - but it doesn't matter which four.

South overbid slightly with his three-spade rebid, but his hand was a good trick above a minimum opening.

Against four spades, West led the heart king; four, eight, two. In a successful effort to stop declarer's heart ruff in the dummy, West switched to the spade six.

South had nine tricks, but with the heart ruff presumably out the window, he had to generate a 10th trick somewhere else. Clearly, the best chance was to find the opponents' clubs dividing 3-3. But if South drew trumps before playing on clubs, the defenders would cash two more heart tricks.

The clubs had to be established immediately. After winning trick two in hand, South ducked a club in both hands. Then he won the spade return, drew East's last trump, cashed the club king and played a club to dummy's ace. When clubs did divide evenly, one of South's heart losers disappeared on the 13th club.

Paraphrasing Alan Jay Lerner in "My Fair Lady," they're always throwing trumps at you, but with a little bit of luck, a man can duck.

HOROSCOPE

By Bernice Bede Osol

YOUR BIRTHDAY
Oct. 19, 1995

In the year ahead, you're likely to be more enterprising and courageous than you've been in the past. Things should work out to your advantage, provided your boldness doesn't supersede your sound judgment.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Guard against inclinations today to foolishly fritter away your money. Buy only what you need, not what your extravagant urges demand. Know where to look for romance and you'll find it. The Astro-Graph Matchmaker instantly reveals which signs are romantically perfect for you. Mail $2.75 to Matchmaker, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 1758, Murray Hill Station, New York, NY 10150.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Although you are a capable person, try to remain realistic regarding your limits today. Avoid putting your reputation on the line by promising to do something you can't.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Weigh your comments carefully today when conversing with a friend who has a low kindling point. Thoughtless remarks could produce sparks.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) One of your friends might be a trifle too curious today about something you consider confidential. Keep a tight lid on your secret because this pal might try to find it out elsewhere.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) You might ignore your better judgment today and yield to an associate who historically makes poor decisions. This could make a bad situation worse.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) A failure to respect the abilities and intelligence of co-workers today could generate a squabble. Select your criticisms very carefully.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Try to regard the responses you get from others reasonably today. Do not misinterpret a friend's independent demeanor as a sign of disloyalty.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Strive for unity in family matters today. Bickering and hard feelings could result if you fail to show a willingness to cooperate.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Your work and possibly the productive efforts of co-workers could suffer today if you're careless and impatient. Keep your mind focused on what you are doing.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Money might have a way of slipping through your fingers today. If there are holes in your grasp, you'd better get them plugged up immediately.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) If a family member does something that displeases you today, you'll probably erupt in anger. However, you might show extremely tolerance with outsiders who commit the same infraction.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Do not seethe silently today if someone you like inadvertently takes advantage of you. Bring it out into the open so it can be rectified.
