Long way to ride

LAKE MARY — A female deputy sheriff conducted a traffic stop Monday morning on Interstate-4, near Lake Mary. It was not a vehicle however, but a nine-year old boy seen riding his bicycle in the eastbound lane.

According to sheriff's spokesman Ed McDonough, the deputy asked the boy what he was doing, and he responded that he was riding his bike from his home in Forest City, to see his father in Massachusetts.

The boy was identified as Anthony Depell, a third-grader at Riverside Elementary School.

The lad was taken to the Lake Mary sheriff's facility where his mother was summoned. There were no charges filed.

"It isn't like the old days," commented McDonough. "Years ago, if deputies brought in a youngster, he would be given candy or crayons. This young man spent his waiting time by using one of the sheriff's department computers to write a letter to his mother."

New school

OVIEDO — The groundbreaking ceremony for the new Carillon Elementary School, at 3200 Lockwood Blvd. in Oviedo was scheduled for 1:30 this afternoon. The new $8.8 million school is scheduled to open in January 1997.

Murder arrest

ALTAMONTE SPRINGS — Altamonte Springs police have made an arrest in connection with the Oct. 13 reported murder of a 16-year old Longwood girl. The body of Jessica Marie Deneweth, whose address was listed as 611 Palmetto Avenue, Longwood, was found on Oct. 13 at River Oaks Apartments. The girl's body was discovered in the trunk of a vehicle reported as stolen.

On Oct. 25, Altamonte Springs detectives identified Terrell Carlton Glee, 23, of Altamonte Springs, as the prime suspect in the case and an arrest warrant was issued. Glee was located yesterday by Eatonville police who were called regarding a domestic violence situation.

Glee has now been arrested on a charge of murder, and as of this morning, was held in the Orange County Booking Facility.

Family Affair day

SANFORD — The Seminole County Extension Family and Community Education Volunteers will host their annual Family Affair Day at Flea World this Saturday from 10 a.m. until 2 p.m. Representatives of over 50 agencies will have exhibits on Y row inside the Flea Market.

The purpose is to showcase resources available to low income families in Seminole County. Families will also have the opportunity to receive free immunizations, HIV testing, blood pressure checks, first aid, fingerprinting, and other health-related services during the event.

Flea World is located on U.S. Highway 17-92, in Sanford.

Accident update

SANFORD — John Alexander Mowrey, 83, has been charged with violating the right of way in an auto accident in which his wife Emma, also 83, was killed.

The accident, which occurred last week at the intersection of Towne Center Boulevard and Rinehart Road, happened when Mowrey turned into the path of a car driven by Monte Olinger.

Police said Mowrey mistakenly turned in front of Olinger's car which struck the passenger side door.

Neither drugs nor alcohol are suspected in the accident.

Public housing residents who commit crimes will be evicted

By VICKI DeSORMIER
Herald Senior Staff Writer

SANFORD — Those who live in Sanford's public housing have got to stay within the law if they want to continue to live there.

A rental agreement addendum that must be signed by every current resident and everyone who hopes to move in to a housing authority apartment states the residents who are arrested on charges dealing with illegal drugs or with violent crimes will be evicted.

"It's time to draw the line," Timothy Hudson, the interim executive director of the Sanford Housing Authority, said. "We are not going to wait for residents to be convicted of a drug related or a violent crime to start eviction proceedings. If they are arrested, they will be evicted."

The lease agreement, ratified two weeks ago by the authority, was developed in cooperation with the Sanford Police Department, Hudson said.

Sanford charter changes

Residents may vote on 3 issues

By NICK PFEIFAUF
Herald Staff Writer

SANFORD — Proposed changes in the Sanford city charter appear headed for the city's December election. They may be presented under three separate items on the ballot.

Almost all of the changes recommended by the city's Charter Study Committee were accepted during a commission workshop yesterday afternoon although nothing is locked in concrete. Their assignment to the ballot won't be official however until formally voted on during a regular commission meeting.

The three separations of the items are the result of discussion toward singling out two sections for separate approval, with the third item to

State probably won't sell farmers' market

By VICKI DeSORMIER

SANFORD — The state's first farmers market, operating in Sanford for more than six decades, may close its doors soon if state auditors have their way.

The Sanford State Farmers Market, a familiar landmark at the intersection of 13th Street and French Avenue (U.S. Highway 17-92) has been in operation since 1934.

It first opened its doors at a time when celery was king and Sanford was a thriving agricultural community.

In recent years, agribusiness has waned in Seminole County, leaving few farmers with little to ship through the farmers market.

A recent state audit concluded that the state farmers markets in Sanford, Starke and Pompano be sold in order to save the state thousands of dollars.

Sanford's decline came with the rapid suburbanization of much of Having a ball saving the environment

The students at All Souls Catholic School in Sanford have learned some important lessons about reusing resources to save the environment. Recently, the students brought in used aluminum foil and made small balls in each class, the balls were then formed into the larger ball representing the collection from the whole school. Reynolds Aluminum weighed the collection and purchased it for recycling. At top, assistant principal Trish Futrell talked to the students about the recycling project they had undertaken. At center left, Ben Louwsma presented Larry Pressley of Reynolds Aluminum with the Pre-K class' 5.2 pound ball. At center right, fourth graders Karen Holloran, Damien Frank and Christina Poindexter carry their ball to the scale. At right, Reynolds paid the school $250 for the 101.5 pound ball the school collected.

Expansion planned for Lake Howell High School

By VICKI DeSORMIER
Herald Senior Staff Writer

SANFORD — Lake Howell High School has from its inception been crowded into its facility on Dike Road in Winter Park.

In an effort to allow for some growth at the school, the Seminole County school board will discuss plans this evening to purchase additional land adjoining the property. In addition, the board will discuss the plans that are taking place to rebuild much of the 20-year old facility that currently houses the school.

The Lake Howell campus is smaller than any of its counterparts in the district and students have been crowded into buildings that are not adequate to house the number of students enrolled in the school, officials said.

District officials say they want to purchase additional property adjacent to the campus in order to make room for additional building construction and additional practice fields for the school's athletic teams.

Diane Kramer, the district's executive director for facilities planning, said the school district staff is looking at the purchase of two pieces of land that abut the Lake Howell campus.

One piece of property is a 5-acre site to the south of the school. The asking price for that land

Officials seek rock throwers

ORLANDO — Nobody's been hurt, yet, but hooligans have been throwing rocks and chunks of concrete at cars from Orlando-area expressways and, so far, have damaged 13 vehicles.

"They don't realize something like that could really kill somebody," said William Prueti, whose Ford Bronco was hit on the roof as he drove on the East-West Expressway recently.

Officials are taking the incidents seriously. They have offered a $6,000 reward for information leading to a conviction.

State Attorney Lawson Lamar plans to charge the rock throwers with attempted murder and, if necessary, charge any teen-agers as adults.

Orlando police may start monitoring overpasses and interchange ramps on major highways, department spokesman Mike Holloway confirmed Monday.

Eight vehicles were damaged along Interstate 4 ramps this past Saturday.

"As the previous lease stood, residents could harbor people involved in criminal activity," Hudson said. "That is no longer the case."

The lease states the "tenant, any member of the household, will not permit the dwelling to be used for, or to facilitate criminal activity, including drug-related criminal activity, regardless of whether the individual engaging in such activity is a member of the household or guest."

The lease states that the person accused of the criminal activity "shall not require criminal conviction, but shall be by a preponderance of the evidence."

Hudson said the housing authority wants to provide a safe, drug free environment in which the residents can live.

"We have to force people to become self-sufficient," he said. "We will do what we need to do to make that happen."

Hudson said rules must be made and enforced in order for any changes to take place in Sanford public housing.

"If you have no rules, you will self-destruct," he said.

The housing authority has also changed their policy to give authority management the option of refusing a residence to anyone who comes up on the availability list who is on probation or who has been convicted of a crime.

"Under my administration, someone like that would not be placed," he noted.

The annual review of residents who already live in the public housing will now also include a background check for convictions or arrests. Those who have been arrested for a violent or drug-related crime within the last year will be evicted.

"We are working on a number of other policy changes," Hudson promised. "We are going to make public housing safe and sanitary for our residents."

The housing authority plans to consider policy changes regarding trespassing on public housing property and regarding raising the security charge for those who are admitted as residents.

Right now the security deposit is $100 per household. Hudson would like to see that raised to as much as $300.

"You can't even buy 10 gallons of paint with $100," he said. "And if it is more, the residents are more likely to take pride in their homes."

The housing authority will work closely with the Sanford Police QUAD squad to make more arrests for drugs and violent crimes.

The QUAD squad works closely with the public to find and terminate criminal activity. Tenants, in the lease addendum, agree to "report the suspicion of criminal activity or activity that may threaten the health, safety or welfare of other residents."

Hudson believes the more stringent lease agreement and the policy changes being implemented by the authority "will make a difference" in the quality of life in Sanford's public housing.

The housing authority has been without an executive director for six months. Hudson is one of three candidates being considered for the position. The interim director, who is doing double duty as the authority's financial director, is anxious for a decision to be made.

NEWS FROM THE REGION AND ACROSS THE STATE

School vaccinations done for meningitis outbreak

By The Associated Press

FORT WALTON BEACH — A public health doctor says only time will tell if emergency vaccinations given to more than 9,000 children will halt an outbreak of meningitis that has killed one child in the Florida Panhandle.

"We know the immunity level of the vaccinated population will go up," Dr. Matthew Kinzelman said Monday.

Seven other cases of the disease have been confirmed during the past month in the Fort Walton Beach area, but none in the last week, said Kinzelman, director of the Okaloosa County Public Health Unit.

However, a 2-year-old child from Panama City, about 50 miles east of here, contracted the disease over the weekend and was listed in critical condition Monday at Sacred Heart Hospital in Pensacola.

Many of the children who received vaccinations in Okaloosa County are dependents of military personnel at Eglin Air Force Base and adjacent Hurlburt Field.

The Air Force supplied vaccine and medical personnel to assist public health nurses and emergency medical technicians in giving the vaccinations Saturday and Monday.

On Saturday at Fort Walton Beach High School, they inoculated 2,884 pre-school children and older youngsters living in the target area but attending schools elsewhere. Kinzelman said.

Vaccinations were given Monday to 4,250 children at seven schools in the target area, which includes the southern portion of Fort Walton Beach and suburbs of Cinco Bayou and Mary Esther.

Another 680 children have received shots at the Public Health Unit and 1,200 at Hurlburt Field, Kinzelman said.

Twin brothers Josh and Joey Kimrey, 4, of Fort Walton Beach, were among those who shrieked and cried as they were inoculated Saturday.

"It's worth it," said their father, Bob Kimrey. "This whole thing has made everybody nervous. We are very glad they are doing this."

Kinzelman said he expects only about 200 more vaccinations to be given at one of the schools.

The disease attacks the brain membranes and spinal cord and can be caused by bacteria or viruses.

The vaccine protects against the C strain, the most common form of bacterial meningitis, which caused four of the Okaloosa cases, and three other bacterial strains, including Type Y, which caused one Okaloosa case.

But it does not protect against Type B, which caused two of the Okaloosa cases, or viral meningitis, which is considered non-contagious.

Two-year-old Nicholas Dolan of Fort Walton Beach died of meningitis on Jan. 19, but the strain that caused the disease could not be confirmed, Kinzelman said.

The Panama City patient, Brandon Pierce, had been in a child care program at Tyndall Air Force Base. As a precaution, up to 48 children who may have had contact with him there and their parents and care givers are being seen by doctors and treated with an oral antibiotic.

Divorce doc tax illegal

By The Associated Press

MIAMI — Tens of thousands of divorced, property-owning Floridians could get back hundreds of dollars each after a judge declared they were illegally charged for document stamps.

The ruling stems from a lawsuit Nariela Bautia filed against the Florida Department of Revenue after her 1994 divorce from Juan Bautia.

She got the couple's house — and a $282 bill from the Dade County Clerk's office for document stamps. The stamps represent a tax for transferring the ex-spouse's half of a home deed to the other spouse.

"The collection of the documentary stamp taxes was a valid collection," says Jarrell L. Murchison, an assistant attorney general in Tallahassee.

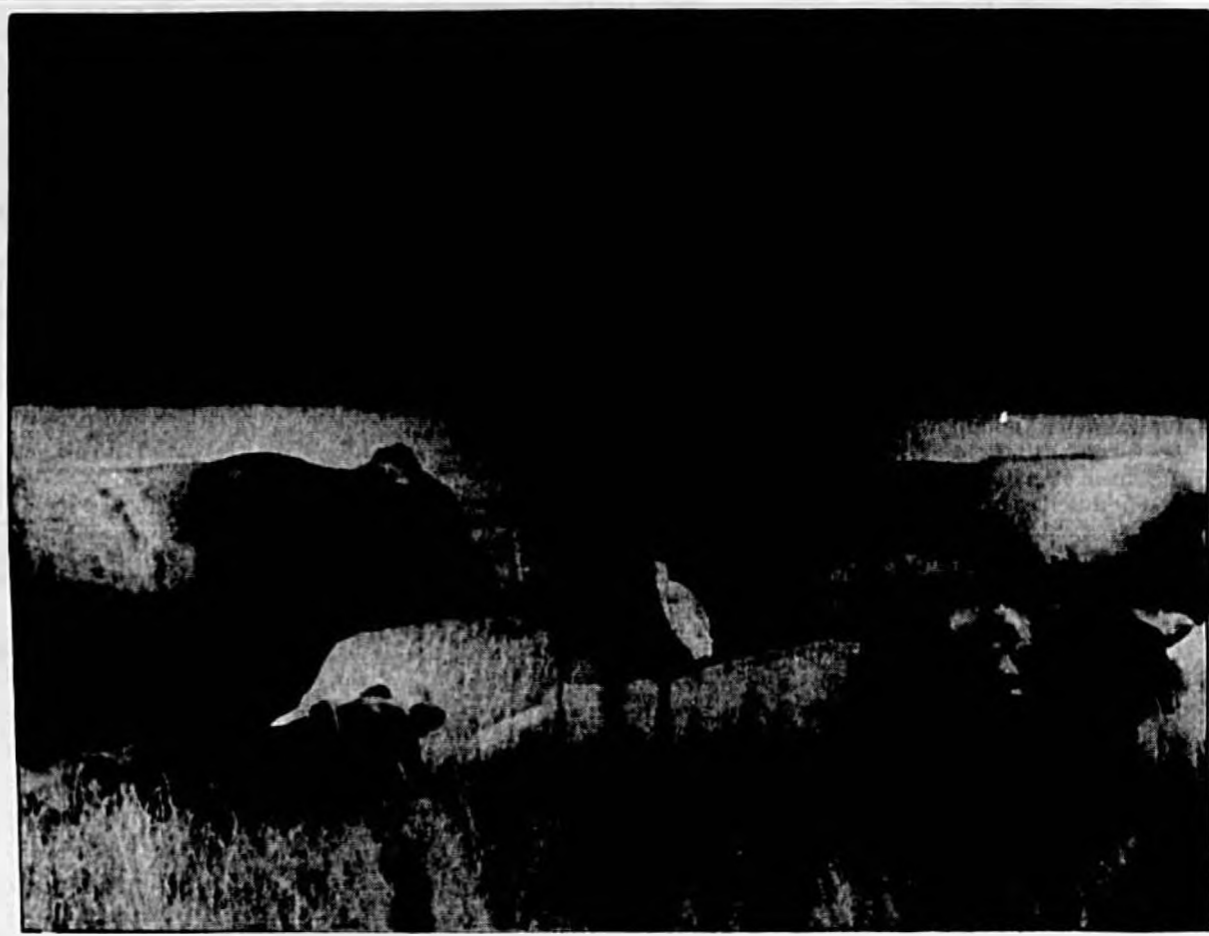

Earlier this month, Circuit Judge Juan Ramirez Jr. ruled the tax is "illegal and improper."

The judge also agreed to make Bautia's case a class-action lawsuit.

Lazy days

Bovines and birds in Sanford have an easy life. This group, which hangs out near Richmond Avenue near East State Road 48, didn't have much to talk about recently, but they enjoyed one another's company. Lazy winter afternoons in central Florida offer these friends the opportunity to enjoy some cool breezes and light sunshine before the burning days of summer arrive.

is approximately $400,000.

The other is a 6-acre site to the east of the school which is owned by several people. The total asking price of the site is about $470,000.

The first site has only one house on it. There are several houses on the second one. In either case, the houses would be razed.

The school district has already exceeded its $20 million renovation budget at Lake Howell High School, Kramer said. The board will need to discuss the possible additional spending to expand the campus.

In order to save money at the school the board has already made cuts in the renovation of the school, including eliminating lockers from the facility. All other Seminole County high schools have lockers.

The board will consider elimination of a second gymnasium and a multipurpose facility on campus in order to have more money for expansion.

The board will meet this evening at 7 p.m. in the board room at the Educational Support Center, 400 E. Lake Mary Boulevard in Sanford.

St. Pete among presidential debate sites

By SALLY BUZZESE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — St. Petersburg, Fla., St. Louis and San Diego were chosen by an independent commission Monday as the sites for three presidential debates this fall.

Hartford, Conn., was chosen for a vice presidential debate. The recommendations of the private, bipartisan Commission on Presidential Debates, led by former top officials of the Democratic and Republican parties, still needs to be approved by the separate campaigns.

In 1992, the debates were staged partly as the group recommended. But under pressure from then-President Bush's campaign, a panel instead of a moderator conducted one debate and half of another. Then-challenger Clinton's campaign also pushed to let audience members ask questions in one meeting.

This time, the group recommends presidential debates Sept. 25 at Washington University in St. Louis, Oct. 9 at St. Petersburg's Bayfront Center and Oct. 16 at the University of San Diego.

The vice presidential debate would be Oct. 2 at Hartford's civic center.

"We sit down and pick the dates that don't run into big TV obligations — the baseball playoffs and the World Series, especially," said commission spokeswoman Janet Brown.

The commission wants a town-hall format in one debate, and the presidential candidates standing behind lecterns in a second.

In the third — and also in the vice presidential debate — the candidates would be seated and less formal than usual.

School problem

Sanford police were called to Hamilton Elementary School at 1501 E. Eighth Street in Sanford Friday, in response to a dispute situation resulting from a classroom incident. School officials reported a boy caused a problem in a classroom and they had called the boy's mother, identified as Michelle Denise Inman, 29, to the school.

According to the arrest report, the mother reportedly became irritated during the questioning, and punched one school employee and threatened another, as well as striking her son. As a result, the woman was arrested on charges of battery on a school employee, assault on a school employee, and child abuse.

Cans, not bottles

Sanford police investigated two reported fire bombing calls Sunday. In both cases, the incident reports said that the bombs consisted of Coca Cola cans, which had been apparently filled with gasoline.

Only one of the two cans was said to have been ignited. That was reported in the 2400 block of Elm Avenue. One witness reportedly told police a white male juvenile was seen running from the area at the time.

The second situation was reported in the 2400 block of Myrtle Avenue, approximately one block away. This time, two persons were believed to have been in the area at the time, but the can filled with gasoline was apparently not ignited.

Beer theft

Clifford Leroy Adams, 19, of 80 Sanford Court Apartments, was arrested by Sanford police Friday at his residence. According to the arrest report, a burglary had been reported at a convenience store in the 3100 block of Sanford Avenue, at which time beer and cigarettes were reportedly taken. Police said when they searched the area, they discovered a man's drivers license on the ground.

By checking with the owner of the drivers license and two other individuals, police were reportedly led to Adams. They said four cartons of cigarettes and four 12-packs of beer had been taken during the incident. Adams was charged with burglary and petit theft. Police were reportedly continuing their investigation into the case.

New policy is a good one

It may sound rather harsh to some people. Residents of Sanford's public housing can now be evicted as the result of an arrest for criminal activities. Previously, the requirement has been for a conviction, which was rarely enforced.

In considering this, imagine what would happen if everyone could be ousted from their private residences as the result of just an arrest. All who become involved in domestic violence at their own homes, or who rob another person's property would be kicked out of town. We could only imagine where they would go, or how soon it would be before our buildings are half empty.

But this is not the case. It deals only with public housing, areas which have been created through money obtained from tax dollars, areas which are supported by the public.

For public housing residents who may be arrested but never found guilty of committing a crime, this may appear to be severe punishment. Innocent or guilty, they could lose their homes. Yet there must be a starting point in the drive to reduce crime.

Judging from the arrests made by members of the Sanford Police QUAD-Squad, the Special Investigative Unit (SIU) and the Sheriff's City County Investigative Bureau (CCIB), it shouldn't come as any surprise that the various public housing projects, not only in Sanford but throughout the county, are the focal points for many area drug sales.

Naturally, drug related activities lead to additional crimes. In order to purchase drugs, many criminals resort to residential, business or vehicular burglaries. When disputes arise, the crimes may even expand to assaults and even murder.

We commend the efforts of our area law enforcement officials, the city commissioners, and housing authority officials such as Timothy Hudson, interim executive director. The problem has long been identified. We see this as possibly the first step toward resolving it.

We don't want to see anyone evicted from their homes, for any reason. We also want to see a drastic reduction in criminal activities in our public housing areas.

There are a great number of fine, honest and outstanding people living in public housing. They deserve better living conditions than what our criminal element is bringing about. And if it means ousting those who come in conflict with the law to accomplish this, then many will benefit.

Welfare reform

The recent blizzard dominated the national news and buried a big story. That story is the president's veto of a historic welfare reform bill. The veto blocked $60 billion in budget savings. But that's only a small part of it.

The real news is that the president's veto keeps in place the same family-destroying welfare system he once vowed to change. During the 1992 campaign, Bill Clinton said he would end welfare as we know it. His veto does just the opposite. Experiments in encouraging welfare recipients to gain skills and find work? The president says no. Incentives to states to reduce illegitimacy without increasing abortions? No. Time limits on welfare to end long-term dependency? No, again. Improved child support enforcement? Once more, no.

Welfare reform should have been the president's issue. Instead, he has used it to portray his political opponents as heartless. But it isn't heartless to look for ways to build families, boost personal charity and give the downtrodden a hand up, not a handout. President Clinton told America he understood this. Two weeks ago, he proved he does not.

Clinton: Hail the Great Pretender

As President Clinton delivered his State of the Union soliloquy this past week, an old song came to mind -- "The Great Pretender." Because, since he first campaigned for the White House, Clinton has demonstrated a knack for saying all the right things, but never following up his words with deeds.

Let's go to the videotape. In his State of the Union message, the president lamented that "More and more Americans are working without a raise." He added, "We need a tax credit for working families with children."

But since Clinton has been in the Oval Office, the government has raised taxes on working families and everyone else. Indeed, Treasury Department figures for 1995 showed that individuals wrote $20 billion more in checks to satisfy their obligations with the Internal Revenue Service than the year before. That 30-percent increase in individual tax payments last year was directly attributable to the 1993 Clinton tax hike.

The president told the American people that, "For too long our welfare system has undermined the values of family and work." He also asserted, "Congress and I are near agreement on sweeping welfare reform."

But Congress sent a sweeping welfare reform bill to the White House for the president's signature and he promptly vetoed it. That's because Clinton is not really committed to "ending welfare as we know it" (and as he promised it during his 1992 presidential campaign).

Indeed, Clinton proposed his own welfare reform plan in 1994. Had it been enacted by the Democrat-controlled Congress, it would have added an additional $9.3 billion in welfare spending over five years (as if $1.2 trillion wasn't enough). Moreover, Clinton's plan would have applied only to welfare parents born before 1971, who make up only one-third of the welfare caseload.

We saw the same inconsistencies in Clinton's pronouncements this week about education. "I challenge every state to give all parents the right to choose which public school their children attend," he said.

Clinton has demonstrated a knack for saying all the right things, but never following up his words with deeds.

But when the president and first lady decided which school their beloved daughter Chelsea would attend, they did not limit their choices to public schools in the District of Columbia. They placed their daughter in privately run Sidwell Friends because, as they said, "we believe this decision is best for our daughter."

Well, there are a number of poor and moderate-income parents whom the president professes to be so concerned about who would like nothing more than to enroll their daughters or sons in Sidwell Friends or some other private academy if they had sufficient means. But the president would deny them government-funded vouchers that would give them the same school choices that rich parents like the Clintons now enjoy.

The president used the occasion of his State of the Union address to introduce his new "drug czar," Gen. Barry McCaffrey, outgoing chief of the U.S. Military's Southern Command. "To succeed, the president noted, "he (the general) needs a larger force than he has ever commanded."

MORTON KONDRACKÉ

Will Bradley run in 2000?

As President Clinton embarks on his final campaign by appealing to groups across the political spectrum, Sen. Bill Bradley, D-N.J., is getting ready to launch an idealistic "new Progressive movement" that may lead to a presidential candidacy in 2000.

President Clinton's State of the Union message, launching the 1996 presidential campaign, was a triumph of triangulation, partly lifted straight from the Republican agenda, partly designed to preserve traditional Democratic programs, and culminating in a centrist appeal for "common ground."

Bradley, meanwhile, has written a book and laid out an agenda reminiscent of Clinton's 1992 campaign -- critical of both Republican and Democratic nostrums and passionately dedicated to change, some of it quite radical.

Bradley was a staunch supporter of Clinton in 1992, campaigning for him in 27 states. Gradually, though, friends say he became so disillusioned with Clinton's seeming lack of conviction that he seriously considered challenging the president for the 1996 Democratic nomination.

Bradley decided not to run, he said in a recent interview, because Clinton was "too far ahead" in money and support.

Instead, having announced his retirement from the Senate after 18 years, Bradley soon will produce a new tax reform plan and is planning to travel around the country promoting his platform: driving out special-interest money from political campaigns, a combination of economic growth and fairer distribution of wealth, racial healing, and "spiritual renewal" grounded in participation in civic organizations.

Asked about a presidential candidacy in 2000, Bradley says, "At some point I could easily see myself doing that, but as the old saying goes, you have to plow the fields before you can reap the harvest."

Former aides and close political friends say they are convinced that Bradley fully intends to run in 2000, believing that "his time" may finally have arrived.

If he runs, Democratic political pros speculate that he'll be in a crowded field consisting of front-runner Al Gore, Sen. Bob Kerrey (Nebr.) running for a second time; "New Democrat" Sen. John Kerry (Mass.), if he's re-elected; House Minority Leader Richard Gephardt (Mo.) or Rep. David Bonior (Mich.), representing trade-union liberalism; possibly Sen. Jay Rockefeller (W.Va.), also a liberal; and perhaps a formidable woman candidate like Sen. Dianne Feinstein (Calif.).

Bradley says in his engaging new book, "Time Present, Time Past," that being a senator is "the best elective job in the world," but he complains to interviewers that the issues addressed by most politicians today

"have the breadth of postage stamps" while the country's problems are "continent-wide."

He said that he has two potential role models for his task ahead: Jean Monnet, the French economist who crusaded for European unity, and John Gardner, who organized the clean-politics lobby, Common Cause.

Bradley's most radical proposal -- puritanical and ultimately destructive, in my opinion -- is to "take the money completely out of politics" by limiting the cost of congressional campaigns to whatever can be raised in-state by income-tax checkoffs whose proceeds would be equally divided among qualified candidates.

Voters could support their favorite candidates with no more than a $100 primary campaign contribution. Bradley would eliminate PACs, independent expenditures, and financial aid from political parties and would amend the Constitution to prohibit wealthy persons from financing their own campaigns.

Political communication would be carried on mainly by a requirement that all TV and radio stations serving a state furnish two hours of free time to each candidate on the condition that they agree to debate.

Free media time is a good idea, but the rest of it is bound to diminish the volume of information available to citizens. Particularly when voters are furious with their politicians, they likely will refuse to contribute to a state's campaign fund, thereby making it difficult for anyone -- challengers, especially -- to get a message out.

Bradley believes, though, that "democracy is endangered by money" and that campaign finance reform is the "great uncompleted task of the Progressives," like Presidents Teddy Roosevelt and Woodrow Wilson.

Bradley also borrows from the Progressives the notion that government should be the guardian of the average person against the depredations of corporations, which he thinks are in the process of "destroying the middle class, arguably the finest achievement of American society in the last hundred years," through technology, downsizing, and profit-seeking.

Bradley decided not to run, he said in a recent interview, because Clinton was "too far ahead" in money and support.

Castro appears as strong as ever

WASHINGTON -- To paraphrase Mark Twain, the reports of Fidel Castro's death have been greatly exaggerated.

The Central Intelligence Agency has been predicting for years that the 69-year-old Cuban dictator's health is deteriorating. Others have speculated that Castro's spirit was broken by the collapse of Communism in Europe, a development that cut off his cash flow and crashed the Cuban economy.

Now in his 37th year in power, Castro still shows no signs of fatigue. Americans who have visited the dictator in recent months describe him as fit and energetic. Since attending the funeral of former French Prime Minister Francois Mitterrand, Castro has been privately waxing philosophical about life and seems to be approaching his job with renewed vigor.

"The people who say he's in ill health are out of their minds," one American who recently spent a lot of time with Castro told us. "He walks slowly, but his mind is still crystal clear."

A notorious night owl, Castro still shows flashes of the unpredictability and obsession with detail that have been key to his staying-power. When Rep. Bill Richardson, D-N.M., visited Havana a few weeks ago, he was kept in the dark about the exact time of his meeting with Castro. A call finally came at 9 o'clock one night directing him to show up at Castro's palace immediately for dinner with the dictator.

Castro refrained from talking at first, choosing instead to size up his guest. Shortly thereafter, Richardson and Castro began a discussion -- in Spanish -- that lasted until nearly 4 a.m.

Though his island remains economically isolated from the United States, Castro keeps a keen eye on events on the mainland. He peppered Richardson with questions about the presidential election, California's controversial immigration initiative, Proposition 187, and the simmering Medicare debate in Congress. He also revealed to Richardson what may be the real reason he wants an end to the 33-year-old U.S. trade embargo of his country: Baseball. An avid fan, Castro said his dream is to have a Havana-based team in the U.S. major leagues.

Once a boozier and womanizer, Castro has now become something of an ascetic. He eats a diet of mostly fish and gave up his beloved cigars three years ago under doctor's orders. His dark-stained teeth, however, still bear the evidence of years of smoking his favorite cigars, the ultra-expensive Cohiba brand.

One thing he hasn't lost, however, is his famous oratorical skills. He would go ballistic each time Richardson mentioned the name of a political prisoner, growling impatiently and waving his hands in the air in expressive gestures.

Perhaps the surest sign of Castro's good health is that he still can't resist taking jobs at his northern neighbor. He is well aware that his venerated status among the world's despots and potentates would never have happened without the plottings of several U.S. presidents. Like Saddam Hussein, he takes no small delight in the fact that he's been able to outlast his enemies. "I've outlived eight U.S. governments," Castro recently explained to one confidant. And no matter who wins the U.S. presidential election next year, Castro said, "I'm still going to be here."

To paraphrase Mark Twain, the reports of Fidel Castro's death have been greatly exaggerated.

Charter

be the remainder of the proposed changes.

The two include the proposal to move the city elections to March rather than holding them in December, and reassigning the control of the police and fire chiefs to the city manager rather than the commission.

While the remainder of the charter changes appeared to receive a unanimous consensus vote of the commissioners last night, both of the individual items drew split votes.

Regarding moving the elections, commissioners offered a number of suggestions.

"Why should we consider March," said Commissioner Kerry Lyons. "What difference would it make?"

"I've been involved in two runoff elections since I've been in office," said Mayor Bettye Smith, and they took place just before Christmas. I'll tell you, it's hard to do. December is the worst possible time to campaign for an election. I would really go along with moving it to the spring."

Commissioner Whitey Eckstein agreed that they shouldn't be held in December as they are now. "At that time of year it's hard to raise money for a campaign," he said, "especially with so many other people wanting campaign donations and doing their holiday shopping at the same time. Also, if the city election is at the same time as state and national elections, the city ends up taking a back seat and local matters get put on the back burner."

At the beginning of discussion, Commissioner Lon Howell said he would suggest September elections. "That's usually when everyone comes out to vote on primaries," he said. And people who really care will know just as much about the issues and candidates in September as they would in March."

Later in the discussion, Howell charged his mind and voiced approval of March rather than September.

Commissioner Bob Thomas commented, "We shouldn't underestimate the intelligence of the voters." Thomas indicated he would support the March election suggestion.

Although there was some discussion on the city elections possibly being held at the same time as primary or general elections. Mayor Bettye Smith explained that this could not be done. "There are different polling places for districts in comparison to precincts," she said, "and because some of them overlap, it would not only cause confusion, but some people may have to go to more than one place to vote."

Commissioner Kerry Lyons said he didn't think there would be more of a voter turnout in March than there might be in September. "But one way I think the voting numbers could be increased," he said, "is to have our election day on a Saturday when people may have more time."

"Right there you would run into a problem," responded City Attorney Donna McIntosh. "For some of our people, Saturday is the Sabbath, and it wouldn't be fair to them any more than holding elections on a Sunday for other people."

Although a general agreement was not reached regarding the concept of moving the election to March, enough commissioners appeared to support the proposal.

Regarding the transfer from commission control to city manager control of both the fire chief and police chief, the Charter Study Committee had stricken the city charter section which called for the positions to be filled by appointment of the commission.

It would leave control over both chiefs strictly under the city manager. Commissioner Lon Howell was against the change, with Lyons indicating he agreed with Howell.

"Large corporations are undergoing all kinds of department head turnover," Howell observed, "and I think the city commission should have that right as well. If we turn this over to the city manager we will be losing that control."

Howell said he would prefer both positions not fall under Civil Service control, and both come under the supervision of the commission.

"I can see the chiefs' points in this," said Eckstein. "Under commission control, they actually have five separate bosses, and that could be difficult to work with."

"But the commission is most concerned with crime," Howell said, "and the police have the biggest part of our city budget, so we should continue to have control over the police."

Commissioner Thomas disagreed, saying he believed the city manager should have the choice over the police and fire chiefs.

"It won't matter which way this goes," said Mayor Smith. "Crime is going to continue anyway. But frankly, I don't envy anyone who has a job with five bosses."

"One thing I will have to say about Chief Russell," Howell observed, "is that he doesn't delve into politics, he concentrates on enforcing the law."

Smith cautioned the commissioners to stick to a discussion of management of these departments, and refrain from bringing politics into the proposal.

Thomas, pointing at Simmons, said, "I think this gentleman right here is more than capable of making these decisions."

"It works now," responded Simmons, "mainly because we have a good police chief and a good fire chief, but it may not always be that way."

Mayor Smith summed up the discussion. "I believe I am hearing at least three members of the commission in favor of putting this on the ballot, so we'll leave it at that right now."

Simmons said from this point, he would like to give copies of the proposed changes to the city staff, in case they might have any recommendations of things to be considered. "Then we'll bring it back in smooth form to the commission," he said.

It was determined that the two matters would be separated from the remainder of the changes in order for individual commissioners to possibly express their views to the public prior to the voting, or lobby in favor of all the changes.

There was no immediate indication when the proposed changes would be brought up for a formal vote by the commission. With such a vote however, the changes would not be official until approved by the voters, at the city election scheduled for December of this year.

speak for the record, said they are not worried that the doors will be closed any time soon.

They referred all calls to the Tallahassee office of Carl Penn. The auditors from the Office of Program Policy Analysis and Government Accountability have suggested that the market be sold to independent investors or transferred to local government control.

The report states that such moves with the Sanford and the Starke markets could save the state approximately $29,000 annually.

The Sanford market does show a slight profit from its contracts with truckers, farmers, packers and brokers. Last year, the local market earned about $4,383 in profits over the course of the year.

Penn, a representative of the state Department of Agriculture, said he didn't believe the state would have to sell the Sanford market since it was making a small profit.

"There is still a small, but viable agricultural market there," he said.

The Wildcats (8-9, 4-5) handed the Bulldogs (12-5, 7-1) their first Mid-Eastern Athletic Conference loss of the year.

Panthers edge Penguins

MIAMI — Backup goaltender Mark Fitzpatrick slowed down Mario Lemieux and Pittsburgh's high-scoring offense, and the Florida Panthers ended the Penguins' four-game winning streak with a 2-1 victory Monday night.

Lemieux was held without a point for only the second time in 42 games this season.

Fitzpatrick made 23 saves as Florida's defense found a way to shut down Lemieux and Jaromir Jagr, who had combined for nine points in two previous Panther losses to Pittsburgh this season. Jagr had the Penguins' only goal midway through the third period.

Gord Murphy put the Panthers ahead 1-0 with a slapshot 11 seconds into a power play at 2:52 of the opening period.

Florida led 2-0 when Rob Niedermayer's shot from just inside the blue line wiggled between Penguins goaltender Tom Barrasso's legs and slowly rolled into the net at 7:57 of the third.

FAMU falls to N.C. A/T

TALLAHASSEE — Sean Stimpson scored a game high 14 points, leading North Carolina A&T to an 81-59 win over Mid-Eastern Athletic Conference rival Florida A&M Monday night.

The Rattlers (6-13, 1-8) opened the game with a 13-5 run, building a nine point lead. Midway through the period, however, they were outscored 16-2 by the Aggies (8-8, 5-2) as 10 of their 11 players scored.

Players say they no longer fear Magic's return

By ROB GLOSTER
AP Sports Writer

OAKLAND, Calif. — Tim Hardaway has visited AIDS patients in children's hospitals. He has read about the virus and its transmission. He has attended NBA Players Association discussions about AIDS.

The result, Hardaway says, is that he knows a lot more about the virus than he did a few years ago. And the Golden State Warriors guard says that explains why most players no longer fear Magic Johnson's return to the NBA.

Hardaway and his teammates will be the opposition tonight when Johnson, who retired in 1991 after testing positive for the virus that causes AIDS, plays his first game back with the Los Angeles Lakers. "I'm not going to back off him," Hardaway said. "I'm going to slap the ball out of his hands. He's just like a regular person."

In 1992, when Johnson planned a return, several NBA players expressed concern about the risk of catching the AIDS virus from him — leading Johnson to decide against a comeback.

But doctors have since largely discounted the possibility that the virus could be spread through the rough and tumble of pro sports, and players have become better educated about the virus and its transmission.

"Back in college, you really didn't think about it. Then Magic came along with the virus," Hardaway said. "Now, when you go to all these hospitals and stuff, they educate you on the virus."

Warriors forward Jerome Kersey said Johnson's open discussion of his health has been a big factor in his peers' education about the virus.

"I think you've got to look back and say it was a great thing that he did by coming out and standing up to it," Kersey said. "When you first heard of Magic having it, you thought you could get it if Magic breathed on you. It's not one of these things that's taboo now."

As Johnson was announcing his return to pro basketball Monday, the Warriors were becoming the first team to designate an NBA game as a benefit for AIDS care, research and education.

The timing of the two announcements was coincidental — the Warriors had been planning the AIDS benefit for several months and had scheduled Monday's news conference days before.

Kersey joined Warriors officials in announcing the Feb. 7 contest against the Chicago Bulls will be designated as the league's first "Until There's a Cure" game — with proceeds of premium ticket sales, a pregame reception and an auction going to local AIDS organizations.

The San Francisco Giants have held similar benefits the past two seasons, raising about $100,000 each time, and the San Francisco 49ers raised about $50,000 with their "Until There's a Cure" day this past season.

The money is used to support AIDS education programs and development of a vaccine.

Warriors coach Rick Adelman said he expects some players will still be leery of getting physical with Johnson.

Are hot tubs, whirlpools disease-free?

By Peter H. Gott, M.D.

DEAR DR. GOTT: I have a question posed by my senior citizen group. Are there any diseases I can catch by going into a spa whirlpool with other people? Does it matter if they are naked?

DEAR READER: There are several skin infections that can easily be contracted in hot tubs and whirlpools. In fact, "hot tub dermatitis," a superficial skin infection, is a common complication of such activity. In general, such infections are easily cured by antibiotics.

While it's true that these water therapies are beneficial for many elderly people — and are just plain fun for the young — there is some risk of infection, no matter how thoroughly the hot tubs and whirlpools are cleaned. Nonetheless, many people enjoy this therapy so much that they are willing to accept the small risk of skin irritation.

DEAR DR. GOTT: My husband is 47 years old. His cardiologist says he has cardiomyopathy. Because of this, he can no longer work. Please explain what this condition is and outline any limitations it might impose on his activity.

DEAR READER: Cardiomyopathy is a medical term denoting malfunction of the heart muscle, which has become flabby and inefficient, leading to difficulty breathing and exercising. Cardiomyopathy has many causes, ranging from alcohol abuse to arteriosclerotic coronary disease. Also, the condition is frequently associated with thyroid diseases and virus infections of the heart.

Cardiomyopathy, unlike angina and similar heart afflictions, does not cause pain. Rather, the primary symptom is breathlessness.

The diagnosis usually requires a battery of tests, including a chest X-ray, electrocardiogram, ultrasound exam, and blood analysis.

Treatment includes medication (such as ACE inhibitors) to reduce the work of the heart, diuretics (to rid the body of excess fluid), and digoxin (to strengthen the heartbeat). Even with therapy, however, the prognosis is poor: 70 percent of patients die within five years.

On a happier note, most patients with cardiomyopathy are excellent candidates for heart transplants. Because of the complexities of the disorder, patients with cardiomyopathy should be under the care of cardiologists. For obvious reasons, such patients must severely curtail physical activity.

To give you more information, I am sending you a free copy of my Health Report "Understanding Heart Disease." Other readers who would like a copy should send $2 plus a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope to P.O. Box 2017, Murray Hill Station, New York, NY 10156. Be worry. Well, I am worried. Should I get a second opinion?

DEAR READER: During the performance of a Pap smear, the doctor customarily feels the uterus and ovaries, and examines the cervix. Harmless cysts are common in the cervix and ordinarily need no treatment or follow-up, because from month to month, they may appear or disappear.

Because your Pap smear for cancer was normal, I doubt that you need a second opinion — unless, of course, you are experiencing symptoms, such as abnormal vaginal bleeding, pain or a heavy discharge. Ask your gynecologist about this.

WIN AT BRIDGE

It's those alternatives again

By Phillip Alder

A Chinese proverb is: "Of all the 36 alternatives, running away is best." I wonder what the other 35 might be.

Luckily, in bridge deals, you never have 36 possible lines of play. Even half a dozen are extremely rare. In today's deal, there appear to be two possibilities, but one is much better than the other. How would you play in four spades against the lead of the club queen?

The immediate reaction is to laugh when you see that you have all 13 trumps. Then you ruff in the dummy and take a diamond finesse. But at that point the smile fades from your face. West wins with the king and switches to the heart 10. However you turn, the defenders take three heart tricks to defeat the contract.

True, you were unlucky to find both key honors wrong. But what else did you expect in a newspaper column? And you should have made the contract! At trick one, you should discard one of dummy's diamonds. After East wins with the club ace, he cannot attack hearts safely. Suppose he switches to a diamond. Win with the ace and lead the diamond queen, throwing a heart from the dummy if West plays low. Even if East wins with the king, he will have to cash the heart ace to stop an overtrick. Here, though, as West has the diamond king, you collect 11 tricks.

In conclusion, how do you think East and West should have got into the auction? As you can see, they are laydown for five clubs. And should West have led the heart 10 at trick one? Sometimes this game is just too difficult.
