In the lawsuit, McMillan asserted the county had no authority to set a deadline to the permit granted in 1990 over the objections of neighbors. Schools are not allowed in agricultural areas without permission from commissioners, under county code.

AAA says travel steady for next year

HEATHROW - Automobile travel will roll along at a steady pace next year, prevented primarily by the economy from growing faster, the American Automobile Association says.

AAA officials said travel by motor vehicle, which accounts for

80 percent of all vacation trips, should increase less than 3 percent next year.

"Overall, AAA believes for many Americans there are still too many uncertainties - over jobs, the economy, crime and health care — for any big increase in auto travel next year," said Richard Hebert. AAA's managing director for public and government relations, in a speech Wednesday at the U.S. Travel Center's annual Travel Outlook Forum in Washington.

Factors that have been positive include strong new car sales expected to carry over into 1994 and an increase in business-related uses of autos, especially combined busi-ness/leisure trips as airlines cut back on short-haul service and car rental rates climb.

Teen sentenced in racial burning

TAMPA -- Christopher Wilson may never forget the gasoline-fueled flames that seared his body in a racially charged attack. But he is willing to forgive.

The 32-year-old black Brooklyn stock brokerage clerk sent word to a judge Wednesday calling for leniency for one of the three white attackers who played a role in the New Year's Day

"You are very fortunate," U.S. District J. Nimmons told 18-year-old Jeffery Pellett in across "that the victim in this case is a person who apparently exhibits no sign of any desire to get even. He has demonstrated an unusual amount of forgiveness."

Pellett, who led investigators to the other two suspects and struck a plea deal to testify against them, received 61/2 years in prison for the federal charge or aiding an armed carjacking. He could have faced up to 25 years.

The judge noted Pellett's relatively minor role in the attack, his cooperation with authorities and a tearful show of remorse.

"I wish there was any way, shape or form I could take back what happened," Pelictt sobbed to the judge, "But what happened, happened. I'm very sorry for everything that happened to Christopher Wilson. Wilson, still recovering from burns over nearly 40 percent of his body, sent word through federal prosecutors to ask for a sentence in line with a plea deal Pellett struck in state court to serve no more than 22 months on a charge of accessory after the fact. Pellett has yet to be sentenced under that deal.

Doctor uncovers fake surgeon

PENSACOLA - The newcomer looked like a doctor, wearing surgical garb and a white coat with a stethoscope around his neck. But one emergency room physician was unconvinced.

That doctor's suspicions, which arose about a week ago, led to the arrest Tuesday of Robert Alexander Austin on a charge of practicing medicine without a license.

Austin had passed himself off as a physician for nearly a year, said Escambia County sheriff's investigator Terry Kilgore.

Skinner told The Tampa Tribune for a story Wednesday that publicity about arrests will improve collections by causing some tax dodgers to turn themselves in and others to decide not to cheat.

The state has spent roughly $596,000 to prosecute the 79 cases assigned to Operation High Profile.

Of that, the revenue department spent $313,256, the FDLE $163,500, and state attorneys throughout Florida an estimated $120,000. That's left a net gain to the state of about $245,000 for the two years.

Revenue department spokesman Jere Moore said the power of publicity - such as images of tax cheats being led away in handcuffs on the evening news - shouldn't be underestimated, but it is difficult to determine just how much Operation High Profile has improved sales-tax compliance.

Whenever these arrests are made, we always get a flurry of telephone calls," Moore said. "But nobody comes in and says. 'I'm paying in full because you arrested somebody last week and I saw it on TV."

He said third-quarter sales-tax collections of $2.4 billion were up more than $400 million from a year earlier, but most of that was attributed to economic growth and

Of the 79 Operation High Profile cases so far, 52 have reached criminal prosecution. Of those, 29 resulted in convictions, with most of the offenders receiving probation. The rest are awaiting trial or possible indictments.

The most recent arrests came Thursday and Friday when FDLE agents arrested five people in West Central Florida on charges they failed to turn in nearly $519,000 in sales and motor-fuel taxes.

Those arrested included owners of restaurants, furniture stores, machinery shops and a dry-cleaning establishment. The state is seeking more than $965,000 to cover the taxes, penalties and interest.

POMPANO BEACH - More arrests and license suspensions are expected in widespread race fixing schemes at the Pompano Park Harness Track, authorities

Five men were arrested and several others had their licenses suspended Wednesday following a yearlong undercover investigation by Broward's Metropolitan Organized Crime Intelligence Unit.

"This is not limited to five or six people arrested here," said the Broward unit's director Ken Staab. "It's an open thing involving hundreds of conversations about fixing races." In addition to the use of steroids and other performance enhancing drugs, race-fixers bribed drivers to hold their horses back or "go dead." authorities said.

Because so many horses and people are involved in each race. it is impossible to assure the outcome, detectives said. But they say a race fixer might bribe half the drivers in a race to make their horses 'go dead' then bet on the remaining horses and improve the chances of a long-

Sen. Donald Riegle, D-Mich., and Rep. Cliff Stearns, D-Fla., have both called for congressional hearings into the "Gulf War syndrome" to try to determine what is causing it and to get help for veterans suffering from it.

Thousands of Gulf War veterans have complained of symptoms that include fatigue, swollen glands, sores, gum boils, chest pains, rectal bleeding, rashes and body aches.

Some have speculated that their illnesses are the result of massive oil fires in Kuwait, bullets made from depleted uranium and the possibility that Iraq used chemical weapons against the coalition of nations involved in the war. In a Monday letter to Rep. Ronald Dellums, chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, Stearns asked for hearings to "investigate the possibility that poisoning from chemical weapons may be the cause of the 'Gulf War Syndrome' that has afflicted approximately 4,000 veterans of the

"When you look at this in terms of the 4,000 veterans who are complaining of Gulf War syndrome, there is enough out there to say to say it might be just from the oil wells, the fumes, or it could be from unintentional release of gas on either side that no one has recognized." More eyes, ears help stop crime

The Sanford police department has a new telephone hot-line, 330-STOP, (330-7867). People are urged to use the phone to report criminal activity or problems.

Note: This is not to be confused with the 9-1-1 number which should be used for emergency calls.

While the number of police officers serving Sanford remains the same, the department now has the capability of having hundreds of additional eyes and ears.

Callers are not required to identify themselves or give a phone number or address where they can be reached. This will be up to the individual caller. However, giving such information could be of help to police in investigating crime activity.

Sanford is not alone in having its share of crime. The entire state and nation also suffers from the acts of those who have no regard for the safety and/or property of others.

The number of people calling for a crack-down on crime seems to be growing daily. The police force however, cannot possibly be at every location 24 hours a day. If the city would have enough officers to accomplish such protection, the cost to taxpayers would be unbelievable. We would end up with what amounts to a military type

What is needed is support from the public. It is not uncommon for a motorist, homeowner, or business person to see a crime actually being committed. Robberies, burglaries, muggings, purse snatchings, car thens or burgiaries are all too common in today's Something must be done. Most everyone seems to agree on that point. If they really support efforts to reduce crime, the people will use the telephone hot-line operation.

We have gone beyond the time when a normal size police department can solve all crime and prevent all criminal activities. The people need to join the fight.

We urge that the new 330-STOP phone number be used. People who report crimes will be a big help to our law enforcement officers and promote safety for the entire city.

Gay rights

Being a gay person I have seen friends discriminated against in housing and employment. If we get harassed it's our problem. If we get attached it's because we provoked it. If we raise our voices we're flaunting ourselves. If we have AIDS we deserve it. If we march with pride we're recruiting children. If we want or already have children we're recruiting children. children we're unfit parents. If we stand up for our rights we're overstepping our boundaries. If we don't have a relationship with the opposite sex we haven't given it a chance. If we have a relationship with someone of the same sex it's not recognized. If we come out of the closet we're just going through

We are told our love is not "real." Our relationships receive none of the legal, tax, job or insurance benefits available for others. We are constantly forced to question our own worth as human beings. Experts estimate that a third of teenage suicides are kids who realize they are gay.

Our history is virtually absent from literature. Our lives are not depicted on television shows or in the movies (except as silly fools or saidstic killers). Respected gay celebrities, who would be good role models and examples, keep that part of their life

We are called promiscuous by the same people who oppose letting us marry, which would encourage monogamy and commitment. When we ask for equality and fairness they say we ask for "special privileges."

Because of all these reasons, and more, I think it is important to be a part of the gay rights movement.

William Stosine Iowa City, Iowa

P.S. I could have added "My gay friends in tenford can't even write a letter such as this to the aper for obvious reasons — they have legitimate oncerns about family, employer, landlord and ersonal safety."

Are liberals really discovering God?

Some of the nation's more perceptive liberals are beginning to suspect that they missed a bet in ceding the whole religious aspect of life to the conservatives. Indeed they did; but can they now reverse themselves and contest that terrain successfully?

In his recent book, "The Culture of Disbelief," Yale law professor Stephen Carter calls attention to the problem, noting that liberals tend to treat "religious beliefs as arbitrary and unimportant, a trend supported by a rhetoric that implies there is something wrong with religious devotion." The liberal establishment. Carter complains (though he is a liberal himself) treats religion as "something quiet, something private, something trivial" — rather akin to "building model airplanes." He even suggests that the Democratic defeats in the 1980s were due in large part to "the relentlessly materialistic character of their campaign rhetoric."

This not only was true but continues to be true - witness the Democratic eagerness to woo pro-abortion Republicans, in the hope of leaving the GOP with only a rump "religious right."

But there are signs that certain liberals have at last noticed the dangerous implications of this strategy. Professor Cornel West, director of Afro-American studies at Princeton, recently spoke out on The New York Times op-ed page against "capitalist materialism" - an objection that dates from Leo XIII's Rerum Novarum but is conspicuous only by its absence in recent Democratic plat-forms. And Michael Lerner, the rabbi who edits Tikkun, a magazine dedicated to Jewish liberalism, recently declared that "our economy rewards the selfcentered and the selfish," and called instead for "a newer paradigm of caring and concern."

Lerner's remarks caught the attention of Ms. Rodham-Clinton, who in April took time out from her labors on health care to lecture 14,000 listeners at the University of Texas on "what our real challenges happen to be." The Arkansas Pasionaria detected in America today "a sleeping sickness of the soul," a "sense that somehow economic growth and prosperity, political de-mocracy and freedom are not enough — that we lack at some core level meaning in our lives and meaning collectively. ... What do our lives in today's world mean? ... We need a new politics of meaning."

Not bad for a Wellesley girl. In a few years, with luck, she may even stumble onto God. For the moment, however, good liberal that she is, her solution is straightforwardly political: "We need a new politics of meaning."

Note that she does not meet Professor Carter's objection, though she may satisfy Professor West. Her purpose is not to take religion seriously, or even to bring religious insights to bear on politics. She simply wants to hijack a portion of the moral content of religion and incorporate it in a "new" politics. Thus she joins the long succession of political leaders from Marx to Mao, who ever since the Enlightenment have been offering their own versions of the truth as substitutes for the outdated prescriptions of

Clinton isn't a worldly student

Today's class, here at the New World (Dis)Order School of Foreign Policy (Mis)Management, begins with a quick quiz and ends with an interim report card.

QUESTION: Name the critic speaking and the policy that fits the criticism: "If you're going to put somebody else's son or daughter into harm's way, into battle, you've got to know the answer to three questions: What's the mission?... How are they going to do it?... How are they going to get out of there?"

(A) Bill Clinton, criticizing Ronald Reagan for ispatching troops to a Lebanon peacekeeping listion in which 241 Americans were killed in 1983?

(B) George Bush, criticizing Reagan for ispatching troops to Lebanon?

(C) Clinton, criticizing Bush for dispatching troops to Somalia, where 18 Americans were killed Oct. 3? (D) Bush, criticizing Bush for dispatching troops to Somalia? (E) All the above?

(F) None of the above?

ANSWER: (E) and (F). That is, the criticism clearly fits all the above; but it was, actually, none of the above. Bush said it the other day, in his first public criticism of Clinton since leaving office. Bush said the troops he sent last December were feeding starving Somalis and "weren't fighting." But Clinton allowed their mission to change without re-answering the three questions.

Bush was right - as far as he went. But he didn't mention this sad truth: It's a lesson we seem to have to re-learn every decade. Nor did Bush say how he would have responded if a Somali warlord began fighting as the United States was withdrawing. He just withdrew. bequeathing Clinton time bombs ticking in Somalta, Bosnia and Heiti.

QUESTION: Who criticized the Clinton administration's Somalia decisions by saying:
"Committing U.S., forces to combat ... requires a great deal of intellectual rigor and tight chain of command, a clear understanding of what their mission is all up and down the line. And that seems to have been lacking in (the Clinton administration).... (Top Clinton officials) were not sufficiently attentive. The fact is that the policy was being managed by ... deputies...." administration's Somalia decisions by saying:

(A) Former Defense Secretary Richard (B) Former Secretary of State Henry Kiss(C) Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole?
(D) Secretary of State Warren Christopher?

ANSWER: (A) and (D). This was a trick question - a composite comment. Cheney spoke the first two sentences on CNN; Christopher, the last two to The Washington

Now, an interim report card — relax, not yours, but the Clinton administration's: Sadly, it's a pass-fail world, and none of his foreign policy high command is earning a passing grade. What we have is a team of managers serving an unseasoned president who desperately needs at least one strong, strategic conceptualizer to help chart America's path in this new world without rules. Secretary of State Christopher: Has performed only as a career negotiatorlawyer; a certified second-in-command (his Carter team role). Hasn't shown that he can see, let alone paint, the big picture.

Defense Secretary Les Aspin: Made one godawful mis-call by just saying no tanks to his field com-mander in Somalia; didn't anticipate a worst-case scenario. I've long respected Aspin, but I wonder if his strategic plan

National Security Adviser Anthony Lake: A sound manager of options, but he can't be all things: shaper, sculptor, painter - and puppeteer.

President Clinton: His fondest (also only) uccesses came where events were largely out of his control — Yitzhak and Yassir's peace in the Mideast, Yeltsin's daredevil survival in Moscow. Yet in his oral exam, he told reporters: "I think that in this new world, we made a pretty good beginning."

It's sad news for us all if our president cannot see that his "pretty good beginning" was really a series of careless, potentially calamitous steps - taken firmly but blindly in a new world of upturned rakes.

If our precious democracy is to survive very far into the new millennium, it will be mainly through the efforts of such principled and courageous and noble people as Anthony chapter of the NAACP fired him as its general counsel Anthony Griffin knows something that too many intelligent people fail to grasp: There can be no such thing as selective freedom. As

Thomas Paine put it two centuries ago: "He that would make his own liberty must guard even his enemy from oppression; for if he violates this duty he establishes a precedent that will reach himself." Anthony Griffin knows that (LT)l(GT)you cannot be secure in your freedom to speak unless you are willing to protect the speech you hate the most.(LT)P(GT) "It is hard ... to give free speech for those we hate," he told a Chicago Tribune reporter, "but that is what the Bill of Rights is all about. It is to protect those we hate, those who stand up on street corners and bother us in public."

How sad that the Texas NAACP, a minority organization that but for the protections afforded by the First Amendment might well be a marginal player in our society, does not comprehend this fundamental concept. "By representing the Klan," the president of the organization told reporters, Griffin "is in direct conflict with the mission of the NAACP."

The truth is exactly the opposite. The First Amendment does not exist to protect the majority's speech rights. What would be the point of a law to defend that which most people believe? It exists to protect minority speech, unpopular speech, the kind of speech that civil rights militants used to press their cause in the face of majority opinion that stood in adamant opposition, armed with dogs and firehoses.

If there were no constitutional guarantee of free speech, would an 80 percent white majority suffer the rantings of Louis Far-rakhan? The harangues of Jesse Jackson?

I'm not so sure.

Thirty years ago, a group of civil rights activists led by A. Philip Randolph published an advertisement in The New York Times censuring the city of Montgomery, Ala., for its treatment of blacks. The ad was fraught with inaccuracies and the police commissioner sued for libel. He was awarded $500,000 and the verdict was upheld by the Alabama Supreme Court. At the time, there was no further recourse. Libel was a matter for the state courts to adjudicate: But the defendants appealed to the U.S. Supreme Court, arguing they had a constitutional right to criticize government

And guess what? The principles of free speech and press once again rode to the rescue of civil rights. The Supreme Court carved out a First Amendment defense for people accused of libeling public officials and New York Times v. Sullivan remains to this day one of the most important rulings of the

She said Andy then politely asked to be excused to go to the office and was "shoved back" into his seat. When he protested, she said. Lewis lifted the desk from the floor, with Andy still in it, knocking it over, it landed on his hand, breaking the hand.

She said each student in the class was interviewed by district and HRS investigators. The reports were given in both oral and written form, she said.

"They all confirmed (the incident) happened the way he said it did," she said.

She said HRS pressed charges of child abuse against Lewis. Officials at HRS were not available for comment.

The district suspended Lewis for three days without pay, a penalty he served the first three days of this school year.

Two days after Andy returned to school following the incident, two teachers and a custodian witnessed an older, much larger boy "put Andy into a headlock and body slam him into the wall five times," his mother reported. His cast was shattered and the arm rebroken, she said.

The boy who attacked him in the second incident, she said, was retaliating for the time. three weeks earlier, where Andy had taken a water pistol from the alleged attacker's brother after he had been sprayed with it. She said he returned the gun after

The school offered to do "anything they could to make things right," she said, including transferring her son to either Rock Lake or Greenwood Lakes middie school.

The week before school started this year, she said they received a registered letter stating that the district "had kindly agreed that he could attend Sanford Middle School instead."

Jim Shupe, principal at Lakeview, said he made no promises of transfers, but refused to comment on the Issue any further, referring the matter to John Reichert, district ombudaman/equal employment opportunity coordinator. Shupe said the matter had been investigated and taken care of.

Reichert said only that "the incident (with Lewis) did occur." that "an investigation resulted in a three day suspension without pay," that "a referral was made to the state Pro-

He said the administration will continue to use the current policy

Hagerty was not available to comment on his reversal of op!nion, but in the memo, he offered the following reasons for his recommendation that the policy not be changed:

Overcrowding - With approximately 250 portable classrooms in use throughout the district. It part of the county could transfer is difficult to embrace a wideopen policy when the reality is that so many schools are already

The school system, he said, prides itself on having a high quality. consistent program of study and possibilities for parents to choose curriculum in each of the their child's school," there were schools. Choice programs elsewhere are usually associated with magnet schools or different program specialties such as the Academy of Health Careers at Seminole High School.

 Public perception - The wide would violate the court-ordered open, with some restrictions, policy was viewed by some, Hagerty noted, as a problem. A more restrictive policy consistently applied appears to be viewed as fairer, he said.

•YRE implementation - The change to year round education is underway and he believes the loosening of the policy might cause uncertainty about whether a school was single or multi-track depending on how many students transferred in or out.

 And, finally, athletics - the memo states that the concerns about recruitment are "real and are not easily addressed."

The board had been in support of Hagerty's recommendation at the work session. None of the members were available for comment, so it is unclear if they will support his new recommendations.

LAKE MARY - With their "final exam" just a week away, the Lake Mary High School girls volleyball team took a pop quiz Wednesday night and nearly failed.

Granted, the Rams did win their match with the Groveland-South Lake Eagles in straight games (15-3, 15-5), but they didn't look like the team Coach Cinuy Henry expects to defend their district championship in the 5A-District 4 tournament next week.

"They have to be good enough to go into a match like this (against a weaker opponent) and play their game," said Henry of her squad. "We just sat back tonight. After tonight, if we alt back in a match, the season's

What agitated Henry was the number of unforced

"We can't play like that next week." said Henry, referring to the district tournament which will be played at Lake Mary next Wednesday and Thursday. "There are several teams that are very capable of r aking us pay for those mistakes."

One of the bright spots for the Rams was the play of junior Joelle Townsend, who came off the bench in the second game and served four consecutive points (the longest service run of the second game) to give Lake Mary a 6-2 advantage. Townsend also contributed four assists during the second game.

in the first game, Jennifer Greissing and Nikki Preece each served six consecutive points.

Our life after he retired started off just wonderful. We were ogether doing everything. Then he had an employee retiring at work; they were having a lunch or him, and my husband wanted to go.

It just didn't "feel" right for him to go, Abby. I have had the seeling before that he might be with other women — and I have een the signs. I put it all behind Lie to start a new life. Well, that day he was gone more than two hours. I knew something was wrong because those employees have to go back to work at 12:20, and when he returned to the house he just didn't seem the same. I never said a word.

That night we went to bed and he had his undershirt on inside

BLEEDING HEART DEAR BLEEDING HEART: You need to talk to a minister or a marriage counselor, and so does your husband. If he refuses to go, please go without him. Keeping all this disappointment inside will only make you sick.

DEAR ABBY: This old world is far too serious, so I try to lighten up my life with something to smile about. For example, not long ago, you printed some letters in your column about people with unusual names. One of the names was "Virgin." It reminded me of a story you (and your readers) might get a kick out of: A kid went to Sunday school and the teacher asked the class,

'Who was Christ's mother?" All replied in unison, "Mary!" Then the teacher asked, "And who was Christ's father?"

Nobody answered for a few moments; then one kid spoke up: "His name was 'Virg." Then he went on, "All I hear about is Virg and Mary."

Another little boy at Sunday school was told by his teacher that God lives in all our hearts.

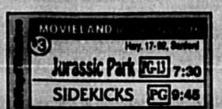

The little boy replied, "No, he doesn't. Every morning. dad knocks on the bathroom door and says, 'My God, are you still in there?""

I am 84, and it interests me to read about the lives of so many different kinds of people as reflected in your letters. All the best to you!

DAVE JENKS, SUN CITY, ARIZ.

DEAR DAVE: All the best to you, too. Thanks for the chuckle.

Doctors should monitor pregnancy

DEAR DR. GOTT: My daughter is pregnant and has been going to an herbalist. She takes a variety of food supplements, one of which is descrated adrenals. He claims her adrenal glands are not working correctly, which is the reason she craves sugar and is so tired all the time. Since I have Addison's disease, I'm afraid these herbs may be doing her or the baby harm. Do you agree?

DEAR READER: Without knowing the names of the specific herbs, I cannot comment on the possibility of harm to your daughter or grandchild.

However, I doubt that these substances are doing her any good. More important, by using an unconventional source of health care, she may be depriving herself of more effective medical therapy.

For example, most pregnant women are tired. The nutritional demands of a growing fetus are substantial and often stress the mother's body. In particular, pregnant women can become vitamin- or iron-deficient, a condition easily treated with inexpensive vitamin/mineral supplements.

Your daughter may not be receiving suitable replacement of these substances if she has chosen an alternative health practitioner. I believe she (and her baby) would be better served by following her obstetrician's advice. With a few simple blood tests, the M.D. can assess your daughter's nutritional status and identify any deficiency that may be present.

I don't buy this nonsense about adrenal malfunction; I believe it's the herbalist's way of convincing her to take expensive and unproved therapy. As you yourself know, adrenal insufficiency (Addison's disease) is a serious glandular problem for which specific medical therapy. such as the replacement of missing steroids, is vital. If your daughter were to have this affliction, she and the baby would be in grave danger without appropriate treatment -which she won't get from an herbalist.

IN AT BRIDGE

By Phillip Alder

You are faced with a two-way finesse for a queen. If you know, say. 10 of East's cards and seven of West's, there are only three empty spaces for the queen in East's hand, whereas there are six spaces in West's hand. It seems twice as likely that West has the queen. But you must be careful, as David Bird pointed out in a recent article featuring the monks of St. Titus. His deal is given in today's diagram.

The two-no-trump response showed a balanced hand with about 11 points. It is a bid used by most experts in North America today.

West led the spade six: two. spade eight. West playing the three under South's queen to retain communication with his partner. Now South. Professor Barelay, played a diamond to his 10, picking up the suit and making his contract. (A priori, this second-round finesse is than cashing the ace and king.)

East. the truculent Abbot, grumbled about this "inspired

South replied: "I always play with the odds. You would hardly expect otherwise from a professor of applied statistics. The spades were 5-3, so your partner had only eight empty spaces to vour 10."

Some professor, as the Abbot pointed out. "Spades wasn't a random sult. Suppose your partner had played the hand. I would have led a heart, showing ace, five. East returned the up with five to my partner's three. Applying your reasoning. your partner should then have played West for the diamond queen."

South didn't have enough in-dummy's king and a diamond to formation to apply the emptyspace principle.
