The students at Lake Howell High School left in droves after a shooting incident at the school Monday. Despite declarations that schools are gun and weapons free zones, a .25 caliber Beretta made its way onto campus and 16-year-old Odette Reyes was shot in the lower abdomen.

After shooting at school: Life goes on CASSELHERRY — Additional security officers and administrators joined with a crisis counseling team to ensure a better feeling of security for students returning to class at Lake Howell High School this morning.

Yesterday, many students left school after first period after a student was shot on her way to the guidance office.

Expeditas "Odette" Reyes, an 11th grader, was airlifted to Orlando Regional Medical Center where she remains in serious but stable condition today with a wound to her lower right abdominal area.

Josie Sosa, a spokesman for the hospital said Reyes' injuries were not life-threatening.

Seminole County Sheriff Don Eslinger said investigators were looking into the possibility that the girl may have shot herself. At this point, there are no other suspects or motives.

The .25-caliber semi-automatic handgun used in the shooting was recovered in a dumpster just a few feet away in the rear parking lot and belonged to the girl's mother, Ed McDonough, public information officer for the sheriff's office said.

He added that Reyes' mother did not know it was missing until the police inquiry. She is not a suspect.

Detectives were scheduled to interview Reyes this morning after she is put into a room at the hospital.

Wolfgang Halbig, the district's head of security, said he has looked at Reyes' file at the school and can find no evidence that she had ever been a discipline problem in the past. He said she was an "average

The park is immediately adjacent to the old Sanford Grammar School, now used as a student museum. The Sanford City Commission unanimously approved the name Monday. Touhy, who passed away in 1992, was extremely active in many cultural and social activities including Rotary Club, Seminole County Chamber of Commerce, Salvation Army, Boy Scouts, Florida Children's Home Society, St John's Presbytery, and Synod of Florida.

New apartment complex planned for waterfront

By NICK PFEIFAU
Herald Staff Writer

SANFORD — The Sanford City Commission heard its first report on Lake Monroe Apartments last night. The 176-unit apartment complex is being proposed for the area southwest of North French Avenue and the Seminole Boulevard intersection.

Bruce Andersen, development consultant, described the project during the commission work session yesterday afternoon. "This has been approximately two years in the planning process," he said. "We believe this may well be one of the most attractive residential complexes in the city of Sanford."

Andersen assured the commission that Lake Monroe Apartments would not be a public housing-type community. "We have researched rent charges in the area, and this will be either at or slightly above the usual level," he said.

Having been deeply involved in helping with the development of the Sanford lakelakefront area and other plans for downtown and lakelakefront improvements, he assured the city that this development will be a major step forward.

One of the questions presently attached to the proposed development however, is the need for additional property, namely, the city-owned Public Works Facility. Also involved would be the Juvenile justice agency turns 1

TALLAHASSEE — Tamaraha Reese was 15 when she was arrested for stealing a car and going on a joy ride with friends. She was counseled, performed 100 hours of community service and wrote a letter of apology.

Now 18, Reese has finished high school and wants to become a nurse. She said the help she got after her arrest kept her out of more trouble.

"I probably would have continued to indulge in delinquent behavior," the young Tallahassee woman said Monday. "I was just around a lot of negative people."

A year after lawmakers created the Department of Juvenile Justice in response to a rash of much-publicized crimes by teen-agers, officials said they are making strides in keeping more youths like Reese straight.

But they said they need more money for prevention programs and detention beds — and more help from the public to keep juvenile crime from getting worse.

"We are turning some young people's lives around," Gov. Lawton Chiles said at a news conference to mark the agency's first anniversary. "We know that we face continued challenges."

The number of juvenile arrests in Florida increased 7 percent in the first six months of this year compared with the same period in 1994, the Florida Department of Law Enforcement reported.

Last year, the number of juvenile arrests for serious crimes such as murder, robbery and auto theft increased 26 percent in Florida to 64,566, according to FDLE.

As proof of their progress combatting the problem, juvenile justice officials touted Reese and several other young women who broke the law and wanted to turn things around.

But those same officials also said they wished they had more success stories like Reese and the other teens.

Unfortunately, they aren't typical of the youths who get entangled in the system, said Bertha Ward, a case worker for seven years who worked with Reese.

"Other kids that we get, they don't want to" change their lifestyle, Ward said. "They keep coming back and back and back. They feel that the system is not going to do anything to them."

Over the past year, the agency, headed by former Miami Police Chief Calvin Ross, has tried to send out a tougher message.

"We will enhance public safety by taking juveniles off the street," Ross said.

The state has spent about $25 million to increase the total number of commitment beds for juvenile offenders by 21 percent, from 4,292 to 5,185.

Knowing what to say

Some things have not changed over the years. Parents are still shocked to hear of what goes on in the schools attended by their children.

Only the events which transpire have changed. In the past, parents became alarmed when there was a fistfight in the schoolyard. Seeing a high schooler smoking a cigarette was considered deplorable. And hearing that a girl still in school had become pregnant was absolutely shocking.

How times have changed. We now have students carrying guns and knives to school. Smoking has gone beyond the use of cigarettes, and moved into the realm of marijuana and drugs. As for pregnancies, it is becoming very commonplace.

Everyone knows exactly what to say. Some members of the younger generation see very few problems in our schools today. They claim that this is the modern age, the "with-it" time when everyone, regardless of age, should be allowed "to do their own thing."

Adults, parents as well as non-parents, are saying, "the schools had better clean up their act."

The schools, teachers as well as administrators are saying, "parents had better accept their responsibilities and start doing something to control their youngsters."

Persons who perhaps don't have children in school ask, "Why doesn't law enforcement do something?"

Government says, "We don't have the money with which to hire enough police officers to patrol every school or every classroom, and we don't dare raise taxes to enable us to hire new officers. The people won't stand for it."

Political hopefuls say, "We need safer schools." However, they generally fail to make any suggestions on how they would go about this.

Everyone has something to say about this problem, and of course, everyone feels that they know the underlying cause of it.

But we cannot assume that there is nothing anyone can do. We must not allow our students to stand the threat of being shot, raped, or robbed.

What did parents, teachers, administrators, government leaders do years ago to make our schools relatively safe? Did they know something we have forgotten? Or did they possibly do something which our "modern" laws no longer allow them to do such as paddlings?

Continually pointing the figure of guilt to someone else is not going to resolve anything. Everyone must accept some of the blame for what is happening in our schools today. We allowed it to happen and we allowed it to get worse.

It's time this entire situation started turning around. Unless everyone starts working together to resolve crime in our schools, we may as well shut the school doors and forget about giving our children an education.

Bravest person I have ever known

Amnesty International has inaugurated the Ginetta Sagan Fund. Its goal is "to stop torture and to educate the world about human rights abuses - with special emphasis on abuses committed against women and children."

Ginetta Sagan is the bravest person I have ever known, and the most unfailingly cheerful, even now when she has cancer.

David Hinckley, a former West Coast organizer for Amnesty International, says: "I think she has probably organized more people than anyone else in the human rights movement globally. She really is the one who got Amnesty International off the ground in this country."

Ginetta grew up in Milan, the daughter of two doctors - one of them Jewish, the other Catholic. They worked in the anti-fascist movement. By the time Ginetta - nicknamed "Sunshine" - was 16, she was a courier for the Resistance, carrying messages and then risking more danger.

"Disguising herself as a cleaning girl," the Los Angeles Times has reported, "she got into government offices to pilfer stationery for use in forging papers." And she helped many fugitives - Jews, Italian anti-fascists and prisoners of war - escape to Switzerland through holes in the barbed-wire fence at the border.

Coming home one day, she saw a black car in front of her home, and walked away. She knew the fascists had come for her parents. Her father, she later found out, had been taken to a field, ordered out of the car, and shot in the back.

"Attempted escape" was the official record. Years after, as a worker for Amnesty International, Ginetta came across many reports in many countries of political prisoners killed while "trying to escape."

Ginetta's mother was sent to Auschwitz. Nothing more was Avu' heard of her.

In February 1945, Ginetta, who had continued her work for the Resistance, was captured. For two months she was interrogated by Italians and

She knew the fascists had come for her parents.

Germans between sessions of torture. Criminals had been enlisted to work in the torture chambers. "The doers of prisoners who were socio-sexual psychopaths were destroyed by the fascists," Ginetta says, "and in return, these psychopaths did the torturing for them."

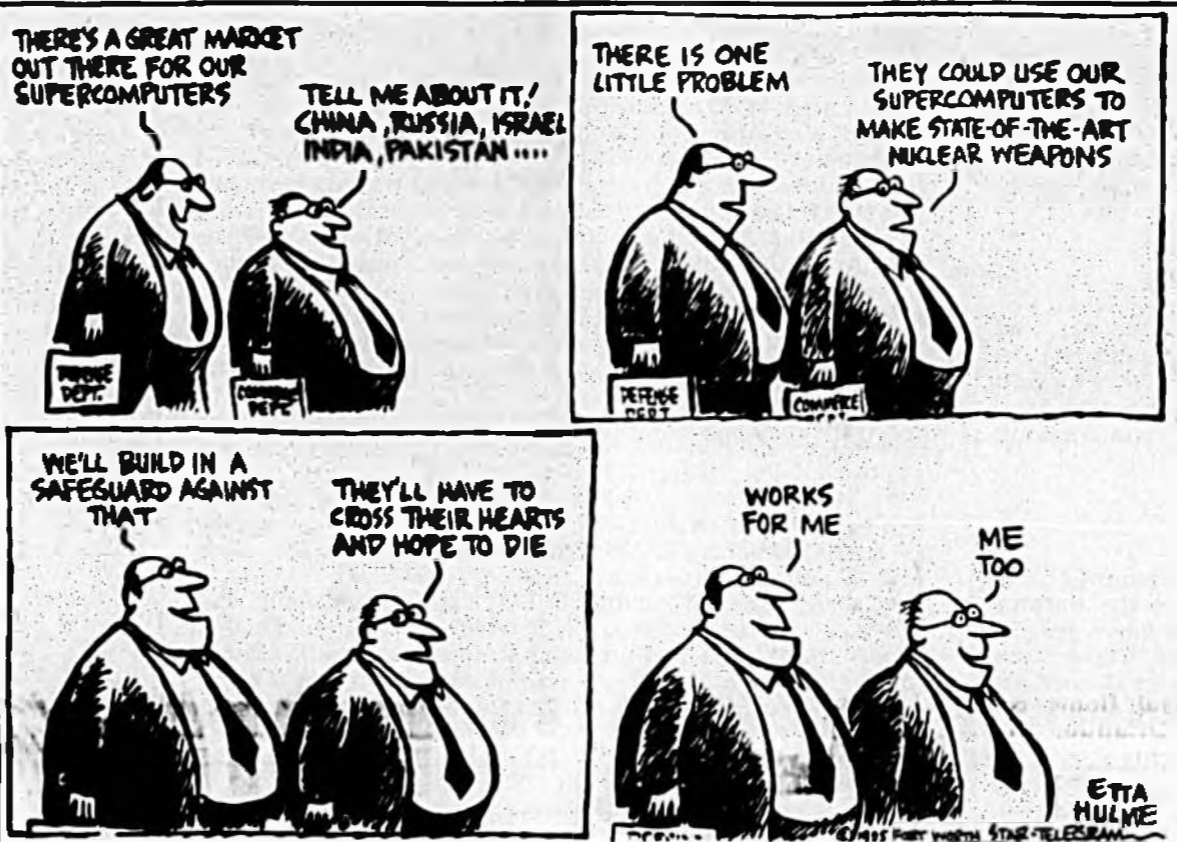

But one morning, a loaf of bread was thrown into her cell. Baked into it was a matchbox. One word was scrawled on it - "corragio." Her courage has never flagged.

In the April 19, 1990, Los Angeles Times, Sonni Efron tells of how Ginetta was freed from the fascists:

"Two Germans impersonating Gestapo agents dragged Ginetta Sagan off the floor of the interrogation room and threw her into a car. In sinister silence, they drove the 20-year-old Italian Resistance fighter not to the execution she was expecting, but to a local hospital.

"They handed her over to the Mother Superior without a word and drove off. Sagan never saw them again." She discovered that the German soldiers were actually Nazi deserters, now working against the fascists.

Strong sense of self, sisterhood

SAN FRANCISCO - This is what it must be like to be the child of a shattered and demanding family. To be constantly ambushed by pop quizzes about your loyalty. To be asked to pledge allegiance to one part of your heritage and asked to deny one piece of your reality. To have to choose.

On the day the O.J. verdict of "not guilty" came down from a jury that included nine black women, you could hear stunned white women saying to each other, barely out of earshot of black friends and co-workers: "So much for sisterhood."

When a black professional woman in Boston disagreed with the verdict and broke ranks with her nephews who were celebrating with high-fives and high fists, she was given a scornful look by the 16-year-old that said: So much for sisterhood.

When a black woman was asked what she thought about the Million Man March in Washington, a men-only gathering a week ago Monday that had relegated women to organizing, her sigh echoed: So much for sisterhood.

And when this same woman told a black co-worker how she felt, he turned on her, saying that any black woman who didn't understand, who didn't support the need for brothers to march strong and apart from women wasn't, well, "a real sister."

This is what it's like for many, perhaps most, African-American women. Divided by race and gender and yet a composite of race and gender. A two-fer and yet the bearer of a double burden.

For most of our history, they have led complex and conflicted lives in an America that continually cleaves our identities into categories.

In this troubled past, in the decades after abolition, sisters and brothers were both legally liberated and kept together on the hard side of the racial divide. But even then, black men were more privileged than women by a law that gave them the rights of white men, and more endangered by lawless lynch mobs that took those rights away. Even then, black women were often required by economic realities to be the strong, primary providers and expected by the intimate standards of gender to be the womanly, second sex.

In the 1960s, the civil rights movement ended legal segregation for black men and women alike. Yet in that decade Stokely Carmichael of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee issued his infamous declaration that "the only place for women in SNCC was prone."

Not much later, the women's movement broke barriers for all women, declaring Sisterhood is Powerful. Yet many of those feminists categorized men - including the black fathers and sons who had been kept down for so long - as oppressors. Sometimes it seems harder, not easier, to find a comfortable place to rest in the vortex of race and gender and, don't forget, class.

Think of the roles as remarkable a woman as Maya Angelou plays now. In "How to Make an American Quilt," Angelou acts the part of a proud woman once impregnated by the son of her mother's white employer and "taken" in by another white family. Now the elder of this mixed-race quilting bee of old friends, she is also central to a "woman's movie" stitched out of disappointments with men and the healing threads of sisterhood.

Yet in real life that Monday, Angelou's was one of only two women - Rosa Parks is the other - welcomed (should I say allowed) to speak at the Million Man March. A gathering called by a profoundly divisive figure, Louis Farrakhan.

Today African-American women occupy the poorest rungs of society. But they are also often more educated than black men, sometimes more welcome by the white working world that may feel threatened by their "brothers." Many are simultaneously aware of the obstacles their men face and disappointed by the shortage of what are called "marriageable" black men.

Navigating such an emotional terrain is hard. To say that all women are "multi-identified," that we all have multiple claims of background and beliefs on our loyalty, barely touches the dimension of the problem among black women who can feel these claims rip at their emotional life.

These claims are especially wrenching at moments when the world demands that sides be taken. At the Clarence Thomas hearings. At the Mike Tyson trial. And now, of course, with the O.J. verdict, when allegiance to a black man who married and, at least, beat a white woman becomes a test of sisterhood with men who face their share of Mark Fuhrmans.

Running this seemingly endless gantlet of loyalty tests, black women are asked to decide what they are rather than to explain who they are. In this ongoing struggle of American life, it isn't just the sense of sisterhood that they have to hold secure. It's a strong sense of self.

To be asked to pledge allegiance to one part of your heritage and asked to deny one piece of your reality.

Buchanan picks his Catholicism

WASHINGTON - It's time for pundit-turned-presidential candidate Patrick J. Buchanan to be hoisted by his own petard.

Five years ago, Buchanan called for the excommunication of several Roman Catholic politicians because their support of abortion rights clashed with Pope John Paul II's position. But now that the pontiff has repudiated Buchanan's nativist views on immigration, the candidate is ducking the crossfire.

The normally loquacious broadcaster refused to comment about the contradiction. After several phone calls to Buchanan's office, press aide K.B. Forbes told us: "I gave him all of the information, so if he didn't call you back that speaks for itself."

Back in 1990, when he was conducting his miniquisition, Buchanan was brimming with opinions. When John Cardinal O'Connor warned that then-New York Gov. Mario Cuomo and other Catholic politicians risked excommunication over abortion, Buchanan wrote that if it happened to Cuomo, "numerous excommunications would follow, severing from the life of the church the most prominent Catholic politicians in the nation." Buchanan fingered Democratic Sens. George Mitchell, Ted Kennedy, Chris Dodd and Pat Moynihan.

During a June 1990 episode of CNN's "Crossfire," co-host Buchanan challenged Rep. Charles Rangel, D-N.Y.: "Since you favor not only folks having abortions if they want them, but also federal funding for what the church teaches (is) the slaughter of the innocents, why shouldn't the church say Charlie Rangel is a bad Catholic and why shouldn't you be subject to excommunication?"

Does Buchanan's rejection of the pope's teachings on immigration make him a "bad Catholic"? Buchanan has justified attacks against Rangel and others by saying that he believes the pope "is infallible when he teaches on matters of faith and morals." The pope repeatedly referred to immigration as a moral issue during his recent visit to America, reciting Lady Liberty's beacon to the "huddled masses yearning to breathe free."

Ironically, it took a Polish-born pope to teach Pat "America First" Buchanan about the immigrant experience. Just moments after arriving in America, the pope declared: "It would indeed be sad if the United States were to turn away from that enterprising spirit which has always sought the most practical and responsible ways of continuing to share with others the blessings God has richly bestowed here."

Buchanan is proposing a "timeout" on legal immigration for at least five years, and has repeatedly vowed, "I'll build a steel fence and seal the borders." House Majority Leader Dick Armey, R-Texas, one of the high priests of the GOP, fears that a "police state" will arise from Buchanan's proposals. Conservative William Bennett recently said: "I cannot live with Pat Buchanan's views on immigration. For ... the grandson of Irish immigrants to come out against immigration is a little much."

Brother Patrick Ellis, president of the Catholic University of America, says the pope was sending Catholics a clear message that immigration is an issue involving the "sanctity of life" - a value that drives Buchanan's opposition to abortion.

It's time for presidential candidate Patrick J. Buchanan to be hoisted by his own petard.

SANFORD — In celebration of the Central Florida Zoological Park's 20th anniversary recently, the zoo invited members of the Zoological Society to witness the closure of a time capsule. The event was called "Good Morning To Zoo."

Members reflected back over the past 20 years at the zoo, by including in the time capsule various photos and documents pertaining to events at the zoo.

The time capsule also included a scroll signed by members of the Zoological Society who attended the event. Other zoo items placed in the container included brochures, quarterly magazines, a banner, t-shirt, listing of animals, video map, and annual report.

student with average grades," whose worst discipline problem seemed to be that she skipped classes from time to time.

"She's not a problem," he said. "Everyone loves her."

At the time of the incident, Reyes was on the way to the guidance office to meet with the counselor and her mother to discuss ways of bringing her grades up during the next nine week grading period, Halbig said.

Halbig said he believes the district is doing all that it can to ensure the safety of students in schools.

"When you get 2,600 students all together in one place and they come in with their differing backgrounds and nutrition and language barriers, it's an awesome, awesome task to keep things like this from happening," he said. "We wish we could do a better job."

He said schools "wind up having to deal with the problems students bring with them to school and occasionally the students feel weapons are the answer to their woes."

"What I want to know is why she didn't feel she could come to us to talk about her problems," Halbig wondered. "Why did she find it necessary to bring a gun to school? This is the kind of thing we have to have answers to."

Halbig points out the problem is a reflection of the society as a whole where there are 211,000,000 firearms in a nation of slightly more than 250,000,000 people.

"There are more gun dealers than gas stations," he said. "And some stores think it's funny to put 'Back to School' signs with their guns. I don't think that's very funny."

School officials report attendance was up to normal levels today. Students who needed to speak with crisis counselors were invited to do so, others were in class and on task.

"Life has to go on," Halbig said. "I think the kids are getting on with it."

Zoning

Jane Chase's neighbors have been less than pleased with her decision to request a zoning change on the 41 acres of property she owns on Silver Lake on the southern border of the city of Sanford near E. Lake Mary Boulevard.

Chase and her family have lived on the property for nearly three decades and she says they "care very deeply" about the area and preserving as much of its rustic charm as possible.

"But frankly, I am at a point in my life when I just don't care to have 50 acres of land to mow and care for," Chase said.

She said she and her husband can not keep up the property properly on their own. In addition, she said, it is simply getting too expensive. The taxes on the land went up 360 percent in the last year, she said.

Reflecting both the city and the county comprehensive plans, Chase is asking for the zoning of her property to be changed to MR-10 so that she might find a buyer for the land.

"There is no interest in the property for a single home," she said. "I have tried on and off to sell it and the industrial development all around us has been the complaint every time."

Chase said she is sorry, she understood her neighbors' concerns and was sympathetic to their position.

"I think that, perhaps, I should have been more forthcoming initially (with the neighbors)," she said, "rather than let them read the wrong things into it."

Realtor E. Everett Huskey has listed the property for Chase and said that there is "no possible way" the property could be sold as a single family home because of the development around it.

According to Huskey, the asking price for 20 acres of Chase's property is $1,250,000 and for an additional 20 acres that adjoins it, the asking price is $900,000. The asking price could go up if the zoning change is approved.

"Any property value is determined by what you do with it," Huskey explained. "I believe this will cause the value of the land around there to go up."

Still the neighbors around Silver Lake are unimpressed and have joined forces and consulted with an attorney to fight Chase's plans. They believe the introduction of multiple housing units to their rural area will destroy not only the pristine surroundings, but also their property values.

They have expressed displeasure with Chase and have vowed to fight her rezoning request.

Chase is disappointed. "I would have thought that they knew me well enough after 28 years," she said. "I know of no way of allaying their fears, but I think I am doing what is best for the area."

She said she does not believe any potential developers have plans for minimum housing projects for the property. Rather, she envisions "high end type cluster homes with tennis courts and pools." She hopes the community which is developed on her property is an "upscale, walled, secure" one.

Chase's son, Stuart, was killed in Germany nearly a dozen years ago and her daughter, son-in-law and grandchildren have recently moved to Ireland, a place where she has made her home in the past. She said she has no other family, save her husband, in this country.

That has led many to believe she will abandon the area once the sale is complete.

"That's not so," she said. "I would like to get a place in what is built on the property. I am not there much now. But I am not moving out of the area. My husband's family has been here for five generations. My children grew up here and there couldn't have been a better place for them to grow up."

According to Huskey, much of the adjoining property in the vicinity of Chase's land that has been sold in recent years is zoned for four to six units per acre.

"What she is doing is nothing new," he said. "And it fits in with the comprehensive plan."

Chase said she plans to contact her neighbors before the city commission meets on Nov. 16 to discuss the zoning change and arrange a meeting.

"I want them to understand what I am doing and why I am doing it," she said.

pistol range and Police Benevolent Association (PBA) building.

Workshop discussion dealt with the possibility of moving the Public Works facility to another location in order for the property to be used as part of the development.

"One thing is for sure," said City Manager Bill Simmons. "We don't want to have to spend any city money to have this moved." With the city's growth however, Simmons admitted that the facility eventually would have to be relocated.

In his application to the city,

Andersen suggested that he may be able to obtain some property which would be acceptable to Sanford for the public works facility. He also suggested that Sanford would be paid for the cost of moving the existing buildings to the new site.

Regarding a time frame, Andersen said he had to apply for tax credits for the development by next April. He said he was still working on some of the other property which would eventually become part of the total apartment complex.

Regarding the proposal for Lake Monroe Apartments, located behind the Sanford Herald facilities to Seminole Boulevard at the shore of Lake Monroe, Andersen said the city will benefit by getting a public works facility more central to the city, removal of an unattractive waterfront use, additional population along the waterfront, and taxes and water fees estimated at over $46,000 per year.

Yesterday's City Commission discussion was considered only one of the first steps in the development. No immediate commission approval has been requested at this time, although the commission voiced no objections to the plans for development of the new residential area.

Watson new Yankees GM

CLEVELAND — Bob Watson abruptly quit as general manager of the Houston Astros to accept the same job with the New York Yankees.

In another development, a Yankees official, speaking on the condition he not be identified, said manager Buck Showalter turned down an offer to return. However, he and owner George Steinbrenner were to meet again today.

Watson, 49, was given a two-year contract and the team holds options for 1997 and 1998. He replaces Gene Michael, who quit Wednesday rather than accept a $200,000 pay cut and is now a Yankees' scout.

La Russa takes Cards' reins

ST. LOUIS — Tony La Russa, who managed Oakland to a world championship in 1989 and three AL pennants in 10 years, was hired as manager of the St. Louis Cardinals.

La Russa, 51, who will bring pitching coach Dave Duncan with him to St. Louis, signed a two-year contract worth about $1.5 million a year with an option for a third season.

Mike Jorgensen, who managed St. Louis on an interim basis after Joe Torre was fired in June, returns to his job as director of player development and is a candidate for Montreal's general manager's position.

Seattle approves new stadium

SEATTLE — The effort to keep the Seattle Mariners from leaving the city got a boost with approval of a plan to build a $320 million retractable-roof stadium.

The Metropolitan King County Council voted 10-3 to approve the plan, which prompted a dissenting group to file a lawsuit to block the move. Mariners owners had set an Oct. 30 deadline for agreement on a stadium plan.

Bledsoe signs new pact

FOXBORO, Mass. — Drew Bledsoe completed a seven-year, $42 million contract with the New England Patriots, a deal described by the team as the most lucrative in NFL history.

The Patriots said the contract, first announced in training camp, was signed during the weekend and was to be submitted today for league approval. The club said the quarterback signed a standard agreement on July 20, but that several issues were unsettled at the time.

Volunteer of the Week

She's the boss at sharing center

By SUSAN WISNER
Herald Staff Writer

SANFORD — The Sanford Christian Sharing Center is a non-profit organization which assists individuals and families in "making ends meet." All gifts are tax deductible.

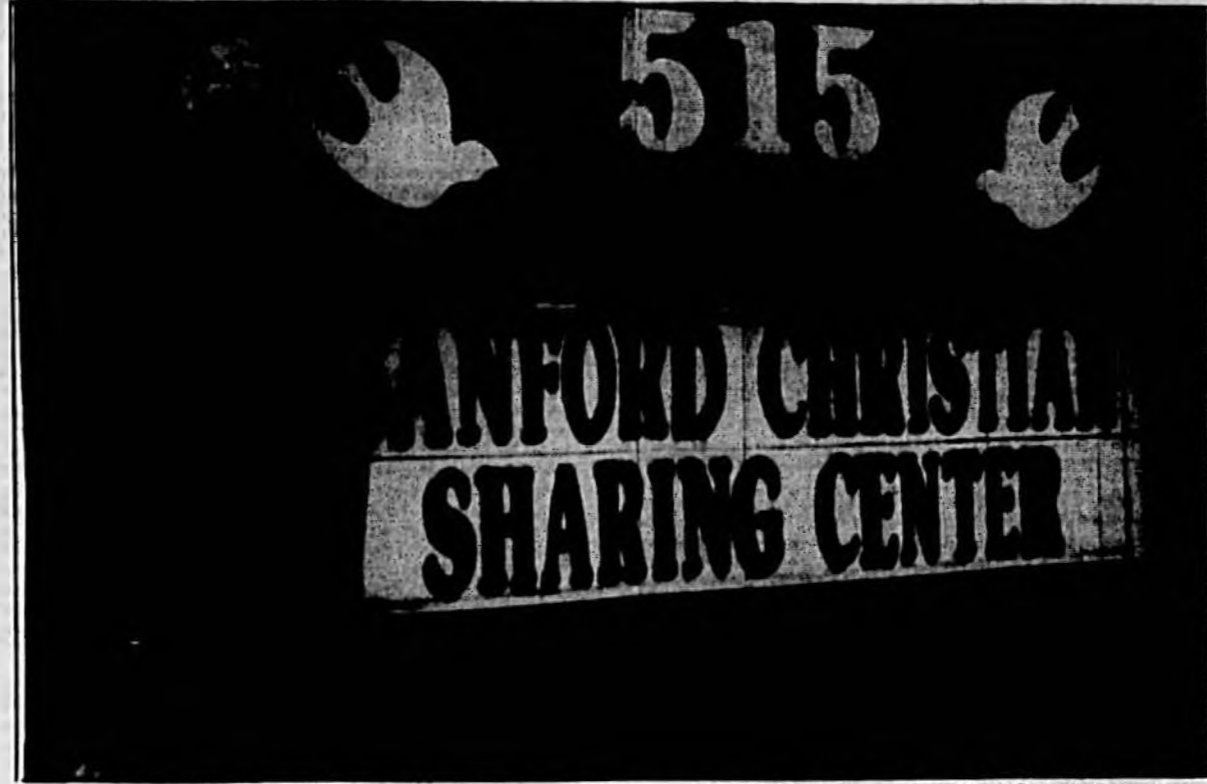

They have the support of many churches in the area such as First Baptist, All Souls Catholic Church, Central Baptist, Congregational Christian, Christian Fellowship, First Baptist of Marikah Woods, First Christian Church of Sanford, First Presbyterian Church of Sanford, First Church of the Nazarene, First Presbyterian Church of Lake Mary, First United Methodist Church of Sanford, Good Shepherd Lutheran.

Also volunteering time and money are Grace Methodist Church of Lake Mary, Holy Cross Episcopal, Lutheran Church of the Redeemer, Pinecrest Baptist, St. Matthew Missionary, Saint Paul Missionary Baptist, St. Peter's Episcopal Church of Lake Mary, Sanford Alliance, Upala Community Presbyterian, Trinity Methodist and Westview Baptist.

Many church members coordinate time to work in the center on a volunteer basis. Numerous individuals include people in their church to take days at a time and handle clients and duties.

According to their brochure the center offers groceries, clothing and layettes to unemployed, homeless, hungry, single parents, migrant workers and low income families. Pantry items are also obtained from Second Harvest Food Bank in Orlando, Winn Dixie Distribution Center in Orlando, Publix Markets and numerous donations from concerned people.

Irene Brown is the volunteer director of the Sanford Christian Sharing Center. She has worked with the organization since April of 1988. In her own words she felt "led my God" to begin this work after her retirement from the banking industry.

She is in charge of the daily operation of running the facility. "It's like running a company with new employees everyday."

Brown also serves on the board of directors for the center as the treasurer. "I fill orders, pack groceries, distribute clothing, supervise the operations, pay all the bills and keep all the books," she said. "I have to say that it's the volunteers who really make this place. They're wonderful. The volunteers are outstanding and the most important part of the operations here."

After her retirement in 1985, Brown told a former pastor at Good Shepherd Lutheran, where she was a member, that if she could help with the Sharing Center she was willing to work for three months. "Now those three months have turned into seven years," she said. "God directs my life. He put me here and won't let me go."

She further added, "The Sharing Center gives you a sense of knowing you're doing something good for someone else. I think all the volunteers feel the same way about it."

Brown shared a recent prayer on her heart. "I was very concerned about the finances of the center," she said. "With Thanksgiving coming up we like to buy turkeys for clients. There was not enough in the account for this. I told God we needed more money for the turkeys. When I came into work the other day I found an envelope on my desk with $1000 in it from a devoted supporter. God does provide."

Even with her schedule of working nine hours or more per week Brown still finds time for her husband of 53 years, Roy. They have two children, Dennis and Laura and two granddaughters.

The family attends Upala Community Church where Brown is a choir member. She is also active with the Sanford Woman's Club.

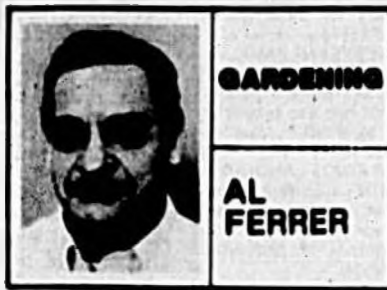

In what little spare time she has Brown writes, paints, plays the organ, gardens and golfs.

For more information about the Sanford Christian Sharing Center call the office between the hours of 9 a.m. to noon, Monday through Friday at 323-2513.

Gardening: The pros and cons of biological insect control

(Editor's Note: This is part 1 of 3 parts on biological insect control.)

Many people who call or come to our lab are interested in "natural" ways to control insects. So, when an article on fungus that controls some insect pests appeared in a local newspaper, I received some phone calls from people who wanted more information about this type of control. According to the article, the product known as "Mycotrol", contains a fungus that kills insects and, is used to control whiteflies on cotton, melon and vegetables. The article mentions that, the company that markets this product, has a hard time trying to keep the fungus alive. This particular problem is one of the major obstacles for the use of biological control in agriculture. While there are many reasons for trying to find a good biological control for many of the insect pests of crops of plants around our houses, the reality is that there are many uncertainties in the use of such organisms.

Why do people need to be concerned about articles like this? There are many reasons why there is an increase in demand for biological control of insect pests. People today are more concerned about pesticide residues than in the past, they are more informed and they are more aware of the problems related to pesticide use. Other problems related to pesticide use is the development of resistance to pesticides by the pest population. Also, pesticides usually have an unwanted effects on other insects that help keep in check the pest populations.

But, what is biological control? Biological control can be defined as the use of predators, parasites and pathogens to reduce pest populations below damaging levels. The concept implies that the goal is not to completely eliminate a pest but to lower their populations to a level where damage is minimal.

What biological control agents we know? We can group them into three large groups based on how they feed or affect their host. They are described as predators, parasites or pathogens.

Predators are insects that must find and kill their prey in order to complete their growth and develop. One good example of this is the ladybird beetle, which need to feed on aphids each day. Many garden magazines have information about this predator and is almost always cited as a "beneficial insect" by most writers on the subject.

Other predators include, earwigs, praying mantis, some predator bugs, lacewings, the spined soldier bug, big-eyed bug, and many others.

Parasites are insects that complete their growth and develop on or in a single host. Therefore, the parasites are usually smaller than their hosts. They are the most important group of the so-called natural enemies of insect pests. Parasites are often more specialized as to the kind of pest they attack. This particular characteristic makes it possible to introduce a parasite in a given area, since their action is limited to specific hosts. They are more difficult to observe because they are either found inside insect eggs, larvae or pupae. Adult insects are less commonly attacked by parasites because of their mobility and their hard body structures.

Aphids, for instance, are parasitized by many very small wasps. Affected aphids are called mummies and can be easily recognized with a hand lens. They become swollen, hardened and have a brown color. Many times it is easy to recognize the hole from which the parasite emerged after reaching maturity inside the aphid. Mummies of aphids can give us an indication of the levels of parasitism by parasitic wasps on a given population of aphids and give us an indication of the necessity or not of using pesticides to decrease an aphid problem.

School ring protocol is a simple matter of design

DEAR ABBY: For the last three years, I have been attending a very nice private school here in the South. However, for reasons too complicated to explain in this short letter, I must transfer to another school in order to get my degree.

I am very proud to have attended the first school. Would there be anything wrong with having a class ring made up with my initials engraved on the trade—but no "year"?

I'm not trying to pass myself off as a graduate of this institution only that I was a student there.

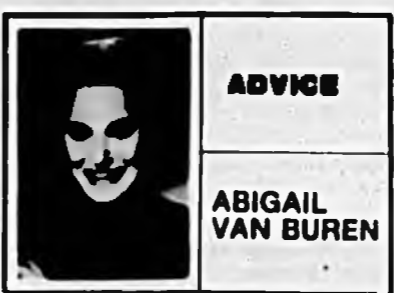

CURIOSUS IN DONE

DEAR CURIOUS: According to the Jewelry Information Center, a not-for-profit trade association located in New York, a traditional class ring bears a year, which implies graduation — so you should not order one with a year.

However, according to the association, "many school rings can be customized to include symbols of activities in which student have participated; for example, basketball, swimming, drama, band or R.O.T.C. Most manufacturer of school rings offer "freedom of choice sides," which depict the student's participation in activities."

DEAR ABBY: When I saw the letter from "Wondering in Texas," the woman whose mother-in-law wanted absolutely no funeral service, I had to write. You told her they should respect her wishes.

My mother, who was 97 when

ADVICE

shared special memories of her in celebration of this great lady.

Later, we met for a simple meal and reminisced about Mother's positive influence on our lives. That day became a cherished memory for all of us.

DEAR BETTY: How generous of you to share your family's excellent solution for easing their grief. Perhaps it will help other readers to cope with the loss of a loved one.

Psoriasis tends to run in families

DEAR DR. GOTT: My 14-year-old son has been diagnosed with psoriasis. How did he get it? Is it inherited?

DEAR READER: Psoriasis is a common skin disorder of unknown cause, although it tends to run in families, so a genetic factor is probably to blame. The disease appears gradually, without warning, as a dry, silvery, scaly rash, somewhat raised, with irregular borders. There is no itching. The rash may involve any part of the body, but most frequently affects the scalp, elbows and knees. Treatment involves cortisone creams, lubricants and other salves. More severe cases require ultraviolet light therapy or methotrexate (an anti-metabolite). Psoriasis does not affect health but is a cosmetic embarrassment. In my opinion, patients with the disorder should be under the care of dermatologists.

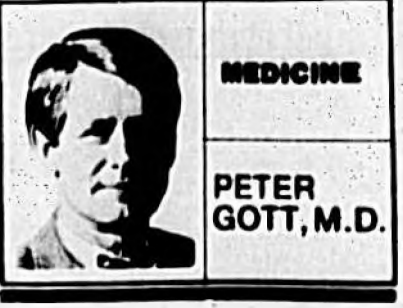

DEAR DR. GOTT: I've received information that drinking decaffeinated coffee is more apt to increase blood cholesterol than is regular coffee. At age 80, with a mild heart condition, why am I drinking decaf?

DEAR READER: Beats me. First, reports condemned regular coffee. Then, later, it was extenuated. Still later, decaf is the bad guy. Don't touch that dial. We may yet see favorable studies on decaffeinated brew.

It's all too much. The hapless consumer is pulled this way and that, always in a crossfire, never knowing which claim to believe. I think that the solution to all this media madness is moderation. Most experts agree that a cup or two of coffee (regular or decaf) a day won't hurt anyone. Excess consumption of any product can cause harm. However, most prudent adults don't overdo. With respect to coffee, a maximum of three or four cups is probably a reasonable limit, on a daily basis.

If you enjoy real coffee (or decaf) and you drink modest amounts, I see no reason why you shouldn't continue the practice. Also, as you have probably heard, cholesterol levels in persons over 70 are now considered to be relatively inconsequential; recent studies have indicated that modest elevations of cholesterol - up to, say, 275 milligrams per deciliter (normal: up to 200 mg/dL) - in elderly persons do not lead to heart disease.

WIN AT BRIDGE

By Phillip Alder
The magazine of the English Bridge Union, English Bridge, runs a declarer-play competition for its readers. The problems are set by Andrew Kambitas. And to stop the experts from winning every time, the field is divided into three categories based on masterpoint totals.

I liked today's deal. How should South play in five diamonds against the club-ace lead?

South's two-diamond opening is an Acol two-bid, showing eight or nine playing-tricks. This hand is a little thin, but Kambitas needed a way to stop West and East from finding their big club fit. (Acol is pronounced like atoll, not accorn.)

With thoughts of a missed slam, South ruffed in the dummy and discarded the heart two from hand. Then he tried the heart finesse. However, after winning with the king, West exited safely in hearts. Now South did his best. He played a trump to dummy, ruffed dummy's last heart in his hand, cashed the spade ace, played a trump to dummy and led a spade toward his queen. Here, that didn't work as the defenders took two spade tricks: one down. (I expect Kambitas has received some mail because he carelessly gave West only king-doubleton in spades, when this line works.)

The right play is easy to overlook. At trick one, South should discard a heart from the dummy and the spade three from his hand, leaving West employed. Whatever West leads at trick two concedes the 11th trick.

This is a rare double discard, which sounds more like an ice-cream flavor than a bridge play.

Year round school axed

By VICKI DeBORNER
Herald Senior Staff Writer

SANFORD — Most parents in Seminole County are pleased to have gotten what they've been asking for from the school board: a return to a more traditional calendar for student attendance.

All but five elementary schools have been returned to a calendar that more closely resembles the schedule which is followed by the high schools.

Nancy McNamara, executive director of elementary education for the school district, said the board and staff will "be taking a long, hard look" at the schools that have remained on the year round multitrack calendar and see what they can do about changing them to the same calendar as the other schools.

"There could be as many as five schools on the multitrack calendar next year, but we are looking at there being fewer than that," McNamara said.

Two schools, Partin and Rainbow in Oviedo will remain on the multitrack schedule until the new Carrillon Elementary School is completed. The construction on that school has been delayed and it is expected the work will not be done until March 1997 and that classes will not start there until the 1997-98 school year.

Rain puts Timacuan homes in jeopardy

By VICKI DeBORNER

SANFORD — With nearly seven inches of rain this month alone and record amounts of precipitation throughout the past year, the levels of area lakes have risen dramatically.

Waterfront property has become more so and water has been lapping at the edges of homes previously far from shore.

Between the Timacuan country club community and the Loch Arbor development the DeForest and Crystal Lake system has risen to potentially financially devastating levels.

Wounded student says two hooded men shot her

From Staff Reports

SANFORD — Since there were no eyewitnesses to the shooting at Lake Howell High School on Monday morning, sheriff's department investigators have to check out every possibility.

Yesterday afternoon, detectives interviewed Expeditee "Odette" Reyes in her hospital bed at Orlando Regional Medical Center in an effort to determine how the young woman was shot in the abdomen with her mother's gun.

Reyes, 16, is a junior at Lake Howell High. She told investigators she had had a dream on Sunday night in which she was threatened with a knife. She brought the gun to protect herself, she told them.

On Monday morning, the interview revealed, the dream came true when she told deputies she was attacked by two hooded men wielding knives. She told detectives that the two men approached her, one grabbed her from behind while the other held a knife to her abdomen.

She said she tried to get her gun to protect herself, but one of her attackers grabbed it, shot her and then ran away.

Though McDonough said police must investigate the girl's claims she was attacked by two men, school officials believe the girl accidentally shot herself while trying to get rid of the gun.

Detectives said Reyes was shot as she crossed a parking lot from a classroom building at the rear of the campus to go to a meeting with a guidance counselor and her mother in the administration building at the front of the school.

There were no other students in the parking lot at the time of the shooting, they said. Four boys who were on the other side of a building came around when the shot rang out, investigators said.

They did not report seeing any hooded figures, investigators said. According to Ed McDonough, public information officer for the sheriff's office, investigators are at the school this morning interviewing students who might have seen anything that might assist them in their investigation.

McDonough said evidence seems to indicate that Reyes' wound might have been accidentally self-inflicted, but investigators are still looking at all possibilities.

The gun and her clothes are being sent to the Florida

Luring business to town costs money

By MICK PFERPAUF

SANFORD — Another business will benefit from Sanford's Economic Development Incentive Trust Fund. Hill Dermaceuticals, Inc., has been approved for a $20,000 economic development grant.

Since the city established the fund on October 9, this is the second time approval has been granted for financial assistance.

According to the wording of the document which established the fund, it is "to encourage the development of strong, healthy, commercial/industrial activity for the city of Sanford."

Hill Dermaceuticals plans to move from Orlando to the Orlando Sanford Airport. It would be located immediately west of what was formerly the airport administration office, Building 1, on Mellonville Avenue.

Hill manufactures skin care products. They have proposed a $2.5 million facility at the airport, which they say will also aid the company in more adequate air shipping opportunities.

Hill Dermaceuticals was approved during Monday night's Sanford City Commission meeting, for $20,000 in Economic Development Incentive funds.

Hill had originally requested $83,500 but the amount was withdrawn when it was determined Seminole County would not be involved in this funding.

Other requirements from Hill at the airport involve some road and taxiway work, which may be paid for in part with the Airport Authority attempting to obtain assistance from the Department of Commerce.

Hill will be moving 14 employees to the airport, with an additional 15 to be hired over the next two years. The average wage, including benefits, is estimated at $26,500.

Earlier this month, the City of Sanford and Seminole County both
