Seminole Jail Experts Think About Going 'Soft'

By Britt Smith
Herald Staff Writer

Soft jails. The words seem to be a contradiction in terms. Everyone knows that jails aren't soft. They're hard: made of concrete and steel, designed to keep life's malcontents and malefactors away from the rest of polite society.

If that's your view of traditional jails, then you must also use the word expensive to describe them. Because, as Seminole County Administrator T. Duncan Rose says, "hardness costs."

That's why Seminole County, faced with the need to nearly double the capacity of its lockup within 5 to 6 years, is studying the "soft jail" concept.

Rose, along with Sheriff John Polk, jail administrator Jim Shoultz, and county commissioner Barbara Christensen, attended a week-long National Institute of Corrections conference in Boulder, Colo. earlier this month at which "soft jails" were discussed.

The soft in "soft jails" does not mean easy or plush, in general terms, "soft jails" are minimum security facilities, housing prisoners who have demonstrated an ability to get along with their fellow inmates.

"Under the old 'hard jail' system, it was an adversarial relationship — the guards versus the cons, us against them-type attitude," Rose said. "The inmates controlled the cellblocks and the guards controlled the surrounding areas. There was constant tension.

"The prisoners stayed locked up most of the time, being marched out for recreation or to meals or to work and that was all."

The results weren't difficult to foresee.

It was a situation that spawned "cell bosses, gangs and violence," Rose said. "When you have a large group of prisoners with nothing to lose and idle all day, they will find ways to bust things up."

"So, we started making jails with concrete bunks, stainless steel tables, recessed lighting units, super-hard toilets." Depending on the area of the country, these types of facilities can cost upwards of $60,000 per cell to construct, he said.

Seminole County got off comparatively cheap. Built 3½ years ago at a cost of $4.25 million, the Seminole jail's 212 cells average a little over $20,000 per cell.

"While good, we can do better," Rose said.

According to Shoultz, "we have enough maximum security cells to last for the next 20 years. It's the minimum security areas that we're going to need more of."

What Rose and Shoultz envision is a dormitory or barracks-type arrangement in which groups of inmates would be housed in large rooms as opposed to individual cells, a set-up which would cost Governor?

Convert Democrats, Says Widely Touted Candidate

By Donna Estes
Herald Staff Writer

Tampa Mayor Bob Martinez, widely touted among Republicans as their best hope for grabbing the governor's mansion in 1986, refused to be taunted Friday night in announcing his candidacy at the local GOP's annual Lincoln Day Dinner at the Sanford Civic Center.

During a fund-raising auction after Martinez's speech calling for a major effort by Republicans to "spread the party's sphere of influence," Michael Jones, a Winter Springs attorney, yelled from the audience that he would donate $500 to Martinez's gubernatorial campaign if he would announce on the spot.

Martinez only smiled.

U.S. Rep. Bill McCollum, R-Altamonte Springs introduced Martinez as the man "who may be the next governor of Florida," and State Rep. Bobby Brantley, R-Longwood, with tongue in cheek, asked Martinez if he would run for lieutenant governor on a Brantley for governor ticket.

Martinez, the first big-city Republican mayor in Florida, challenged the 300 party faithful at the banquet to sponsored by the Seminole County Republican Executive Committee to undertake "the mission before us — organize now, raise money now to secure the Republican position for November."

Predicting that President Ronald Reagan will "coattail many Republicans

"The voices I heard are saying 'do less for me, give me the opportunity of doing more for myself.'" throughout the state into office" in the general election, Martinez said as new residents move into Florida from the north and the west, and conversions like his own to the Republican Party are increasing, the GOP is fast becoming the majority party here.

"The people can identify with the Republican Party," Martinez said, adding, however, the party has not been able to translate this identification into large-scale victories at the city hall, courthouse and state house elsewhere in Florida.

He pointed to the hard work of Seminole County Republicans over the past 10 years and their ability to win county offices as well as seats in the Florida Legislature as an example of what can be done with hard work.

"We have great expectations in '84, some opportunities have been created for us," he said, pointing to the Tampa-Hillsborough County area where five open county commission seats and an open legislative seat will be on the ballot.

He reminded that the occupants of three county commission seats in

Hillsborough County were indicted for wrong-doing in office and two additional seats will be elected to the county commission, newly expanded from a five member to a seven member board.

Martinez also said state House of Representatives Speaker H. Lee Moffitt, D-Tampa, is not running for re-election, leaving that seat a good possibility for a Republican to win.

"This gives us a great opportunity for a break-through," Martinez said.

"By electing good Republicans we can expand the Republican sphere of influence," he said.

He said although his philosophy was much more Republican than Democrat even when he ran for office in Tampa in 1978, he did not change parties until after his election, after he found the Democratic Party supporting opponents in the non-partisan election.

A full-time mayor in a strong mayor government, he said, local officials today ought to see if the people can have a more direct way of governing themselves.

"We are dealing with a more informed public. The voices I heard are saying 'do less for me, give me the opportunity of doing more for myself,'" he said.

Comparing Reagan with Abraham Lincoln, Martinez said Reagan is turning the nation around and giving the people what they expect from government.

Accused Arson-Rapist

'He Tried To Take His Life Before...'

By Deane Jordan
Herald Staff Writer

Long before jailed accused rapist Keith Lambert tried to take his life by jabbing tweezers into an artery in his arm Thursday, people were concerned about his mental health.

Lambert, 31, of Orlando, who attempted suicide Thursday night in the Seminole County jail, was arrested Wednesday and charged with attempted murder, rape and burglary. Three more charges were filed against him Friday in connection to a Feb. 14 incident — arson in the first degree, grand theft, and aggravated battery. He is being held without bond in the Seminole County jail and is scheduled for arraignment March 9.

Concern for Lambert's safety arose when his half-brother told the police on the night of Sept. 8, after Lambert was arrested for assault at a bar, that his brother was suicidal. Started Casseberry police officers, unaware of Lambert's history, had seen him bash his head against the door and cage of a patrol car after beating his head against the floor and wall in a liquor store. An emergency room worker noted that the night the handcuffed Lambert repeatedly slammed his head against the patrol car, he was crying and threatening suicide.

Lambert's defense attorney questioned whether he was sane at the time of the incident and sane competent to stand trial. A psychiatric examination was ordered. Results of the exam were not included in Lambert's court file, but Monday Lambert was on trial for aggravated assault in connection with the incident. He was found not guilty. Tuesday he was a free man.

Wednesday morning he was arrested for prowling and Thursday charged with rape and arson. Friday Lambert was recovering from a suicide attempt at the county jail.

He has been charged with the attempted murder and rape of a 67-year-old woman on Valentines Day, the burglarizing of her apartment and setting it afire. He is also charged with grand theft and aggravated battery and suspected in other burglaries. It was Lambert's fingerprints taken for the assault trial and compared with prints in burglarized homes and the home of the raped woman that prompted his arrest.

In the September incident, Lambert and his half-brother, Jimmie Martin, 25, of Orlando, were arrested for fighting at the ABC Liquor Lounge at State Road 438, Casseberry. A computer check run at the time showed he had no convictions though he said he was on probation for possession of less than 20 grams of marijuana in Orange County. The computer print-out did show he was suspected of having been involved in burglary, shoplifting, escape, narcotics, credit card fraud, and dealing in stolen property.

According to police reports of the arrest, Lambert asked a woman to dance and when she said no reportedly held a knife to her throat. While lounge personnel were trying to get him out of the lounge, he reportedly beat himself. His half-brother was also charged with assault of an employee by attacking him with a lead pipe. Rook, who like Lambert lives with his mother in Orlando, was found not guilty of the charge Feb. 6.

Years before the September arrest Lambert also had problems.

According to his statements recorded in court documents, Lambert was in Marianna Reform School from the age of 11 to 18 and did not have a regular high school diploma, though he said he earned a G.E.D. He

Handicappers' Greatest Barrier: Rejection By Those Around Them

By Susan Loden
Herald Staff Writer

The greatest barrier a handicapped person has to overcome isn't his or her own physical or mental limitations. It's the negative attitude and rejection of so-called normal, but unenlightened, people.

"React normally." That's the key to making the handicapped feel comfortable, according to Bill Poe, director of a Sanford based sheltered workshop for the handicapped. "I treat our workers just like I treat everybody else. You have to overlook infirmities. Treat them normally and they will treat you normally. I guarantee it."

But negative attitudes are what Poe says he and his staff of 10 face daily when they offer support and guidance and find work for the 52 physically and mentally limited person who perform simple tasks for a fraction of the minimum wage for area businesses the Seminole Work Opportunity Program.

"There are a hell of a lot of people who are physically capable of doing things, but they have been shunned or rejected because of their outward appearance," says Poe, who has been head of the three-year-old SWOP workshop for almost three years.

"The man on the street will say 'look at that crazy person.' They don't know the difference between mental illness and mental retardation. All of our workers have mental deficiency to some degree, but they aren't crazy. They can't read, they can't write and they may look a little different or have trouble speaking or getting around, but they are really just people who want and need the same things in life that you and I do. Primarily they need to be accepted as they are," Poe said.

To change the attitudes that often restrict the handicapped to their homes, Poe, of Winter Springs, said that the disabled must be integrated into the community and into the workforce, so other people can learn that they can be not only productive workers, but also good friends.

SWOP has a waiting list of 65 workers who have been approved by the state Health and Rehabilitative Services, which channels the workers into SWOP. As funding permits, when they are gradually brought into the program, Poe expects that many of them will have to have personalized attention to help them overcome feelings of inadequacy, which stem from a lifetime of rejection.

Cindy Carnes, 28, of Casseberry, who is a charter member of SWOP, was according to Poe, "shy and withdrawn when she came in, because she had never been treated as a normal person before. The atmosphere here is normal. Now she supervises 7 other people in our mail department. I don't have to tell her what to do or go behind her and make sure that things get done."

Ms. Carnes who was born with club feet, a hearing problem and brain damage said, "I like to work here, but then I'd like to go out there and probably do something with mail."

Poe has successfully placed two of his former workers in outside jobs, but he said it isn't easy to find the right job for his people who may be qualified on one level, but not on another. But the goal of his group is for SWOP to be just a stepping stone to the outside world for all of his workers.

"If I could get Cindy past the civil service exam I know I could integrate her into the post office right here in Sanford and I guarantee that within six months everyone there would love her like we do," Poe said. "But I can't do that, because of her size (Cindy is petite) and her limited abilities, as magnificent as she is, she is limited psychologically. She gets upset, because of her intellectual limits. Those things happen. They do need an emotional shield and co-workers who are aware of their need for additional support. They can't cope with stress like we can. Hell, we have problems and we have our where-with-all, they don't."

The staff of the non-profit workshop is paid through donated funds and limited funding for staff is keeping the number of workers at 52, because the pro-

Unitary Taxes

How Far Can States Go In Taxing A Firm's Overseas Earnings?

By Donald H. May

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A highly unusual negotiation involving state, federal and international interests is taking place, largely behind the scenes.

At issue is "worldwide unitary taxation" — the right of U.S. states to tax multinational firms by determining their worldwide income rather than by looking only at their earnings within the state.

Seldom if ever has there been a negotiation with so many separate, conflicting interest groups.

They include the states, the federal government, foreign governments, globally operating firms based abroad, similar firms based in this country and smaller businesses that operate within a single state.

Often such a dispute would be resolved by the big actors in the American federal system — the president, Congress, state governments and the Supreme Court.

In this case, the high court so far has decided only some of the issues and in effect has thrown others to Congress. Congress is reluctant to get involved. President Reagan is philosophically opposed in general to the federal government imposing solutions on the states.

The upshot of all this was that the president last November created a working group, composed of federal officials, governors and legislative officials from six states and executives of seven multinational corporations to study the matter.

The working group, headed by Treasury Secretary Donald Regan, has held two public meetings. At its second on Dec. 6 it agreed not to consider among possible options any recommendation for federal legislation that would restrict the right of states to tax as they see fit.

Instead, it set out to persuade all these divergent groups voluntarily to reach a compromise. The actual working out of a compromise was assigned to a staff-level task force, headed by Deputy Assistant Treasury Secretary Charles McLure, which meets in private.

The working group had hoped to receive the task force's final report in time to approve it at a public meeting scheduled for Feb. 24, just prior to a meeting of the National Governors Association taking place here Feb. 26-28.

'Chaos would result if each of the 50 states was able to establish, for example, its own tariff barriers and export regulations...'

But the Treasury recently announced that, despite "substantial progress," the task force needed more time "to conduct further analysis of recently developed options." The task force will meet March 20-22. The working group plans to hold its final public session shortly after that.

Forty-five U.S. states collect corporate income taxes. Twenty-four of these apply the concept of "unitary" taxation within the borders of the United States, which means they treat a U.S. firm and all its domestic subsidiaries, which may operate in several states, as one unit.

The current dispute involves 12 states that carry unitary taxation beyond the U.S. water's edge: Alaska, California, Colorado, Florida, Idaho, Indiana, Massachusetts, Montana, New Hampshire, North Dakota, Oregon and Utah.

Each does so differently, but basically this is how the system works in the case of a company based in Paris with subsidiaries around the world, including one located in State X:

The state asks the firm to report its worldwide earnings. Then it applies a formula to decide how much of this total is taxable by the state. Usually the formula is based on how much of the company's worldwide payroll, sales or property, or some combination of these, is within the state.

In June 1983, the Supreme Court upheld the right of California to apply this worldwide unitary concept to overseas subsidiaries of a U.S.-based firm. The court has yet to rule on its application to a foreign-based firm with a subsidiary in the United States. It has sent several cases raising that issue back for more hearings.

Foreign-based multinational companies say the system subjects them to double taxation, since the states are basing their tax on income that also is taxed by their home governments and by other countries in which they operate.

Dennis Taylor, president of EZ America Ltd., the U.S. subsidiary of an Australian firm, said in written testimony to the working group that California, where the company warehouses supplies of zinc, used the worldwide unitary concept to demand $226,000 in back taxes.

"By what logic," he asked, "can it be the business of California, or any of the states ... whether our Emu Bay Railroad in Tasmania; our sulphuric acid and fertilizer sales in Australia; our silver, lead and copper ore sales in Japan or Eastern Europe; our zinc sales in Southeast Asia or China are profitable or not?"

Overseas firms also say the system imposes huge paperwork costs on them. For each unitary state in which they operate they must assemble data from all their operations around the world, each operating in different currencies and under different local accounting methods.

Foreign governments say the system violates widely accepted international principles on avoiding double taxation and on treating subsidiaries and their parents as operating at "arms length."

The European Community, Japan, Canada, Australia and other countries, have filed official complaints in Washington. Some have hinted at possible retaliation.

Many in this country say the unitary tax clashes with the constitutional responsibility of the federal government to negotiate tax treaties and make national policies on trade and investment without being undercut by the states.

"Chaos would result if each of the 50 states was able to establish, for example, its own tariff barriers and export regulations," attorney Edwin Cohen, representing the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, told the working group. Increasing worldwide use of unitary taxation by the states, he said, "will prevent and profits among subsidiaries so as to unfairly lower their taxes in a given state.

The states say they don't have big enough accounting staffs to properly enforce separate accounting and don't have access to information that the federal government gets on the worldwide earnings of U.S.-based multinationals.

Accountants say the worldwide unitary system can raise or lower a company's taxes in a given state. A company with big earnings within a state and losses elsewhere in the world would benefit from it.

Nevertheless, the National Governors' Association estimates that if the 12 states now using the system were to abandon it they would together lose $500 million to $700 million a year in revenue.

Within the task force, several proposals have been made to reach a compromise. Some took this form:

'By what logic can it be the business of California, or any of the states ... whether our Emu Bay Railroad in Tasmania; our sulphuric acid and fertilizer sales in Australia; our silver, lead and copper ore sales in Japan or Eastern Europe; our zinc sales in Southeast Asia or China are profitable or not?'

the federal government from being able to speak on behalf of the entire nation with one voice in conducting foreign policy."

States using the worldwide unitary system say they do not tax foreign income but only use this income to correctly estimate a firm's income within the state.

The alternative to unitary taxation is called "separate accounting." Subsidiaries and parent firms are regarded as separate entities operating at "arms length." States say that under separate accounting, multinational firms can engage in a "shell game," apportioning costs

The domestically based firms say any compromise should include something they have sought for many years — exemption from state taxation of dividends returned by overseas subsidiaries to domestic parent firms.

If domestic multinationals win this exemption, then small businesses become alarmed, fearing the states will make up for lost revenue by raising their taxes.

John Shannon, assistant director of the Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations, Increasing worldwide use of unitary taxation by the states 'will prevent the federal government from being able to speak on behalf of the entire nation with one voice in conducting foreign policy.'

established by Congress to study state-federal relations, sees a "better than 50-50 chance" the negotiations will reach an accord.

If not, he says, other "self-correcting" forces in the American governmental system may ultimately decide the issue.

The courts have not yet given their final word.

Many states still are debating whether worldwide unitary taxation on balance helps them by raising revenue or hurts them by discouraging foreign investment that creates jobs.

A visiting delegation from Japan's Keidanren, equivalent to its chamber of commerce, recently served notice that Japanese firms are unlikely in future to locate plants in worldwide unitary states.

Illinois and New York have given up worldwide unitary taxation. Florida, which recently adopted it, has been considering possible repeal.

Bubble Boy

David's Death May Help Others Live

HOUSTON (UPI) — David, the "bubble boy," died bravely and made his "greatest contribution" to medicine by providing knowledge that may help other immune-deficient victims live longer, doctors say.

"David was a happy boy," Dr. William Shearer said tearfully at a news conference Thursday. "He was ready for problems, but he tended to hide his feelings. Whatever the situation was in the last few days, he made it easy for his doctors."

David, whose last name has been withheld since his birth Sept. 17, 1971 to protect his family's privacy, died Wednesday night at Texas Children's Hospital. He was 12.

A victim of severe combined immune deficiency syndrome, David had lived all but the last two weeks of his life in germ-free bubbles to protect him against disease his body could not fight.

On the first day out of his isolated environment, David touched his mother's hand and she kissed him for the first time. He never got what he wanted most — to walk barefoot in the grass outside his home.

Shearer said before sedating David Wednesday morning to put him on a respirator, the boy winked at him. "That was the last thing he communicated," he said.

A wake was held Friday night and a private funeral will be held today.

Shearer said an autopsy revealed David died from an overgrowth of disease-fighting B cells that ate at his lungs, spleen and 'There was nothing negative about him. He had no self-pity. He had to be in discomfort, but he never complained. David never, never complained. I think David was strong. He was a good boy.'

intestines and led to heart failure. B cells are one-half of a normal immune system. Without T cells, the other half of the disease-fighting system, to control them, they can be destructive.

Shearer said the B cell growth occurred after David received an experimental bone marrow transplant from his 15-year-old sister. Doctors had hoped the transplant would provide him with both the B and T cells.

David also had been suffering diarrhea, vomiting and fever — which prompted doctors to make the crucial decision to remove him from his plastic bubble.

"David's life has been important for medicine, but his greatest contribution was his death," said Shearer.

"What this has taught us is that there is an important connection between the immune system and the development of cancer or abnormal growth of cells. And while we do not completely understand this problem in David, David has given us this opportunity (for study)," Shearer said.

Shearer said David's death will likely prolong the lives of others who lack disease-fighting systems, including adult victims of acquired immune deficiency syndrome, or AIDS.

In Shenandoah, a community 30 miles north of Houston, neighbors drew a tight circle of security around David's family. Police kept media and bystanders a block away from the house.

"They are like family," one neighbor said. "Why can't everyone respect their feelings and leave them in peace?"

The Rev. Laurence Connelly of Sacred Heart Catholic Church in Conroe performed last rites for David before he was placed on the respirator Wednesday.

"The first thing that struck you about David was his independence," said Connelly. "He was intelligent. There was nothing negative about him. He had no self-pity. He had to be in discomfort, but he never complained. David never, never complained. I think David was strong. He was a good boy."

Immune Deficiencies Can Be Cured

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Birth without an immune system is fatal unless the body's defenses against disease can be restored. Doctors say tissue transplants from the right person now have an 80 percent chance of achieving such a cure.

The first such bone marrow transplant to create protection against invading bacteria and viruses was performed in 1968 at the University of Minnesota and a National Institutes of Health specialist says the patient is alive and well.

David, the "bubble boy" who died in Houston, was not as lucky.

His doctors at the Baylor College of Medicine were unable to find a perfect tissue match so bone marrow from his sister was used after attempts were made to remove cells that might cause the transplanted tissue to recognize David as foreign and attack his body.

David's doctor said there is no evidence that the boy succumbed to such an attack.

The key to the body's ability to ward off invading germs are white cells that arise from bone marrow. One line of these cells develops into B cells. The other is the T cell. Both are key components of the immune system.

It was a wild proliferation of B cells that caused David's death, according to Dr. William Shearer at the Baylor College of Medicine.

Dr. Michael Blase, of the National Cancer Institute, said such B cell growth has occurred in other patients and can be caused by an infection with a very common herpes-like virus called the Epstein-Barr virus.

The virus causes B cells to multiply and the body requires T cells to keep the B cell growth under control.

"If you have no control at all, these B cells will divide like crazy and spread out all over and it's essentially like a malignancy," Blase said.

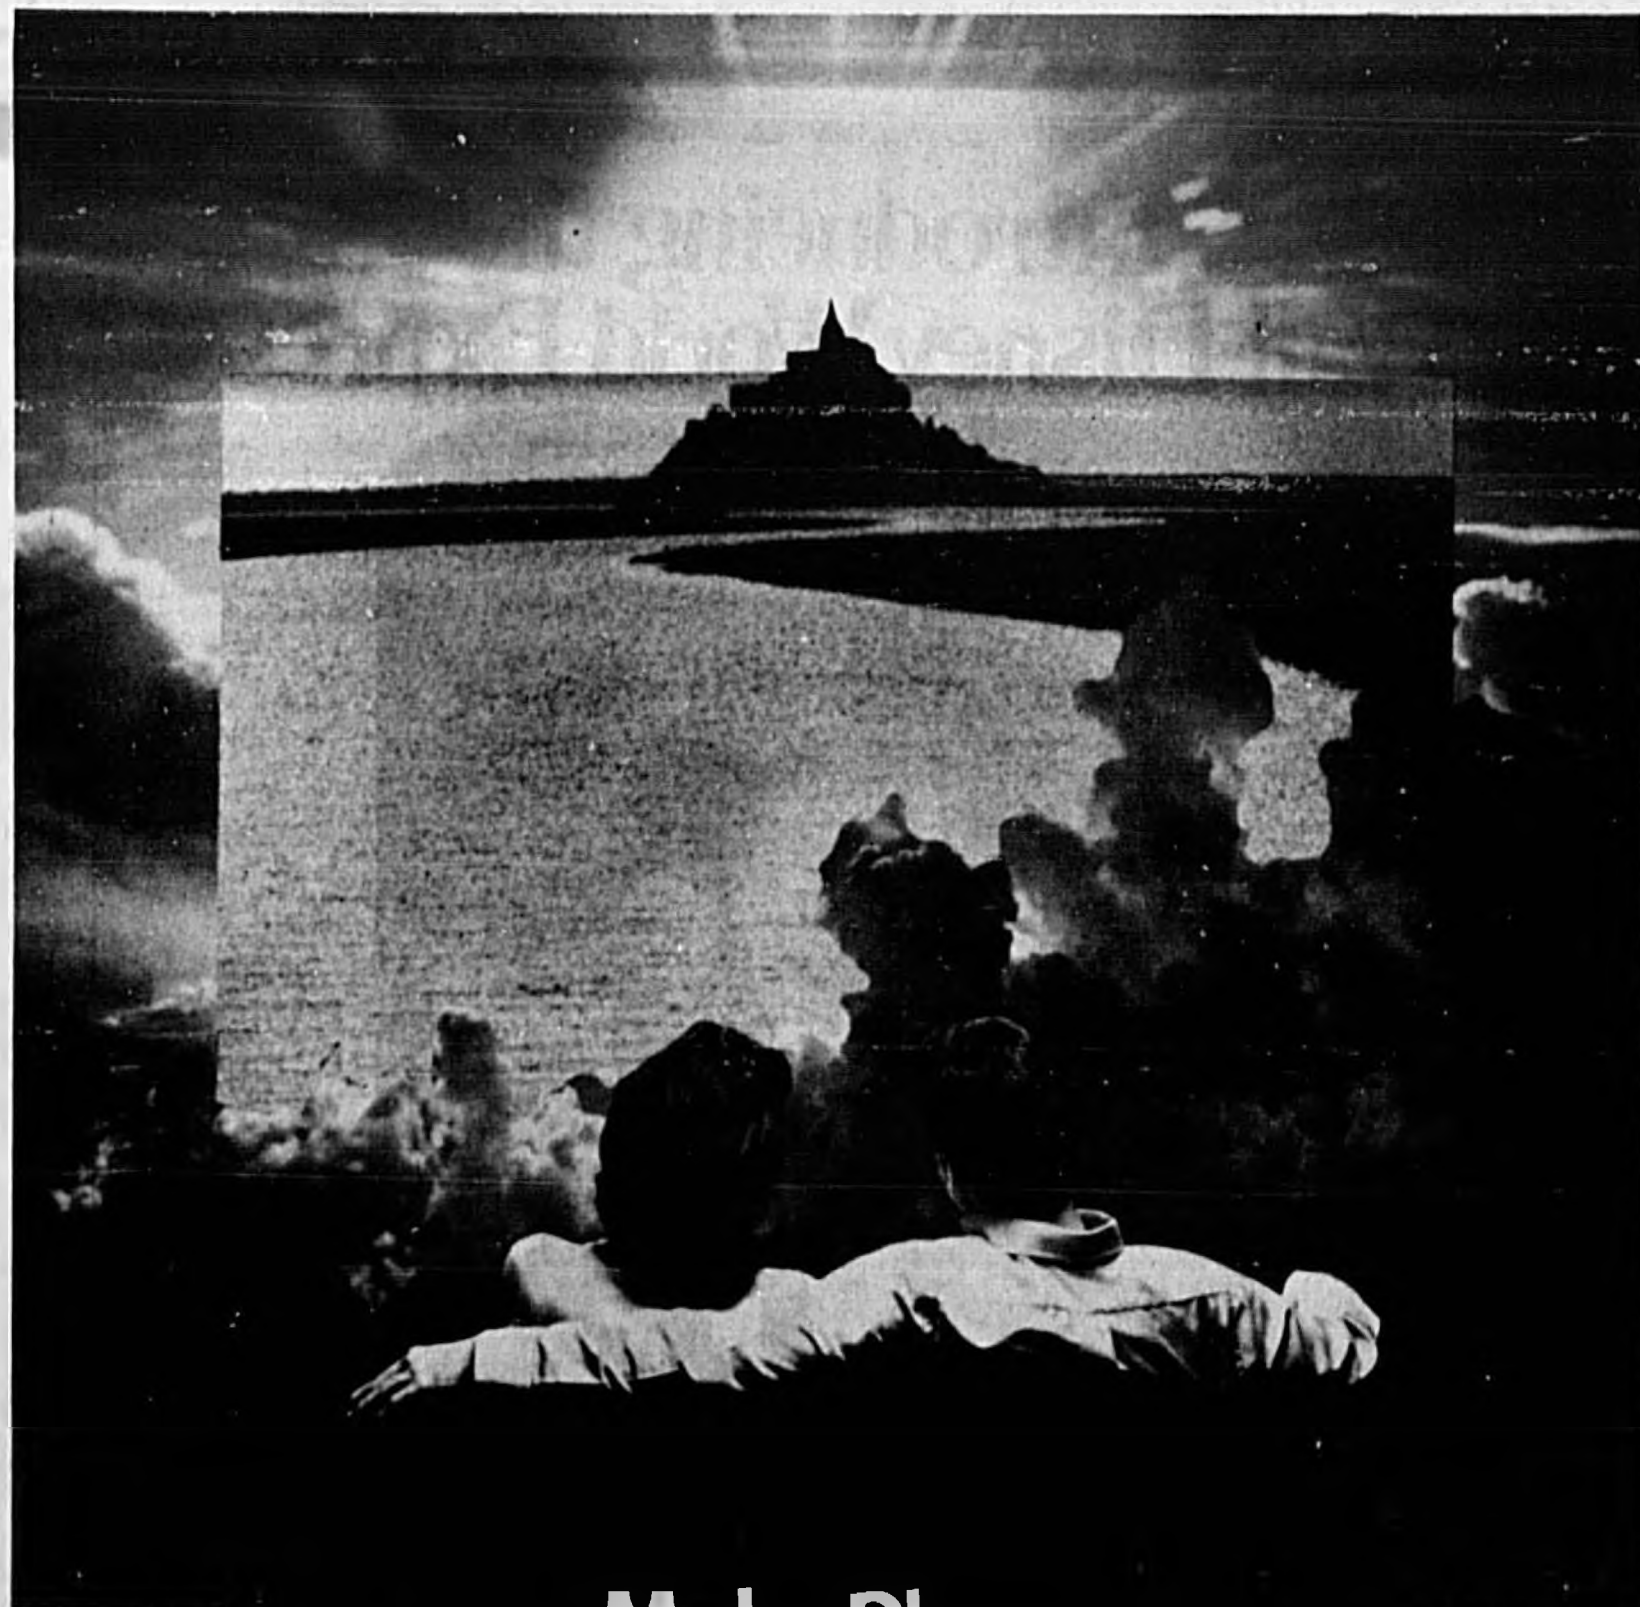

However, it is the T cells that doctors worry about in bone marrow transplants.

Since the bone marrow from David's sister was not a perfect match with David's tissue, Baylor doctors used special proteins called monoclonal antibodies that were specifically designed in the lab to remove mature T cells that would attack the body. The antibodies leave immature stem cells to later grow into mature cells that would be at home in the recipient.

Another experimental process also is used to cleanse bone marrow. This technique, developed by Dr. Richard O'Reilly and associates at the Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center in New York, uses a separation technique that takes advantage of the fact that mature T cells contain a certain sugar-containing protein.

The first such transplant took place in December 1980 and a Sloan-Kettering spokeswoman said 12 have been performed and 11 patients are alive and at home, 10 with fully reconstituted immune systems.

Lasting Contributions Increase The Quality Of Life In Area

By Susan Loden
Herald Staff Writer

February is Black History Month, a tradition that began in 1926 to honor the birthdays of President Abraham Lincoln, who freed the slaves, and abolitionist newspaper publisher Fredrick Douglass.

Sanford has its own black history, which pre-dates the founding of the city by Henry Shelton Sanford, who arrived here in 1870. When Sanford came to Central Florida, Mildred M. Caskey, curator and a director of the Henry Shelton Sanford Museum-Library, Sanford, said, "Sanford was shocked to find blacks living with Seminole Indians."

To remove the blacks from that situation (they had been captured in North Florida Indian raids where their white masters were killed by the Indians), Sanford devised a plan to make the blacks Christian missionaries to the Belgian Congo.

But funding for that expedition was channeled into other areas, and Sanford's first black residents remained among the Indians, according to Mrs. Caskey.

When Sanford needed workmen, he brought 60 black laborers to town to clear and plant the land. But this met strong opposition from white residents who raided the black camp with shotguns and drove them from the area. One black man was killed and a second wounded in that melee, but according to a biography of Sanford compiled by Leo T. Moley, that strengthened Sanford's resolve to make a place for blacks in the community.

By 1890 blacks had found a place in Sanford, primarily as agricultural workers and during that time Sanford's son, Henry Shelton Sanford Jr., wrote a short story about one of his black field hands, Tom Lay.

Young Sanford's story of Tom Lay, an insight into the everyday life of a black workman in that era, will be published by the Sanford Museum this year.

In that account Sanford said that before he became acquainted with Lay the black worker seemed more like a machine than a man. But Sanford became impressed by Lay's human qualities when he removed his hat to receive his pay, because, the former slave said when he got paid he felt he was a man and not a slave any more.

When Lay announced his intent to marry Marie Gloriandi Ysolot Annabel Lee Walth, the daughter of Sanford's washwoman, Sanford offered to rent Lay a cottage on Fourth Street at a discounted rate of $5 a month.

In the 1890s, according to Sanford's story of Tom Lay, a field hand could earn up to $3.50 a day picking fruit which Sanford said was enough to keep a man in bacon and whiskey for a week.

A special edition of The Sanford Chronicle, published in the autumn of 1908, touched on the importance of black people in the community.

"It's difficult to see how Sanford could get along without her negro people.... They are invaluable assistants both at out and indoor work," the article reported.

And over the years as blacks found their way into the mainstream of the community many made visible and lasting contributions that improved the quality of life in the area.

Timothy Wilson, born in Sanford 80 year ago, began his career as an outdoor worker on farms as a young boy, but he said, "We always said if we got able we would do something to help older people."

And Wilson's desire to help along with that of his wife Ruby Lee, whom he said "had a gift from the Lord," led to the establishment of The Good Samaritan Home in 1948. Today that home, although re-housed in a new building in 1973, is still a haven for the elderly and infirmed in Sanford.

Wilson said that it was his marriage to Mrs. Wilson in 1928 that ultimately took him out of the fields and into a life of community service.

Wilson said that his wife, who was killed in an automobile accident about five years ago, became the pastor of The West Sanford Freewill Holiness Church, which had a membership of about a half dozen when she took over its leadership in 1934.

"She was an outstanding speaker and came from an educated background," Wilson said of his wife who was born in 1908. After many years of putting together food baskets for the needy and helping others in whatever way they could, the Wilsons made the commitment and opened The Good Samaritan Home at 1704 W. 9th St., Sanford. And over the years they also provided housing and assistance to children and the childless couple adopted 7-year-old twins, Bobby and Barbara Ann in 1962.

Mrs. Wilson served as president of The Good Samaritan Home until her death. Then Wilson who had always taken an active role in the running of the home stepped into that position which he holds today.

Over the years The Good Samaritan Home, which is supported in part by donations, has been home for hundreds of people, both black and white.

"We're taking care of 48 people now," Wilson said. "All of our beds are full but three, and of course I use one. This is a home for anyone who can't do for themselves, but they have to be able to be up and around. We have people here from 45 to 90 years old."

Wilson said he has seen a lot of changes in Sanford over the years. Most of those changes brought increased education and work opportunities for blacks. He said it's hard to realize what it used to be like when Sanford was a segregated city. The Good Samaritan home never discriminated against white people, Wilson said. And when the rest of the community was desegregated several decades ago it was done without incident, he said.

The Wilsons, pioneers in community service in Sanford, chose to give and found a way to help others. In that process they set an enduring example that all people can draw inspiration from.

PEOPLE

Odd Fellows Elect Stemper Noble Grand

The Rev. William H. Stemper Jr., a native of Sanford from a pioneer family, has been elected to serve as Noble Grand (president) of Sanford Lodge No. 27, Independent Order of Odd Fellows.

The Odd Fellows are an ancient fraternity founded in England in the 18th Century, and brought to the United States by Thomas Wilkey in Baltimore, MD. in 1819.

The purposes of the ritual-based society are the promotion of the principles of friendship, love and truth, through peace to mankind. Programs of the one million member international fraternity include a chair of ophthalmology at Johns Hopkins University, an annual United Nations Pilgrimage for High School Students, a scholarship program for qualified students, and homes for retired and ailing members.

The lodge in Sanford has included several Sanford pioneers and members of pioneer families: W.C. Hill, Ira Southward, J.L. Hobby, George Stine, George E. Wells, John Stemper, Herman E. Morris, Homer Gleason (Lake Mary) and D.C. Howard, among others.

The origin of the name of the society, "Odd Fellows" dates from the time when members of a benevolent society dedicated to the help and relief of others was deemed out of the ordinary. In many ways, like the name "Methodist," "Odd Fellow" was a name of derisiveness which "stuck," and was later incorporated into the official name of the society.

The Rev. Stemper, Chairman and executive director Bishop's Vicar for Corporate Affairs of the Episcopal Diocese of New York, is a member of a number of other societies and organizations.

Membership in the society is open to a select number of qualified applicants through inquiry to the Noble Grand at 111 Kingswood Court, Sanford.

Republican Women Meet

The Sanford Women's Republican Club met for luncheon at the home of the president, Marti White, on Feb. 18.

Guests were Jim Stelling, candidate for State Republican committeeman, and candidates for State Republican committeewoman, Mary Ann Morse and Lee Gormley.

Current State Republic committeeman Fred Streetman, who is running for a seat on the Seminole County commission, initiated a discussion of several issues. Candidates Stelling, Morse and Gormley gave their qualifications for the posts they seek.

The next meeting will be held on March 17 at Sanford Holiday Inn.

Bisigni Pageant Finalist

Suzette Ann Bisigni, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Bisigni of Sanford is a state finalist for Florida's Homecoming Queen. The competition will be held in a pageant Feb. 25 and 26 at the Orlando Hilton.

Miss Bisigni is the Seminole High School Homecoming Queen. Winner of the state pageant will compete in the America's Homecoming Queen June 29-July 2 in Memphis.

She is the recipient of the 1983-84 Optimist Club Leadership Award, is Seminole High class president and the 1983 Prom Queen. Miss Bisigni is also employed part-time in the law firm of Bridges and Cleveland, Sanford.

Variety Of Plants Offered At CC Sale

The Greater Sanford Chamber of Commerce Beautification Committee will hold its annual azalea and plant sale Friday and Saturday from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. in the patio of the Sanford Civic Center.

Due to the shortage of azalea stock caused by the December freeze, Beautification Committee will offer a variety of plants and trees at this year's sale. In addition to assorted azaleas in one and two-gallon cans, there will be roses, burfordi and shelley holly; and four varieties of trees, including silver dollar eucalyptus, bottle brush, live oak and Jerusalem thorn, according to Bill Gielow, chairman.

The committee hopes to raise $5,000 for renovating the chamber building in particular the kitchen and restrooms (which will be made accessible for the handicapped.)

'Latin America' Exhibit At Museum

Joyce Mikkola, writer, photographer and world traveler, shows objets d'art on display in a mid-season exhibit at the Henry S. Sanford Library-Museum, 520 E. First St., Sanford. The exhibit, "The Beauty of Latin America," features a collection of art and artifacts from Costa Rica, Guatemala, Panama, Colombia, Peru, Ecuador and Brazil. The exhibit is free and open to the public during regular museum hours, Sunday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, from 2 to 5 p.m.

WHO AM I?

I am a New York City native. I was a columnist for three metropolitan newspapers, covering the nation's top sporting events. The last five years, though, I've zeroed in on boxing. And I've become more visible.

Tour Group Honors Doris Rogers

Helena Rushlow, right, pins a corsage on her mother, Doris Rogers, at a reception Sunday at the Greater Sanford Chamber of Commerce. Mrs. Rogers was honored at the second annual reunion by the tour group she started 12 years ago. She also celebrated her 79th birthday this week. Mrs. Rogers, a retired New York state history teacher, conducted classes on "Florida History" after moving to the area which led her to forming and founding the tour group. The reunion attracted guests from several states who have been on the Rogers tours. Eva Hunt was chairman and was elected to serve as next year's reunion chairman.

In And Around Lake Mary

Come On Out To Fire Department Barbecue

Reminder: The Lake Mary Volunteer Fire Department is holding its annual "Chicken Bar-B-Que" Saturday, Feb. 25 until noon until 7:00 p.m. at the firehouse.

Delicious barbeque chicken dinners with all the fixings are being sold at $3.00 for adults, $2.00 for children to raise funds for the department. Dinners may either be carried out or eaten at the tables set up in the firehouse.

Topping off the meal will be a table with cakes and desserts baked and served by members of the Lake Mary Woman's Club.

The Lake Mary Community Improvement Association (CIA) has a meeting set for Monday, Feb. 27, at 7:30 p.m. at city hall. Highlights of the meeting will be plans and discussion on the upcoming "My Day" celebration to be held at the site of the future community building, Country Club Road and Grand Avenue. The public is invited.

Marvin and Grace Dikowski of Lake Mary are pleased and happy to announce the birth of a new granddaughter, Stephanie Ann, born on Jan 16.

Grace was able to make a trip to Chicago to visit with her daughter, Linda, and son-in-law, Phillip Peters, at their home, and get a first hand look at the new family member. Baby Stephanie Ann is the third grandchild for Grace and Marvin who are themselves originally from Chicago.

While Grace visited with her new granddaughter, she also found time to visit with some of her old friends. Grace said that the weather up in Chicago was a cool 50° below with the wind-chill factor, and she was glad to get home to warm, sunny Florida.

Karen Warner

It is interesting to note that baby Stephanie shares the same birthdate as her daddy, Phillip, Jan. 16. The Peters, Linda and Phillip were both the "only child" in their families, and according to Grace, they've decided to have a large family for themselves. With three already, they're making a good start. Congratulations.

Grace and Marvin will also have some special company coming to visit soon. Good friends that lived next door to them in Chicago, the Marks, are going to drop in on their way to Tampa.

Congratulations to Teddi Irene Brooklyn and David Allan Dovan who plan to marry on June 9, at 6:30 p.m. at the First Presbyterian Church of Lake Mary.

Teddi is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ted Brooklyn, maternal granddaughter of Mrs. Florence Zimmerman and paternal granddaughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Brooklyn, all of which live in Lake Mary. David is the son of Mr. and Mrs. William Dovan of Sanford. Congratulations.

Wedding bells rang out at the First Baptist Church of Sanford for Tracy Lynne Gregory and Brent Ketring on Feb. 18. Tracy is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Earl Gregory of Lake Mary. Brent is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Ketring of Pendleton, Indiana. Congratulations.

Congratulations to Larry Strickler, manager of Southern Bell, Sanford, who has been elected to the Freedom, Seminole County Advisory Board. The announcement was made by Robert Klingler, president of the Central Florida division of Freedom.

As well as his new appointment, Larry serves as president of United Way, and is a board member of the Private Industry Council, member of the Seminole County School Based Management Task Force, Junior Achievement and the Lake Mary Rotary Club.

There are over 40 Lake Mary residents celebrating their birthdays this month, too many to list each one separately, so, instead let me say, "Happy Birthday to you all."

There are still a few tickets available to attend the third annual Fashion Show and Luncheon sponsored by the Children's Home Society Auxiliary being held on March 3, at the Harley Hotel in Orlando.

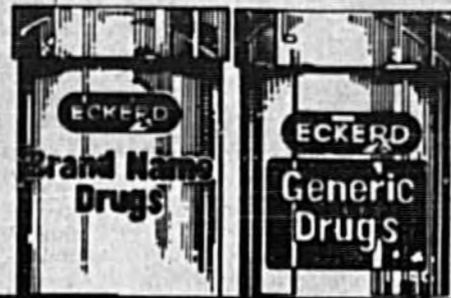

Fashion coordinator Gaye Peterson McNair of Jordan Marsh will oversee the fashion show. Other entertainment will include entertainer Phyllis Dale and her Trio, and "Stepping Out" dance numbers performed by the Showtime Dance Studio.

Chairman of the fund raiser is Carole Nelson of channel 6, along with co-chairman Marilyn Young and Kathy Scovanner. Funds raised from the Fashion show/Luncheon will benefit the Children's Emergency Medical fund. Tickets are $17.50 per person, festivities begin at 11:00 a.m. for cocktails. For more information, contact the Children's Home Society, Orlando.
