Miss DuBose Weds W. E. Dodson Touay

Miss Marjorie DuBose, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. C. DuBose, became the bride of W. E. Dodson, son of Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Dodson, at a wedding ceremony at the First Presbyterian Church with the Rev. E. D. Brown officiating.

Against a background of fern, a mass arrangement of white gladioli was placed on the back rail of the rostrum and balanced on each side by large floor baskets of calla lilies. At the steps leading to the rostrum a giant white potted hydrangea bloomed. Gladioli were placed in other arrangements throughout the church.

The nuptial music, played on the organ by Mrs. F. B. Varnay, included the traditional wedding marches, "To A Wild Rose" and a selection from "Lohengrin" which was played during the wedding ceremony. "All For You" and "Oh, Perfect Love" were sung by William DuBose, brother of the bride.

After the ceremony a powder dress outfit of summer sheer with an ornate and lace-trimmed blouse and featuring a short fitted jacket and ballerina skirt. To complete this ensemble she wore white accessories and carried an arm bouquet of pink roses, gerbera daisies and delphinium.

Miss Marjorie DuBose, maid-of-honor, wore a pink/red dress outfit and carried an arm bouquet of pink roses, gerbera daisies and delphinium.

Billions Seen As Necessary To Keep U. S. Well Armed

By EDWARD E. BOMAR
Associated Press Writer

Depending largely on events in Europe the United States faces the grim prospect of piling billions on billions for war weapons to meet the possibility of a new world order based on aggressive force.

The $1,182,000,000 asked of Congress by President Roosevelt represents a mere start, it appears, on the process of diverting a mounting share of national effort and treasure from civil to military purposes.

"The American people must react to their thinking about national protection," Roosevelt warned legislators. "More concretely, Mr. George C. Marshall, the army chief of staff, served notice that further tremendous sums would be asked for expansion of land and air forces."

To appreciate why, consider the implications of only one aspect of the vast new preparedness campaign. This is the President's proposal that the United States undertake to create combined army and navy air forces of 50,000 planes, while expanding industry's capacity to turn out a like number every year.

By one navy expert's estimate, a naval air force of 10,000 aircraft would require 500,000 mechanics and other ground forces for shore bases and aircraft carriers, aside from 20,000 or so pilots.

It would mean tripling the entire personnel of the present navy, which is about 150,000 officers and men.

The army calculations are only slightly less startling. For the 3000 planes which Congress authorized last year, 15,000 enlisted men aside from pilots are being recruited and trained now. On this basis, to man 10,000 planes would demand a considerably larger air corps alone than the entire existing regular army of about 210,000 officers and men.

Relying as it has upon a community of interests with friendly European powers, upon a one-ocean navy, a small air force and a mere nucleus army, the United States has been spending only two or three percent of the national income on defense in recent years.

Nazi Germany, by contrast, has been devoting from 30 to 40 percent of its income to preparations for war, a figure which other nations apparently found difficult to envision in advance.

Not even the gloomiest of American leaders anticipate that an Allied defense of Roman peace and subsequent aggressive struggle for world power and trade would impose upon such a burden on this country. But in the light of the threatened upset of the whole international balance of power, the $3,000,000,000 or more likely to be voted the army and navy at this session of Congress appears only a beginning.

A heartening factor is that the prospective heavily increased outlays for arms promise to show more results in the next two or three years than in the immediate past.

General Marshall told Congress that Germany's quick rise to overwhelming might was explained partly by the fact that Hitler started to rearm almost from scratch, the Versailles treaty having largely stripped the reich of World war weapons.

Thus, as a result of "a situation that has never occurred before in the history of the world," General Marshall noted that the formidable weapons of the war machine bettered through France were all new and ultra-modern.

To a lesser degree, American armed forces are in a situation left over from the World war in a substantial store of outmoded weapons, ammunition and supplies, but they have gradually been relegated to the status of reserves. Modern arms have been designed and tested but not yet manufactured in sufficient numbers.

The navy has been busy since 1933 replacing the oldest ships. In quality, American planes compare with Europe's best so that air forces can expand from their present strength without a general junking of equipment.

Shelterbelts, totaling about 2,500 miles in length, now exist on approximately 4,000 Kansas farms.

World's Military Budgets Co-Ordinated Defense Program

WASHINGTON, May 22.—(AP)—A committee of an industrial-military board to seek recommendations for the nation's vast rearmament effort was proposed by two Democratic senators yesterday in a bill introduced in the Senate. The bill would create a committee to co-ordinate defense funds and special legislation.

The special legislation, providing for the creation of a new Defense Board, and certain provisions for the defense program, would be introduced by the Senate committee on the floor tomorrow. Committee members have already indicated informally that they would recommend its passage.

At the same time tomorrow the full Senate appropriations committee will consider the $1,274,000,000 army supply bill, which is a substantial increase over the $1,100,000,000 authorized last year. This measure, carrying the army's share of the extraordinary $1,100,000,000 defense fund asked by President Roosevelt, is expected to pass the Senate by Thursday.

The appointment of industrial, labor representatives and army and navy officials to a board charged with co-ordinating the production of war equipment was advocated by Senator Connally, Democratic, Texas. Both the measure of the Senate for arm reductions and financial expansion and the bill for the defense program, suggested that it should be given only limited authority to direct industrial expansion. It should not, the Georgian declared, be clothed with the all-inclusive powers delegates to the World War Industries board.

Connally said he thought an advisory board, working under the direction of the President, could be very helpful in co-ordinating the production of essential defense materials.

Military Budgets Of All Nations Near 40 Billions

WASHINGTON, May 22.—(AP)—Take the military defense budgets of the nations of the world from 1932 through 1940, and add 'em together. Call that the thermometer of the world's military spending.

On that basis we're now running a fever of 1934 degrees and it's going up every minute.

In 1932, the year Hitler took the helm in Germany, the world's nations combined to spend about four billion a year ($3,000,000,000 to be exact) on defense.

By 1940, the year Hitler started making fun of castles on the Rhine, the published figures on nations' defense totaled $11,770,000,000. We were close to 100 degrees.

This year, now that Hitler has jumped the traces in all directions except through the Maginot line, the world fever's running hot. The total expenditures will be about 35 billions of dollars—$44,800,000,000 if you are finicky.

The worst part of this little parable is that the budgeted cost of national defense—there is the army, navy, and other military costs—confined on the ledger sheets or through inflated estimates—is a mere drop in the bucket to what's really being spent for the sole purpose of waging war, or against possibility of war.

If you count in every thing—the pensions, Hitler's military roads that also can be used for scenic highways when not vibrating under blitzkrieg armies, Great Britain's air guard, and a thousand and one other costs in war, the total is a vast sum of all—human lives—you can't find space wide enough to take the figures.

But you can make up a thermometer, and read the temperature on it.

Europe consistently has been accounting for most of the war expenditures for many a generation. In 1932, the countries of Europe were spending a mere two billions and a half. Today's figures are well over 40 billions of dollars.

Germany is the biggest spender. Unfortunately you can only make estimates there, for the Nazis publish no budget. But economists of various nations who have observed military activities in Germany at first hand in the last year or so, and many other estimates, figure that at least 60 percent of the national income of the German people is going to arm the country. They estimated that at $12,400,000,000 a year for blitzkriegs.

No wonder they're making the Allies look slow and cumbersome. For the people in the Allied countries aren't spending near that much—yet. The "London Economist" estimates that British war expenditures for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1940, at $7,122,000,000, and the French military spending is carried on the unofficial national budget at $4,800,000,000—only a little over $12,000,000,000 all told. And they're "over spending" at that rate since last September, while Germany has been spending at the 15 billion dollar level at least three years.

Then there's that old bear, Russia. She conforms to the world that she's spending $11,400,000,000 this year, almost as much as the Allies.

All of which means that war not only costs big, but the fellow who spends the most seems to get the most advantage. Lastways, Germany and Russia are the only victors so far.

The Allies are going to have to sink a lot more money and manpower into war machinery if the headlines from Europe mean anything.
