Chrysler recalls some models

DETROIT — Chrysler Corp. is recalling 115,000 Jeep Grand Cherokees and Grand Wagoneers because of a defective pin that could impede steering.

The recall, the third for Grand Cherokee since it went on sale in early 1992, involves 1993 models built from Dec. 18, 1992, through last summer.

Chrysler notified dealers that the lower and upper portions of the steering column could separate because of a sheared connecting pin.

The company began mailing letters to owners on Monday and Tuesday, spokesman Lee Sechler said. Chrysler sold 217,000 Grand Cherokees and Grand Wagoneers in 1993.

By SANDRA ELLIOTT

SANFORD — Three former Lakeview Middle School students and their parents have sued the Seminole County School Board claiming the board was negligent for hiring, supervising and retaining a band teacher found guilty of molesting four band students.

Stephen A. Paterson, 38, pleaded no contest in November to four counts of a lewd and lascivious act in the presence of a child, one for each male band member who claimed he was molested. Paterson is serving a year in the John E. Polk Correctional Facility. After getting out of jail, he will be on two years community control (house arrest) followed by 10 years probation.

The civil suits were filed by two youths who were named as victims in the criminal cases. The remaining two students in the criminal cases OVIDO — Discussions moved the possibility of a third major mall in Seminole County closer to reality Thursday as representatives of A. Duda and Sons and a mall developer met with county officials to initiate development plans.

"They sound serious," commented County Manager Ron Rabun, who attended a portion of the afternoon meeting in commission chairman Dick Van Der Weide's office.

"The one thing I wanted to guarantee them is the expertise and professionalism of our staff ready to help them," said Van Der Weide.

Van Der Weide said the meeting included representatives and legal staff from mall developer Rouse Co. and from A. Duda and Sons, owners

'Johns' nabbed in hooker sting

By VICKI DeSORMIER

SANFORD — Nine men went fishing for sex on 5th Street and Sanford Avenue on the wrong night Thursday.

Sanford Police were conducting a reverse sting operation on that corner.

Female police officers, posing as prostitutes, stood on the corner waiting to be propositioned by the men who offered everything from $5 to a fishing reel in exchange for a few moments of sexual pleasure.

"I don't believe I've ever heard that one before," said Commander Dennis Whitmire of the offer of fishing equipment in exchange for oral sex. "I'm not sure what he thought the girl would be able to do with the fishing reel."

The Sanford Police Department has been conducting reverse sting operations for about two years in an effort to eliminate the prostitution problem by taking the customers off the street.

Whitmire said that, to his knowledge, they have never arrested a repeat customer in one of the stings.

Last night's operation lasted about five hours and brought in men from as far away as Dayton, Ohio and as close as less than a block away.

Whitmire said the operation went smoothly this time. None of the men resisted arrest or tried to flee when they were caught.

The men who were arrested were: Albert John Hubert, 55, 2800 Waccasassa Dr., Geneva, for allegedly offering the undercover officer $15 in exchange for oral sex.

John C. Ream, 47, 1249 Worthington Dr., Deltona, for allegedly offering the undercover officer $20 in exchange for oral sex.

Missing girl, 3, located with mother

By VICKI DeSORMIER
Herald Staff Writer

SANFORD — The mother of a missing girl called sheriff's officials this morning to tell them that she had her daughter.

Sheriff's investigators had been searching for the 3-year-old since her father reported her missing last evening.

David Phillip Garr told officials last night that he had left the little girl in a child restraint seat in the front seat of his car when he went into the Sanford Food Mart on Sanford Avenue about 5:30 p.m. yesterday.

He said he went into the store to buy cigarettes and a quart of beer and, he told investigators, he was only in the store "for a minute."

Garr, 27, told investigators that he and Amber Lynn McIntosh-Garr had been living in the station wagon from which the child had allegedly disappeared, since he and his wife, Melissa McIntosh-Garr, split up two weeks ago.

He said that his wife had maintained custody of High court upholds hate crime law

By BILL BERGSTROM
 Associated Press Writer

TALLHASSEE — The state Supreme Court upheld Florida's hate crimes law that imposes harsher penalties when a victim is attacked because of race or religion.

The court ruled Thursday that Broward County Circuit Court must rehear the case of a Fort Lauderdale man charged with shoving and berating a Jewish attorney.

"This is a good day in the fight against hatred and bigotry," said Arthur Teitelbaum, director of the Anti-Defamation League of B'Nai B'rith, which helped create the model for the law.

But the Supreme Court's ruling was questioned by Justice

Major Harding, who wrote the dissenting opinion with Chief Justice Rosemary Barkett concurring. Harding said the law was unconstitutional and it was up to lawmakers, not the Supreme Court, to change it.

"The majority has gone too far in trying to give an unconstitutional statute a constitutional meaning," Harding and Barkett wrote.

Broward County Circuit Court Judge Leonard Fleet struck down the law in the case of Richard Stalder of Fort Lauderdale, who was accused of shoving attorney Herbert Cohen in April 1991 and uttering anti-Semitic epithets.

Stalder's attorney, D. Robert Sillier of Fort Lauderdale, said

Thursday he hadn't decided whether to challenge the state Supreme Court ruling or let the case go back to Broward Circuit Court and await the outcome there.

A pig dilemma

The Lake Mary City Commission has a dilemma on its hands. The establishment of a pig farm has some nearby residents up in arms.

The farm is located on Rinehart Road near Pine Circle Drive. It is also located near the Feather's Edge residential community.

There are a number of points to be considered. The pigs are being raised on land zoned as agriculture. While there are presently 15 pigs on approximately 1.7 acres, zoning, if interpreted in one way, does allow this.

They are nearby a residential area however, and if there is an odor problem, it may create a health problem, which would not allow it to continue as a pig farm.

Last year, the owner of the property sought to have it rezoned so he could lease the land for creation of an animal hospital. It was denied by the Lake Mary Planning and Zoning Commission.

Residents have publicly said they prefer the land be used for residential development, but the land owner does not want such a use.

At the present time, the city attorney is looking into what restrictions he may be able to find pertaining to the pigs being some type of health or safety hazard.

The city planner is looking into what is and is not allowed under the property under the present agricultural zoning.

The land owner is still hoping to have the property rezoned so he can pursue the leasing for the animal hospital.

The residents continue to voice complaints about the overall situation, with some indicating they will not rest until the pigs are gone and the land is made residential.

Meetings to resolve this problem must be held. The property owner, nearby residents, and city officials must reach a settlement. At the present time, the pigs may or may not be legal on the property. The matter is still up for question.

Yet, the expressway will intersect with Interstate-4 nearby, and the Seminole Towne Center Mall is coming in about 18 months. The area of Rinehart Road which passes the pig farm will become one of the major gateways into the city, possibly equal to Lake Mary Boulevard from the west.

This then becomes a concern for not just the farmer and residents, but all Lake Mary citizens. What kind of image will people receive when they enter Lake Mary on Rinehart?

Everyone may have to give a little in resolving this dilemma, but it can be done. We urge maintaining cool heads, but approaching this matter so that it is a benefit to everyone.

The farmer has his rights. So do others. This conflict should be put to rest.

Update on concern

I wrote to you last summer about the condition of the Land Records Department in our county courthouse. I felt that there was very little interest from our clerk's office about this situation. The condition of the records and the equipment needed to view those records was on a fast downhill and no one seemed to care. Many concerned people signed that letter in support of desperately needed change. I wrote that letter and I'm glad that I did, but I am a person who can appreciate when a job is being done. Since that last letter (and a story that appeared in the Sanford Herald) many changes have been made. We have new microfilm viewers (18 I think) and they actually work. Ten years of information has been merged onto one set of film instead of having to view one year at a time. There's a new computer system that will eventually contain information from 1-1-83 to current. There's been some technical problems with the new system but they're gradually working those out. The situation is not ideal by any means but the improvement is at least 500 percent. Thanks.

Moynihan's intellect shrouds faults

One of the most fallacious assumptions exploited by members of the U.S. Senate is that each one of them is, in Marc Antony's words, "an honorable man."

First, all of them are not men. Second, all of them are not honorable. And third, some are considerably less honorable than others. Bob Packwood is a classic example.

But it is far more difficult to categorize a senator with the scintillating intellect, the leprechaun charm and the political charisma of New York's Daniel Patrick Moynihan.

Lispers more scholarly non sequiturs than George F. Will, the 66-year-old Moynihan has conned the media into a sycophantic adoration while he occasionally subverts the liberal democratic agenda.

Bill Clinton has discovered — to a chagrin long suffered by liberals, blacks, women and poor people — that Moynihan's lofty Ph.D. caparison is much like a gaily colored Hawaiian muumuu: It can hide a multitude of sins.

He has come down into the gutter of pork barrel politics, retalliated for a perceived snub and allied himself with conservatives just to teach liberal adversaries a lesson.

Take one very recent week. He dished Clinton's assessment of health care as being in a crisis, called for an independent prosecutor to look into a burgeoning scandal — Clinton's Whitewater "tangled web" — and accused Clinton of holding Moynihan's pet obsession, welfare reform, hostage at the expense of health care. "Boob bait for the boobas," he sniffed.

But there are only two reasons Moynihan wants health care legislation assigned to his committee. One is a personal pique against Clinton, generated by a White House aide's insult. The other is a power struggle with the more liberal Ted Kennedy's committee.

The exquisite irony of conservative Democrat Moynihan bad-mouthing health care reform is that liberal Republican John Chafee says it is indeed a crisis. As for the independent prosecutor, public concerns have made it necessary. But Democratic Moynihan is not only supporting that need, he is actually leading the feeding frenzy on the president's character.

First, all of them are not men. Second, all of them are not honorable.

Such self-centered arrogance, however, explains why he had no qualms about serving two Republican presidents as comfortably as he did two Democratic presidents in Cabinet and sub-Cabinet positions.

Moynihan first attracted national attention in 1965 as Johnson's assistant secretary of labor with his controversial report, "The Negro Family," which blamed blacks for all of their dysfunctional sins.

A racially divisive debate raged for months. But the national spotlight turned Moynihan on. Hoping to hustle Republicans for a job, Moynihan privately urged President Nixon in 1969 to wean his administration from the Kennedy-Johnson pro-civil rights legacy with a policy of "benign neglect."

Moynihan's reprise of thinly disguised racism infuriated blacks. But he shrugged off their protests by attributing the phrase to a 1839 British report on Canada.

A grateful Republican Nixon rewarded his adopted maverick Democrat with an appointment as counselor to the president, upgrading it to Cabinet status.

Bradley critiques Russia policy

WASHINGTON — The Republican National Committee spent the better part of its winter meeting bashing President Clinton on everything from taxes to health care reform. But it fell silent on an issue that could one day overshadow Clinton's domestic initiatives: the future of Russia.

President Clinton has put the full power and prestige of his office behind the presidency of Boris Yeltsin. He has backed up his rhetoric by spearheading an aid package from the state that promises $43 billion to Russia, though much of it has yet to be delivered. Most of the aid — $2.5 billion from the United States this year alone — is going directly to the Yeltsin government.

The task of second-guessing Clinton's Russia policy has fallen on a man who was a runner-up to becoming Secretary of State last year, Sen. Bill Bradley, D-N.J. While most Democrats are voicing support for a new Marshall Plan, Bradley is venting misgivings. A decade ago the Cold War was an inter-party debate, but now it's a source of intra-party bickering.

"Given the present disarray in the Russian bureaucracy, pumping money into Russia is like pumping money into a black hole," Bradley told our associate Andrew Conte.

Bradley worries that the Clinton administration has been too quick to accept Yeltsin's reformist rhetoric at face value. Yeltsin may talk like a reformer, but lately he walks like an autocrat.

"I don't think we should put all our eggs in the Yeltsin basket," Bradley said. "And I do not think we should hesitate to criticize Yeltsin when he takes anti-democratic steps, such as in the recent election campaign, when he denied certain people who were opposed to his view from having access to the media."

This is not the first time Bradley has been a lone voice on U.S.-Russian relations. When U.S. officials embraced Mikhail Gorbachev's initial reforms of the Soviet Union in the 1980s, Bradley was the one who reminded his American colleagues that Gorbachev was still a communist, warning them not to put too much faith in his sincerity or survival.

Just as Bradley's warnings about Gorbachev proved prophetic, his suspicions about Yeltsin are validated by the events that followed Clinton's Moscow visit earlier this month. Clinton had barely touched down on American soil when word came that two of Yeltsin's most committed reformers had left the cabinet. The departures of top reformers Yegor Gaidar and Finance Minister Boris Yegorov sounded the death knell for democratic reforms in Russia.

In their places, Yeltsin has infused his new cabinet with apparatchiks from the old Soviet regime. Conservatives now outnumber reformers in the Yeltsin camp, and indications are that Russia will now move to prop up the antiquated industrial base that reforms were supposed to obliterate. Though some view Yeltsin's actions as a necessary political step to halt the ascendancy of ultra-nationalists like Vladimir Zhirinovskiy, others believe Yeltsin is already losing his stomach for systemic reform.

"Many of the people who are now democrats in Russia, such as Yeltsin, were just a few years ago communists," Bradley said. "Many of the leaders who were party apparatchiks... are now spouting a strongly nationalistic line."

Bradley does not dispute the need for America to help foster democracy in Russia. The difference between himself and Clinton lies in the ways and means.

It fell silent on an issue that could one day overshadow Clinton's domestic initiatives: the future of Russia.

DONNA BRITT

Not the weather, but the dreams

LOS ANGELES — Question: Where would picking one's way down three dark and shaky flights of stairs in a soon-to-be-condemned building, a bag of underwear in one hand and a vacuum cleaner in the other, seem normal?

Answer: In Los Angeles, an always-strange city whose post-earthquake personal transcends bizarre. Life in post-quake L.A. means: Avoiding unripe, green oranges on sidewalks where they landed after the quake ripped them from trees.

Regularly stopping chewing, jogging, buying — and even breathing as aftershocks shimmy beneath you.

Hearing stilted salesmen greet customers with, "Hi — how was your earthquake?" And hearing folks respond with details of where they were Monday at 4:30 a.m., how they fared, and whether they believed all that shaking was The Big One.

It wasn't. But it was big enough that two days later, one question still resounds:

"Why do people live here?"

I wondered that Tuesday as I helped a dazed friend pack up everything valuable that she owns — except her dream.

I wondered six years ago when, after moving here from suburban Washington, I was instructed by my son Hamani's new school to prepare an emergency kit — snacks, a toy, a letter — to be given to him should a major quake prevent me from reaching him quickly.

Great idea, awful to execute. "What an exciting and scary time you've had!" I wrote to my then-6-year-old, my tone falsely cheerful. "I know you are being very brave. ... Mommy loves you very much. I'll be there soon."

But the fact was that my job was 25 minutes away from Hamani's downtown school. Our home, and Hamani's baby brother, were 15 minutes in yet another direction. After a major quake, how could I reach everyone?

The answer: Don't think about it. That's how it is in Southern California. First you do what you can: keep first aid, flashlights and bottled water in your home and car; nightly place your keys and glasses next to where you sleep; practice grabbing your kids out of bed at the first jolt, running to a "safe" hall and holding pillow over their heads as you wait for the ground to calm.

Then you don't think about it — or you pretend not to.

Why do people live here? "I don't know," says Pennsylvania native Beth Kluchner, 33, a resident since 1985. Today, her home is in ruins, her belongings loaded onto a rented truck. She's considering leaving. "I can't imagine living in a building again."

Bruce, my writer-musician brother who moved here from Washington, D.C., is more upbeat. "There could be a disaster anywhere any time. Out east, people are dying from the cold. So relatively few deaths in a 6.8 earthquake — that's a miracle. People are as prepared as they can possibly be."

Or they think they are. Monday's tremor left my friend Sally, a longtime journalist and the biggest L.A. booster I know, sounding like another person entirely.

"I lost everything," a tiny, tremulous voice claiming to be Sally's said when I phoned her at her newly purchased Sherman Oaks condo.

"My building is going to be condemned — I have to get everything out," said the voice. "I still owe the bank $100,000 on my condo. ... I may have to declare bankruptcy. ... I'm so glad you can come."

But even the voice didn't prepare me for her once-elegant building. The front lobby was a gaping, glass-strewn hole. A 4-inch wide crack had split the building so it resembled an off-center, stucco layer cake. A caravan of trucks lined the street, rented by tenants who tossed furniture, books and clothing-stuffed bags from their balconies.

"You know stuff happens in life," said Sally, 36, avoiding broken pottery as she sorted through hundreds of strewn books, deciding which ones to save. "But you don't really believe you'll live in a place that will fall apart."

For now Sally will live with a friend in Santa Monica.

Truman Capote, Alice Walker and everything about Vietnam went into a suitcase; shoes overflowed a basket that once held a plant. A baton Sally twirled in junior high lay, forgotten, on the bedroom floor.

"Know why people stay here?" she asked, emerging from a closet. "They say the weather, but that's not it. It's because in L.A., people live their dreams."

Sally, who grew up in the Washington area sighed. "In D.C., you are whatever you are. But here? you're not a waitress — you're a screenwriter who's just working as a waitress! Maybe you're not a star, but you drive the golf cart at the studio that transported Julia Roberts last week. You may not be getting any work as an actor, but you're studying with somebody really good right now. You're not some guy pumping gas, you're the mechanic for Dabney Coleman!"

One question still resounds: Why do people live here?

Mall

of the Oviedo Crossing development. A technical meeting is planned with county senior staff next Wednesday.

For weeks, rumors have mounted about plans for a Seminole Towne Center-sized mall at Oviedo Crossings. The massive 500-acre municipality is at the northwest corner of the intersection of the Seminole County Expressway and Red Bug Lake Road. The project, said to be called "Oviedo Mall," is said to be a million square feet in size and located on 80 acres in the development.

If built, Seminole County will have malls at three of its four corners, including Sanford and Altamonte Springs.

In December, Oviedo Crossings officials confirmed conversations were focusing with Rouse Co. the Maryland mall developer responsible for Bayside in Miami and other upscale shopping centers. Thursday, Tom Morgan of A. Duda and Sons said those discussions may be reaching a head soon.

"A decision is still in flux," said Morgan. "Today some representatives came to Oviedo and initiated discussions with the county. We're in active negotiations but it may be two weeks or two months before there's something on paper."

Two weeks or two months. Indeed, much of the interest Thursday was not whether a third major mall would be built in the smallest county in the state, but whether it would remain in unincorporated Seminole County or be annexed into the city.

Morgan said no decision has been made on whether to annex into the city and shifting $100,000s of development fees and more than a million dollars annually for municipal service taxes from county to city.

Oviedo Mayor Judith Green said Jack Malloy of Vierra Co. will meet with City Manager Gene Williford today to discuss plans for the development.

"We've had no definite word yet," said Green. "We've had discussions with them on that subject but there's been no decision."

Van Der Weide said the intensity of the discussions with the county suggests to him the decision has been made.

"I'm certainly very interested in seeing it come to Seminole County," said Van Der Weide. "It will mean a lot of jobs. I see no reason why it needs to go to Oviedo or anyplace else."

Suit

have not filed civil actions to date. The molestations occurred from 1987 until 1992.

When he filed for bankruptcy last year, Paterson named the third youth, who sued the teacher Tuesday, as a potential creditor.

No criminal case was filed on behalf of the third youth who is suing the board claiming the former teacher molested him during 1991 and 1992 while he was a band student. The boy claims Paterson "worked to develop a congenial and informal relationship with the youth and other students in his classes by joking with them, meeting them during their lunch period and after school." After soliciting the trust and confidences of the students, Paterson used his position of authority and the trust he gained to make sexual advances including offensive and inappropriate touching, according to the civil suits.

Paterson continually engaged in conversations about masturbation and other lewd topics in the band room, the suits claim. Some, but not all of the lewd acts, were allegedly committed in the band room.

The suits claim the school board received complaints of inappropriate and unprofessional behavior of Paterson with students on several occasions in 1990 and 1991 but failed to take action to prevent him from committing further acts cited in the suit.

The school board was negligent in the hiring, supervision and retention of Paterson, the suits state.

In 1990, Paterson was suspended for five days and placed on probation by the Florida Department of Education and school board for playing a Cheech and Chong recording. As a condition of probation he was not to have contact with children outside of school. He was suspended for violating his probation in January 1993 for giving a student a ride home. During the investigation of the probation violation, the sexual allegations surfaced and he was arrested in February.

The civil suit plaintiffs claim they were not told Paterson was on probation while he was teaching the children.

The father of one of the victims said his son is still in therapy as the result of the molestations.

Seminole School Board President Barbara Kuhn said the board moved to take action in the case as quickly as possible after the parents came forward.

Although new on the school board at the time, Kuhn said she understood the parents of the students involved did not want to press the case until their children were out of middle school and in high school.

"You cannot take actions unless you have evidence to support that action," she said. "It was not that anybody was asleep at the switch. It was the judicial process or whatever adjective you want to put on this process, to protect innocent people from false allegations. It is very difficult to remove somebody unless you really have a strong case."

School board Attorney Ned Julian said this morning the school board handled the case properly and is not negligent in supervising Paterson.

"We cannot be sued for an employee's intentional criminal misconduct," he said. If the acts of an employee are willful, intentional, criminal and beyond the scope of his or her employment, the employer is not liable just because that person happened to be working for them."

Julian said he has not been served with the civil suits.

"The school board is not responsible legally for Mr. Paterson's willful, criminal actions. We don't tell teachers to do that. We don't acquiesce when teachers do," Julian said. He said this school district is pro-active when it comes to dealing with teacher misconduct. The issue is put on the table and after due process the teacher fired. Most districts are dealing openly with such matters today, rather than keeping them secret.

"I don't believe and the school board doesn't feel that it was negligent in how it dealt with the issue. Certainly we agree that what Mr. Paterson did was unfortunate and it has had an impact on those children. The school board wouldn't wish that on anyone and does not believe it fostered it, or encouraged it or condoned it or facilitated it."

the couple's 5-year-old son while he had taken the little girl.

This morning at about 7:30, McDonough said, McIntosh Garr called the sheriff's office and told them that she and the children were at an address on Cortez Street in Winter Springs.

Investigators went to that address, found the mother, both children and her parents and "took the whole crew to HRS," McDonough said.

He said that HRS will take over the investigation at this point and decide who among them, if anyone, is fit to care for the children.

He was not sure of Garr's whereabouts this morning, but believed the HRS investigators would want to discuss the matter with him as well.

McDonough said that he

"assumes" that the mother had taken Amber from the car last night while her husband was in the store making his purchases.

"That is not a crime, however," he explained. "They are not divorced. No one has custody assigned. She would have been taking her own child if she took the child from the car. That's not a crime."

Last night, Garr told officers that his wife had sold the home where they had lived in Carriage Cove and that she had not left him with a forwarding address. They are not sure if she is now living at the Winter Springs address.

Last night investigators received a telephone call from a woman claiming to be McIntosh Garr and saying that she had the child with her at a home in the Hidden Lakes subdivision. When investigators arrived there, no one was home.

McDonough does not know if that was the same woman who called this morning.

No one at the Sanford Food Mart would comment this morning, but investigators said they were told that no one at the store had seen the child in the car while Garr was in the store. They also said they didn't see anyone approach the car while he was in there.

After he was questioned and released by investigators last night, McDonough said Garr left the scene and abandoned his car at the store.

McDonough believes he might have been staying in the wooded area across the street from the store. It is unclear if he is employed so they are unable to check if he reported to work this morning.

I never thought I could actually win and now we're going to the Super Bowl. My husband is really thrilled, he's a big Dallas fan and can't wait to go."

Vereen, who entered the contest at the Fashion Square Mall in Orlando, was chosen from nearly 17,000 entries at more than 90 Kay Jewelers stores in Florida, Texas, Virginia and Maryland.

No one at fault for another's addiction

DEAR MARY: My mom and dad fight all the time about his drinking, how much time he spends at the bar and how much money he spends on booze. Sometimes I wish he'd just leave, but then I feel guilty for thinking that.

Mom says the reason he drinks so much is because us kids drive them both crazy. I really hate it when Mom says that. I've tried to be real good so he won't drink so much, but it doesn't do any good. They still fight.

I want to make things better for my family, but I don't know how. Maybe if they see this letter my mom and dad will stop drinking and fighting so much.

DEAR JEFF: No one can make another person drink too much or become an alcoholic and a child is never responsible for their parents using alcohol or any other drug.

People begin using these things for many reasons. Sometimes they believe it will help them cope with their problems, but the fact is that when the hangover wears off, the problems are still there. Dealing with problems by using alcohol or any other drug just causes more problems for everybody in the family.

You did not cause your dad to

drink too much. You cannot cause him to stop, and you can't make him stop doing anything he decides you to do. But you can learn to cope with your problems. Remember, you are not alone. There are thousands of other people in this area who are suffering because of alcohol and other drug abuse in their families.

Another person's addiction to anything is not your fault! You need to talk to someone you can trust about your feelings and how to cope with your problems. Find a relative, or other adult you can trust to talk to about these things, or call the Drug Prevention office and we will help you find help.

(Mary Balk is a Certified Addiction Prevention Professional and counselor. Write her at the Sanford Herald, or call the Seminole County Schools' Drug Prevention office, 323-5710.)

Psychological first aid

Don't lose balance; learn to stabilize self

During a crisis or extremely stressful times, many of us lose our capacity for objective thinking and get out of control. "In all mental disturbance, you can lose your balance because you magnify something so much your feelings throw your thinking and behavior into chaos. You've got to learn to evaluate more soundly," according to Con Keogh, founder of GROW Inc.

Here are four "stabilizing" questions in a crisis: 1) What exactly am I troubled about? Don't settle for "I can't stand myself." Boil it down to something definite you can work on. 2) Is it certain, probable, or only possible? Most of what people worry about is not certain, but only probable or possible. 3) How important is it? Probably not very when we consider the total scheme of things. 4) What will I do about it? Do the ordinary thing. Go to work and don't let your feelings swamp you.

Here are some other concepts GROW recommends to steady yourself:

- Go by what you know, not by what you

CONSUMER FOCUS

feel. In any panic there are inaccurate facts and distorted imaginings. So don't dramatize your feelings. Frequently somebody feels tired and decides life isn't worth living. But tiredness is just tiredness.

• Improve thinking and acting, and feelings will get better. This often flies in the face of conventional wisdom and what many victim groups talk about. Bad feelings can't last if you think right and do the right thing.

- Bring out the love inside you. Use terms of endearment with your family. Reach out and take someone's hand. Put others in the picture. Don't withdraw into your fantasies. Learn emotional maturity by getting feedback from other people.

• Give your hang-up a rest. Refuse to keep your unhappy thoughts on center stage. Cultivate the good parts of yourself.

• Deal with behavior, not motives. We don't understand our own motivation half the time. So if someone looks at you funny, don't think he's out to get you. Deal with what people actually say and do, not what you imagine.

• Get off the idea that all your feelings must be poured out. Some counselors believe that we have a lot of unexpressed feelings and are too inhibited. Frequently it's the opposite. Expressing feelings is what throws you.

• You don't always have to feel good. Feelings don't hurt anybody. It's only when your thinking and behavior are out of touch with reality that you get into trouble.

Americans returning home praise customs officers

DEAR READERS: Yesterday, I published letters from readers who had negative experiences with U.S. Customs. Today, we will hear from readers with positive comments.

DEAR ABBY: My husband was in the U.S. Air Force, stationed in Turkey in 1974. When we returned to the United States after 30 months abroad, my husband and I and our 6-month-old son arrived at Kennedy Airport in a storm that had the whole East Coast shut down — so several planes landed at the same time.

My husband went to claim our luggage. When he returned, a customs officer approached him and asked if he was military. I wished us a welcome home, signed our slips and sent us on our way. (Before you say, "But he was in uniform because he was military," know this — personnel returning from Turkey traveled in civilian clothes on U.S. Carriers.) We did not even have to stand in a line that included people from four full flights that all landed at about the same time. We think kindly of U.S. Customs.

MRS. BRYON B. MOSS, OOLTEWAH, TENN.

DEAR ABBY: My wife and I recently returned from a three-week trip to the Orient, arriving at Los Angeles International Airport about 11 o'clock on a Sunday morning. Neither of us was feeling well, having gotten sick on the trip. After going through eight rigorous customs/immigration inspections at eight different airports in the Orient, conducted by stone-faced, non-conversant customs officers, the officers at LAX were a delight. They welcomed us back to the USA with a smile and said they hoped we had had a nice trip. (We did.) They searched our luggage adequately, but did not give us a hard time about anything.

ADVICE

ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

My wife and I feel that we were treated well by the officers, and that not all U.S. Customs officers need to attend "charm school."

G.H. SMITH, AGOURA, CALIF.

DEAR ABBY: I am always dismayed when I receive complaints of rude treatment by any of our customs officers. This year, Customs cleared nearly 451 million passengers entering the country, and collected $21.6 billion for the U.S. Treasury. At the same time, we attempt to stop narcotics, bombs, guns, chemicals and a host of illegal products from entering the country.

We are not perfect, but we strive for perfection. For that reason, I am asking all the supervisors at Kennedy and other airports to pay close attention to the treatment of incoming passengers.

In the meantime, many problems can be avoided if travelers know what to expect when they encounter U.S. Customs at the ports of entry. Abby, please ask your readers to pick up a copy of "Know Before You Go" at their local Customs office, or write to the following address: U.S. Customs Service, P.O. Box 7407, Washington, D.C. 20044.

GEORGE J. WEISS, COMMISSIONER OF CUSTOMS

DEAR ABBY: Please alert your readers to a rarely mentioned hazard of winter driving. I was recently on an emergency trip in a police car with the siren screaming, and at every intersection, we nearly collided with other cars because the drivers had their windows closed and their radios on.

A JESUIT, ST. JOSEPH'S PARISH, YAKIMA, WASH.
DEAR JESUIT: Thanks for the tip. The same situation can also occur in summertime, when drivers have their windows rolled up because of air conditioning.

Baptists celebrate 110 years

By KELLEY MITCHELL
Herald Staff Writer

SANFORD — First Baptist Church, 519 S. Park Ave., a member of the Southern Baptist Convention, will celebrate its 110th anniversary with several activities on Feb. 3-6.

On Thursday, Feb. 3, a Day of Prayer, activities will begin at 7 p.m. with Praise and Thanksgiving Service, Lord's Supper and special music.

Saturday, Feb. 5, beginning at 7 p.m. a Reflections and Recognition Service including the acknowledgment of 50 year members, special music and a Birthday Celebration following the service.

An historic display in the Youth Activities Building will be available throughout the four day celebration. Invitations have been sent to former staff members and other special guests. Those joining the celebration are encouraged to wear old-fashioned clothes to the activities on Feb. 5-6.

Founded on Feb. 3, 1884, with 18 charter members, the members first met in the Sanford Town Hall, located north of Commercial Street on Palmetto Avenue, in the vicinity of the present Sanford library.

The church was organized under the leadership of W. N. Chaudoin, executive secretary of the newly organized Baptist State Board of Missions. J. W. Butts, pastor of the Orlando Baptist Church, assisted in the organization and was called to serve as pastor of the Sanford church for half his time.

The one lot at 6th Street and Park Avenue was given to the church for $1 in 1884 by the Florida Land and Colonization Company of London. A wooden church building was completed on that property in 1885.

The church was incorporated as First Baptist Church of Sanford in 1917. The front part of the present sanctuary building was completed in 1914 and the auditorium addition was completed in 1920. The first service in this auditorium was held Sunday, Dec. 26, 1920.

Ground was broken for the Memorial Education Building on May 30, 1948. Written on the plaque is "Erected to the Glory of God and in the memory of all who gave their lives so that we might live in peace."

First Baptist Church has sponsored five mission churches. The first was Southside Baptist which is now Central Baptist; Elder Springs and Pinecrest Baptist, Oaklawn, now Westview Baptist; and Lake Mary Baptist Church, now Lakeview Baptist Church.

The present pastor, the Rev. Floyd Blake, Jr., began his ministry here in April 1988.

Other staff members are the Rev. Sidney Brock, Minister of Youth, and the Rev. Jim Cornell, Minister of Music and Adults. Mrs. Cathy Blaise is Minister of Preschool and Children.

The present membership boasts a 1027 membership, including the following 50 year members:

Pastors' school tackles personal, global issues

Four theologians will give insights into meeting the challenges of the ministry in the 20th century during the ninth annual Florida Winter Pastors' School, Tuesday-Friday, Feb. 1-4, at Stetson University.

The topics range from personal to global issues: ●Dr. Donald E. Capps, professor of pastoral theology at Princeton Theological Seminary, Princeton, N.J., will explore "The Depleted Self." ●Dr. John J. Collins, professor of Hebrew Bible at the ●Dr. Ninjan Smart, professor of comparative religion at the University of California, Santa Barbara, will address "Christianity in Global Perspective." Co-sponsored by Stetson's Department of Continuing Education, Dean of the Chapel, Vice President for Church Relations, Department of Religion, and Baptist Student Union, each lecture in the program will be repeated so participants can attend them all. The sessions will take place on Tuesday afternoon and Wednesday, Thursday and Friday mornings, Wednesday and Thursday afternoon and evening will be free. Queen-Sutherland will lead a worship session on Tuesday evening, and the program will conclude with a Friday luncheon featuring all four professors in a panel discussion.

How sexually active are married couples?

DEAR DR. GOTT: Can you help put to rest a debate that has been in our marriage for over 20 years? What is the frequency of normal sex for a couple? I'm looking for an honest, reasonable answer. Is weekly, every other week or even once a month realistic?

most of us as is the sensitive expression of emotional and physical closeness, reflecting love and intimacy.

Therefore, almost any pattern of frequency is "realistic." Sorry, that's the best I can do. Let's talk about a more manageable topic, such as how often people

DEAR READER: After almost 30 years in practice, I'm still unable to give a firm answer to this question, which I am often asked. There is just too much individual variation in behavior.

Most couples strike a balance that works for them, depending on their ages and personal needs. I know some couples in their 60s who enjoy sex several times a week. For them, this pattern is ideal; it suits them. On the other hand, I also know couples in their 30s and 40s who have sex once or twice a month. While this may not appeal much to the average person, they are happy with the arrangement.

It goes without saying that younger people usually have sex more often than do middle-aged couples. Over time, this pattern changes, either because of age, familiarity, illness or other factors. Some people are more "sexy" than others, who can take it or leave it. Most adults frequently vary their sexual activity; less when they are stressed or tired, more when they are relaxed or on vacation.

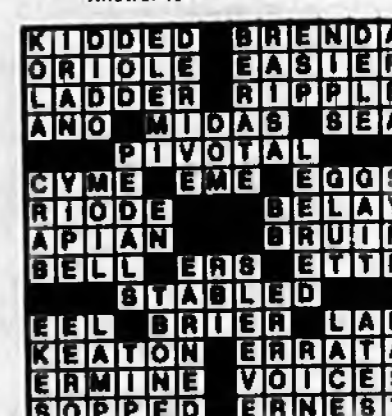

If pressed, I'd say that the majority of healthy, middle-aged adults enjoy sex once or twice a week, on average. Understandably, there are many people whose patterns fall outside this average. This is not "abnormal." Couples who can't seem to agree on an appropriate schedule can often be helped by counseling.

The important thing to remember, I suppose, is that it's not the frequency of the sex act that is the main consideration. Rather, it's the quality of the act and what it means to the participants. Mechanical, frequent sex is not as appealing to

WIN AT BRIDGE

By Phillip Alder
There are many advantages to living far south of the Arctic Circle - which, to my mind, lies at a latitude of about 35 degrees north. You can play golf and outdoor tennis year-round. You can even sit in the sunshine and play bridge, dressed only in your swimming gear or designer tennis outfit - as they do at Venice Beach, a suburb of Los Angeles.

with her ace, drew two rounds of trumps ending in the dummy and cashed the club king, being careful to discard a diamond. Now came the ace and another diamond.

If East had followed low, Gloria planned to finesse her jack. If this wins, the contract is home free, whereas if the finesse loses to West's original queen-doubleton, West is endplayed to lead a spade into South's A-Q tenace for concede a ruff-and-discard. At the worst, if the finesse loses and West exits with the last diamond, declarer falls back on the spade finesse.

Here, though, East discarded a club. Now Gloria had to rely on the double spade finesse. She won with the diamond king, played a trump to the dummy and led the spade jack: king ace. Back to dummy with another trump, declarer played a spade to her eight.

Always try to maximize your chances.

HOROSCOPE

By Bernice Bede Osol YOUR BIRTHDAY Jan. 29, 1994

It's possible you might get involved in an enterprise or endeavor in the year ahead that's very unusual and in an area with which you're unfamiliar. Surprisingly, you could astound yourself and others with its good results.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Others might think the objectives you establish for yourself today are a bit too grandiose. Perhaps from their perspective they are, but this won't be true from where you're standing. Know where to look for romance and you'll find it. The Astro-Graph Matchmaker instantly reveals which signs are romantically perfect for you. Mail $2 and a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope to Matchmaker, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 4465, New York, N.Y. 10163.

FISCHES (Feb. 20-March 20) Your chart looks pretty strong at this time where legal matters are concerned. Be sure you have the best counsel possible, because you should be lucky with contracts or agreements.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) A frustrating situation you've been trying to change, but thus far have been unable to, might make a shift today of its own volition. You should like the results.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Today if you're with optimistic, lucky people, there's a good chance you'll take on their vibes. Which means you might be fortunate in an area you previously felt was hostile.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Strive to be persistent and consistent today, because your luck increases as you near the finish line. This might be especially true in either commerce or sport.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Do not be picky today if a friend invites you to participate in a fun pastime you've never tried previously. You could be in for a very pleasant surprise.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Today you might be luckier than usual in situations where something is either being bought or sold. Regardless of the role you play, it could be profitable.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)

Something good you already have going for you can be improved upon if you don't make change merely for change sake. Instead focus on expansion.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) You could be more fortunate than usual today in arrangements you have with persons to whom you have strong emotional ties. Be supportive of what they initiate.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) A friend who has always told others how lucky you are for him/her might do a role reversal today and be the catalyst who is fortunate for you.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) You are now in a cycle where a hope you've been nurturing for quite a long time could finally become a reality. Strengthen your belief, don't diminish it.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Friends are likely to put considerable credence in your opinions today. Feel free to express yourself, but be sure the thoughts you impart are worthy of emulation. Copyright 1994, NEWSPAPER ENTERPRISE ASSN.
