cur after World War II never got off the ground, it is making a beck of a roar on the runway. In the past decade or so, private flying has been enjoying a boom of impressive proportions.

"General Aviation" is the proper term for it, and it encompasses about 98 per cent of the 95,000 airplanes flying in the United States, with the rest military and air carriers. The rest military and air carriers. The 445,000 pilots who make up the ranks of General Aviation, ranging from Piper Cub students to pilots of corporation executive jets, rack up more than 17 million flying hours a year.

ed base operators throughout the country, who in 1964 sold them 276 million gallons of gasoline valued at $110 million. By 1969, these totals are expected to rise to 380 million gallons a year worth $150 million.

Many communities are beginning to realize that flying is not a sport for the rich few and that small fields are something more than ripe candidates for housing developments.

In Michigan, for example, a survey conducted in 1962 found that General Aviation accounted for over 92 per cent of the total sircraft movements in the state of the total sircraft movements. ments in the state, compared to 7 per cent for the airlines and less than 2 per cent for the military. GA aircraft carried 40 per cent of the total passengers, who spent $110 million within the state.

Real Dividing Line

For 20 years, we have accustomed ourselves to thinking of the world as being divided into East and West.

Two decades of Cold War of varying intensity have implanted this cliche in our minds: East and West, or more accurately, East vs. West—the Soviet Union vs. the United States—each with its allies, each perpetually on guard against the other, each championing irreconcilable ideologies, each possessing the power to destroy the other.

The usefulness of this simple picture of world reality may have come to an end. Time has undercut the balance that once existed between East and West. More and more we are being forced to think in terms of North and South.

By 1970—four and a half short years away—more than half the world's people will be living in the underdeveloped southern half of the globe, subsisting on a mere one-sixth of the world's total wealth. By 1975, the population under 15 years of age in the southern hemisphere will alone equal the total population of the developed countries of the northern.

This is the real division of manism but between the stable, affluent nations of the North and the volatile, impoverished ones of the south.

The United States and Russia, whether they yet realise it or not, have been thrown together in this new hemispheric partition of the solube.

The course of history for the next century will be determined by how well they recognize that their common interests dictate co-operation in the common cause of the rescue of the hungering half of humanity, and by how soon they can resolve the riv-alry of the past 20 years before it infects the emerging world of the South with envy, hatred and war that could engulf us all.

Picketing OK Again At Jax

3 (414.5)

The way is clear for unrestricted picksting at the Jacksonville Railway terminal, an action that could put most of Florida's sail traffic in a hammerlock. The U. S. 5th Circuit Cour of Appeals dissolved a Jackson-ville federal district court in-junction against the picketing by striking employes of the Florida East Coast Railway. The injunction had been obtained by the terminal and by the Atlantic Coast Line and Sea-board Air Line Railroads. They had claimed they were not a party to the FEC labor dispute and should not suffer from it. Unrestricted picketing would stop interchange freight and passenger traffic going from the FEC to the other rail-

Hurricane Aleri

A. B. Peterson Jr., American Red Cross Seminole County disaster chairman, recently gave his report to division head-quarters on his group's activities during the threat of Hurricane Alma.

The hurricane posed its major threat to the Seminole County area Wednesday night and early Thursday morning, and Peterson reported his organization began its main preparations with a staff meeting the morning of June 8. Key members were placed on "stand-by" and participated in dramatics and choral groups. He will be working with junior and intergroups this summer.

Both young men will have the opportunity to teach at various worship services during the summer.

The recreation program will begin officially from 2 until 5 p. m., Monday, June 27, for all young people 11 years and over.

Veale wasn't the only angry man in Atlanta Stadium Sunday. Hank Aaron, who scored the Braves' lone run with his 23rd home run, really fumed when he was called out on atrikes in the 11th inning.

It was strike two, a pitch Aaron thought was inside, that teed him off. He spun around and argued with umpire Tony Venzon. When the next pitch, also in close, was called strike three, the usually calm Aaron slammed down his bat, kicked dirt and threw his helmet.

Venzon, in retaliation, threw feed seven and upped his record to 10-6.

The Dodger converted Don Drysdale's pinch hit single into the game winning run and gave reliever Phil Regan his fifth win in six decisions.

Cincinnati took advantage of four Met errors to win the second game after Milt Pappas atopped New York on seven hits in the opener. Red Righthander Sammy Ellia snapped a personal losing streak at six and was credited with third victory against 11 losses.

Chicago completed its first dirt and threw his helmet.
