40 Percent Decline In Fatalities Gives State Best Record

CHEYENNE, Sept. 28.—(AP)—It is the best record in the nation for the past eight months of 1938, with a 40 percent decline in highway deaths.

Not since between Jan. 1 and Sept. 1 this year was there a death on one of the state's roads, according to the Wyoming Highway Department. The department reported that the eight months of 1938 were the best in the state's history.

Organization Of Business Men Is Formed At Rally

Board Of Directors Elected To Complete Plans For New Association

Group Is Urged To Boose City

Rev. Bram Weinstein, Housholder, Holly Are Guest Speakers

After several speakers had mentioned the possibilities offered in Sanford and the need for co-operation of all businesses and professions in boosting the city, a board of 12 was elected to perfect plans for the organization of an association of business and professional men at the "Business Men's get-together Dinner" in the Mayfair Hotel last night.

Speaking to a gathering of approximately 75 men representing nearly every business and profession in Sanford, Rev. Martin J. Bram, pastor of the Holy Cross Episcopal Church was the first of the speakers to choose for his subject, "What Are You Doing Here?"

County Attorney E. F. Housholder discussed the need for personality in business and Postmaster E. J. Holly mentioned the possibilities offered for development of Sanford while George Weinstein, chairman of the Merchants Committee of the Seminole County Chamber of Commerce, outlined the work of the committee in planning the organization and the advantages of such an association.

Rev. Bram likened the city to the human body with each of the merchants and professions as essential members. As in the human body, he said, collective action is essential for the common good. Only through united effort, he continued, is it possible to gain an end. He also pointed to the necessity of working together in harmony.

Postmaster Holly was the second speaker to be introduced by T. E. Simpson, president of the Seminole County Chamber of Commerce, who presided. Mr. Holly pointed out that Sanford was once the trade center of central Florida because of its location. Sanford's site makes it possible to have one of the best cities in central Florida here, he said, adding, however, that men and not locations make a city. Mentioning the tourist trade which Sanford has missed in the past, Mr. Holly urged merchants to get their shoulders to the wheel and push to make Sanford a real city.

Mr. Housholder pointed out that business people of Sanford have been too much concerned over their own problems to find out about the problems facing others. He advocated a closer relationship between the business men of Sanford and urged co-operation in solving their common problems.

George Weinstein explained the benefits to be obtained from organization of the business men. (Continued on Page Three)

Negro Given Life For Slaying Guard

INVERNESS, Fla., Sept. 30.—Drusel Parrish was sentenced today to life imprisonment for his part in the slaying of Rufus Waters, guard during his escape with Arthur Sherman, another convict, from a state camp last July.

Sherman later was shot to death by Detroit police and Parrish was captured.

Parrish was convicted of second degree murder by a jury which returned its verdict last night. Sherman had been indicted on the actual slaying of Waters.

South's Storm Moves Toward New England

Second Storm Expected To Be Less Devastating Than American Last Week

WASHINGTON, Sept. 30.—(AP)—The three main bands of low pressure which are moving toward the United States from the south are expected to bring a second storm to the New England coast, but it is expected to be less devastating than the American storm which struck the coast last week.

Working against them is the fact that the storm is moving toward the coast from the south, and the workers to a hearing in the various rooms of the House of Representatives.

Almost a million employees of railroads voted to strike rather than accept the 15 percent wage cut.

Both the strike and the cut were to have become effective tomorrow, but under the terms of the National Mediation Act invoked by the President, neither side can take action for 60 days.

 And then, faceless, poor girl
 She observed a kind of poetic lent
 And I had thought I liked poetry
 Better than I do.

I do, but to me its most in-

 Quality is its unattainability.
 And, conversely, the chief wonder in heaven
 (Whether I also am sometimes transported)
 Is the kind of baggage I bring with me.

Surely there is no more ex-

 In the anatomy of life, than that at which
 The poem dovetails with the inevitable oval
 And Mrs. H sits murmuring of

Hitler Marches In

The world breathed more easily today as word comes from Munich that the Big Four have signed an agreement on the Czecho-Slovakian problem and that for the time being at least there is to be no general European war. The destruction in modern warfare is so horrible and terrifying that any deal, no matter how humiliating, should perhaps be received with enthusiasm if it serves to postpone the fearful day.

Millions of men who might already have been blazing away at one another with all the implements of destruction which the ingenuity of man can devise, have been given a new lease on life. Millions of women and children, as well as men too old to fight, have been spared for the moment at least from the privations, horrors and death in a general conflict. For this everyone may well join in praising their statesmen and thanking God.

For the sake of this truce in Europe, the four great statesmen meeting in Munich yesterday agreed to sacrifice the chief defenses of Hitler's Czecho-Slovakia. Hitler gets substantially what he demanded at Godesberg. Chamberlain and Daladier, confronted by the combined military might of Hitler and Mussolini, backed down. The only real concession which Hitler made was that if he were given his demands peacefully he would not fight.

And so Hitler is to march in on October 1, exactly as he said he would. To be sure, he is not to overrun the whole country on the first day, but the entire Sudetenland is to be surrendered to him by the tenth of October "without any existing installations having been destroyed," including of course costly fortifications. And then in order to give the agreement a semblance of decency, Hitler and Mussolini, as well as England and France, "promise" to guarantee the new borders of the country, "when the question of the Polish and Hungarian minorities has been settled."

If the world could be sure that this new victory for Hitler would satisfy him, the price which the Czechs are asked to pay could probably be contained. If the peace of Europe and the world could be assured for any considerable period of time, it could be five years, if not for twenty, then the statesmen would do well if they sacrificed the whole of Czecho-Slovakia. Peace is a priceless thing. It means life itself to millions of people.

But no conqueror has ever satisfied his hunger for new victories. Alexander the Great stopped only when there were no new worlds to conquer; Napoleon, only when he had grown fat on victories and was no longer able to digest them. The Japs conquered Manchuria with little more than a protest from other powers, and then went on to China where they shot the British ambassador and sank the Panay.

Mussolini imitated their example in Ethiopia. The world protested. The League of Nations even declared an economic boycott against Italy and the mighty British fleet was mobilized in the Mediterranean. But when the choice came between peace and war, it was not Mussolini who backed down but the great powers. When treaty violations began in Germany with Hitler's rearmament program, the powers watched in open amazement.

Before the threat of war they backed down again, when Hitler marched his troops into the Rhineland, when Mussolini marched his troops into Spain, when the non-intervention committee broke up in London, when Hitler seized Austria, when scores of British merchantmen bound for Spain were sunk by Italian airplanes and submarines in the Mediterranean. Whomsoever Italy, Japan or Germany have wanted anything had enough to fight for it, the other powers have backed down.

It is good to know there will be peace in Europe over this weekend. It is well to join in prayers of thankfulness that millions of human beings for the moment have been spared. Let us hope that a permanent solution may eventually be found.

Political Careers
 "Never was there a more opportune time than now for a young man to begin a political career," declares Meredith Nicholson, United States minister to Nicaragua, in a challenging article in "Politics: A Field for Young Men" in The Rotarian Magazine. "The next decade is certain to be one of the most interesting and most important in history" in this field.

"As in the choice of party affiliation, that's your personal affair," says the diplomat and author. "I suggest, however, that it is not absolutely necessary for you to enroll in the party of your grandfathers, or even of your wife's relations. Nor is it wholly wise to align yourself with a party which, at the moment, may seem invincible, in the belief that it can never lose."

Young men in politics should do their own thinking, Mr. Nicholson insists, rather than sacrificing principles in order to "keep regular." A sense of humor, tolerance, personality, and the ability to listen will contribute to the success of those who aspire to political leadership. "If you are a snob," he warns, "boil the poison out of your system before you attend your first precinct meeting."

If I were counselling a serious young aspirant as to how to begin a political career, I should advise him first of all to make a study of some phase of government administration. And I should suggest a municipal or county unit as a good beginning. Here the abuses are often so flagrant and the need so great that his education in politics cannot fail to proceed prosperously.

The multiplication of the functions of government in recent years makes it desirable that a public servant should have a scientist's special knowledge in as many fields as possible, Mr. Nicholson believes, for "there is not merely a tendency now toward planned scientific administration; we have reached the point where we must have it. The scale of things is so vast that we can't turn engineering and construction jobs over to amateurs."

"Alexander Hamilton was well launched on his extraordinary career at 22," he points out to those young men who may feel that their youth is against them. "John Randolph was elected to the House of Representatives at 20, and became leader in that body. James Madison, one of the greatest of those who gave form and direction to our institutions, was marked for a distinguished career at 24. And Henry Clay, at 22, was a member of the Kentucky constitutional convention and was elected to the United States Senate before he had attained the legal age prescribed for that dignity. "Brains and character, not years, count."

WASHINGTON DAYBOOK
 By PRESTON GROVER

WASHINGTON—If a general war engulfed Europe, the important historical question of its exact opening date may never be answered.

Will history say it began with Mussolini's invasion of Ethiopia or Hitler's occupation of the Rhineland in 1936? France's challenge to loyalist Spain in that same year? Hitler's occupation of Austria in 1938? Or some memorable date like Chamberlain's visit to Hitler?

The historian's problem arises from that strange practice of not first and declare war when it starts, if at all.

Civil wars within a nation long have started without any declaration, including the Spanish revolution, and our own war between the states.

Until the turn of the century, a declaration of war was a patriotic thrill. In ancient times they gave themselves over to a complete enjoyment of hostilities before the opposing armies fell on each other.

Emissaries of war were given honor. Great public spectacles greeted them. Plenty of banqueting intervened before the head emissary unrolled his toga and politely declared his host was a pain in the neck. Then everybody went home to buckle on his sword.

Today China and Japan are locked in a war a year old, and neither has hinted a declaration of war ever will be made.

In the past half century, the advent of modern war machinery had the effect of outmoding the practice of declaring war. The nation taking the offensive found it almost necessary to surprise the enemy.

Probably the last great war which was formally declared all along the line before hostilities began was the Franco-Prussian war of 1870. Both armies waited for a declaration of war. Even so, the German general staff had gone so far as to map out its mobilizations and army movements in advance. Germany won, by and large, because of advance preparation.

In our own Spanish-American war in 1898 congress was caught off base by the sinking of the Maine, and was forced to content itself with recognizing on August 25 that a state of war had existed for four days. In this country, congress has never declared war.

The next big confrontation with the Japanese navy was of 1905. A terrific naval battle had been fought and won by Japan's fleet Admiral Togo two days before war was declared.

The World war was little different. True, Austria declared war on Serbia. But the great powers were holding their strategy and declarations would have gone them away. The first man they invaded Luxembourg two days before a declaration of war against France. France and Great Britain likewise were moving into battle formations before they got around to formal statements.

When we entered the World war, congress had a difficult time making up its mind, and when it did, on April 6, 1917, the lawmakers decided to recognize the existence of a war that Germany had started against the United States months before.

This change in custom has played havoc with international law built up through centuries. A country declaring war is supposed to have certain belligerent rights, such as legal blockades, and the like. Neutrals have certain rights of free passage on high seas. A violator of these rights is supposed to be subject to damages.

Modern practices seem to have scrambled all that, despite Secretary of State Hull's appeal to reason and lawful procedure. The big objective of a war bent nation today is always concealed, every invasion must appear to be a defense of national honor.
