The Importance Of Circulation

One of the paramount matters coming before the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, now meeting in New York City, is the question of advertising rates. Prevalent with the depression has been a growing demand annot be reduced proportionately. Yet the fact remains that advertising rates cannot be reduced without a reduction in journalistic standards and news gathering efficiency which would be very unsatisfactory to the reading public and decidedly detrimental to the welfare of the country.

This situation is brought about primarily by the fact that a newspaper is more than a business; it is, in a certain gays that have money worries.

Sense, a public utility. It is a business, in that its receipts must equal its expenditures or it goes into bankruptcy, the same as any other business. It is a public utility in that the public depends upon it as it depends upon water companies for water and light companies for light, for that equally the roof but will feed themselves.

This situation is brought about primarily by the fact who's got two cars any more, but who's got two cars any more, but who's got two cars any more, but will fee think of these pour get along okey. The danger of each worthy or totally inadequate with in the water in front of his beach jernt any time and in the fact water and light companies for light, for that equally the roof but will feed themselves and in the garage for three your head in the roof but will feed themselves.

There are so tough in Senford think whether he was going to bark or chatter. Put Bheedy and me chatter. Put Bheedy and me the term periods and me worthy or totally inadequate get along okey. their paper is an important part of the newspaper income. It is, in fact, insignificant. The newspaper which can say that its circulation department supports itself—that is, pays of Wade H. Reed was answered try it some time, I don't dare. . for the cost of delivering—is indeed fortunate. There is by operative 54-41 last night to the security ever sufficient left over for paying the cost of the security ever sufficient left paper itself on which the news is printed.

The only other source of revenue which any reputable newspaper has is its advertising receipts. As advertising volume declines it is the policy of most newspapers to reduce their size—to publish eight pages instead of twelve or sixteen, to publish four instead of six or eight. In this way I have given him unnecessary Quick now, who's chief of he is a member in they can reduce their expenses in proportion to their declin-publish. what other kind police? ... yah, you had to Luke of the Ananias Club. ing receipts. Just as it costs less to build a four room house could I give him about that type twice. . . Latest definition: a than an eight room house, so are the mechanical costs of a of mustache? . . Personally I grasshopper is a roach that chews don't think New Smyrna grows tobacco and camps out. . Simile: four page paper less than an eight page paper.

This analogy does not imply that there is any reduction in the service rendered by the four page paper any more than in the construction of the four room house, there is any implication that it is built of flimsy ma_ terials and will not stand. As long as the price rate on the hear the massive owes plenty to smaller house is the same as the price rate on the larger one, one is just as good as the other except that the former in smaller.

But with the newspaper, if, in addition to meeting the decline in volume, it has also to face a cut in rates, no alternative remains but to reduce such expenditures as go to the gathering of news and the creation of reader interest in the paper. We believe the public can readily appreciate the adverse effect upon business and government which the necessity of receiving congressional news by mail instead of by wire, or of trying to satisfy subscribers with a weekly publication instead of with a daily, would have.

In this connection it is interesting to note, in the report of Kent Cooper, general manager of the Associated Press, that the news organizations of the United States are still rendering the same high service during this depression as in the more advantageous years of the boom and that although advertising revenues have fallen off tremendously circulations have shown no appreciable declines.

Upon sustained circulations merchants must depend for i their contact with the people and the people must depend for their knowledge of public affairs.
