Twice a week do you make a survey of your property and see that all stagnant water which is exposed to erty and see that all stagnant water which is exposed to visits from mosquitoes is either drained away, covered with a coating of oil, or carefully screened?

Mosquitos are not only an annoyance but they are dangerous. They carry disease. And even though you care to risk the health of yourself and your family you have no right to conduct a hatchery for insects that are to carry discomfort and illness to your neighbors.

Perhaps the idea touched upon in that "you have no right" will some day solve the problem for the extermination of mosquitoes and houseflies and other pests. As people become better informed as to the danger from no less, cards of thinks, resolutions disease-carrying animals, it will be possible to obtain the passage of laws, and their strict enforcement, for the protection of the public against such things as mosquito hatch-

The Better Business Code

"If the buyer is not better off than if he had kept his money in his pocket, there is something wrong.

"Men who believe in the excellence of their product or in the value of their real estate, or any other commodity they may have to sell, can adopt as a truism that statement of Once upon a time Love, Death, and Henry Ford's, quoted in the opening sentence of this edit-

> If the man with something to sell is willing to put himself in the place of his proposed customer and get that customer's relation toward the commodity he is asked to buy, ment with Von Hindenburg as then the sale can be conducted or "passed up" in honest President, as France did with Nafashion. The genuinely honest man never attempts to unload a burden on a man he thinks has no business to attempt to carry that burden. The selling business if a great big honorable game for the most part, and is becoming more generally honorable as the world grows better.

In the paragraph from which we have quoted that assertion of Henry Ford's there is some more wisdom re-Republican Government seriously. garding "profits" that some day will also be accepted as even if it is largely a corporation truisms. Let us publish all the paragraph here for the form of government, with high fi- aires. But if he hangs around birds in the suburb of Eden. The sake of conscientious people who like to see their ideals nance telling little people "where Miami two years longer he can upparalleled rush to Florida is due so accurately described. It goes like this:

When is a profit honest? When it replaces the energy used in production and adds a surplus for healthful expansion. A profit is always with reference to the business itself; the reward of those engaged is a part of production cost. Legitimate profit is that which stabilizes the business and assures its continuance and improvement in service. This principle, therefore, includes the public. A good business will make a profit for the buyer as well as the seller. If the buyer is not better off than if he had kept his money in his pocket, there is something wrong. The profit that replaces energy should return to the buyer in the form of sustained service. The profit that permits expansion should return in better quality at lower cost. Expansion to any degree is justified when it increases service and lowers cost—but not otherwise.

And coming from Henry Ford that paragraph can be accepted at its face value. The great captain of industry has proved that small profits can pay great dividends. His industrial plants are classed as philanthropies by disgruntled people who follow the old plan of "get while the getting is part of Faurt when eventy two good and let the other fellow hold the bag."

"A good business will make a profit for the buyer as well George Young, publisher of the as the seller"-a profit even for the ultimate consumer. That's the new business code of this better world.
