Italo-Ethiopian Conflict Has Been Brewing 40 Years

Fatal Battle Of Adua In 1895 Marked Start Of Long Period Of Growing Antipathies

By ANDRÉ SPIDING

ROME, July 13.—(AP)—The Italo-Ethiopian conflict has been brewing for more than two generations. It has been marked not only by one war and by scores of border battles but by racial, mental differences of opinion and deep animosity.

The world did not awake to the strained relations between the two countries until the outbreak of a clash of United Nations in 1895. At that time Italy and Abyssinia had been on the verge of coming off and on since 1895 when 100,000 Italian soldiers annihilated an Italian army of 10,000.

Quiet Reigned

That fatal battle of Adua resulted in Italy's temporary abandonment of her desire to advance into Abyssinia. A period of quiet followed that lasted until 1911. Within that interval the Anglo-French Italian treaty of 1906 was signed giving each country certain spheres of influence in Ethiopia.
