Secretary Hull's Policies

The resignation of Professor Moley, Chief Brain Trust-er, an assistant secretary of state, despite repeated denials of a break between him and Secretary Hull, has served vastly to enhance the position of the Tennessee statesman and to augment considerably his views on national affairs. It is also worth remembering that Secretary Hull was one of the few delegates to the London conference whose stature did not shrink in the light of its failure. Because Professor Moley was closest to Mr. Roosevelt's ear throughout the campaign, because he is first, last, and always, a firm believer in national isolation and a planned economy, because up to now he has had the inside track to the White House ever since the inauguration, and because he has just resigned, according to a rumor which cannot be killed, when the President had to choose between him and Secretary Hull, it should be interesting to examine Mr. Hull's ideas concerning the origin of the depression, and the logical part of the government in finding a way out. During the summer of last year when the presidential campaign was just getting under way, Mr. Hull wrote an article called the "Tariff and Commercial Policy of the United States," in which he laid the blame for the collapse of world trade and the consequent decline of business everywhere at the door of Republican tariff policies of the previous ten years with particular stress upon "the excesses, inequalities, and injuries of the Smoot-Hawley Act."

Because of this "half-ham policy of economic isolation," he wrote, the export of goods the world over is less than one-third of what it would have been, and has resulted in "the absurd attempt of every nation to live unto itself, and aloof from others, tremendously contributing to a breakdown of international confidence, credit, finance, exchange, and trade, and gradually pushing the world into bankruptcy."

Pointing out that over 2,400,000 families in the United States are directly dependent for their livelihood upon the goods which this country sells to foreigners, Mr. Hull intimated that "more than 75 percent of American labor is not employed in industries which actually secure tariff benefits; that nearly 90 percent of the acreage planted to crops experiences tariff penalties rather than tariff advantages... and that history uniformly teaches that civilization has developed and flourished most in great international trading cities such as Tyre, Sidon, Carthage, Rome, Venice, Amsterdam and London."

The cure for the depression, he believes, lies not in artificial attempts to stimulate our domestic markets, but in sound practical measures to reanimate our foreign trade. "America is the greatest economic giant of all time," he wrote, "with a surplus productive capacity of fifteen to twenty-five billions of dollars." Where is this surplus to be sold if not in foreign countries? "It is short-sighted and foolish for America not to realize that nearly 1,600,000,000 people on this planet are hopelessly underfed and underclothed, that they are only waiting for the cooperation of some enlightened, progressive country... The 480,000,000 Chinese population have a nominal purchasing power of $10 per capita, while the 325,000,000 population of India have $35."

Mr. Hull reminds us that the United States is the best equipped of any nation on earth to stimulate the business of foreign nations and to capture their trade. "If being so exceptionally equipped as to money, credit, raw materials, horse power, modernized machinery, superior productivity of labor, and the greatest and most efficient manufacturing plant in history, America should cower and sink away from both her opportunity and responsibility thus to grow and to lead, she would soon become a decadent nation, as did those that have pursued a similar pusillanimous course in the past," he wrote.

The alternative to this development of our foreign trade consists of the further promotion of the "narrow, selfish, unsound policy of economic isolation." "This suicidal policy," he wrote last summer, "has already called for the burning of $70,000,000 worth of coffee in Brazil; for the destruction of every third row of cotton, and the killing of every tenth cow, in America, to say nothing of similar freakish devices that many American industries are vainly resorting to in an effort to deal with output, surpluses, and prices." "It is axiomatic," he adds, "that if we are to keep all American labor employed at good wages, we must sell our surpluses developed by agriculture, mining and manufacture abroad." It is reasonably certain that if they cannot be sold, they will not be made, and if they aren't made, there will be unemployment.

With the resignation of his assistant, Professor Moley, Secretary Hull would now seem for the first time to have the upper hand in the State Department. It is not entirely improbable that the practical policies of the Secretary will become more and more evident as the isolationist theories of the Professor gradually follow him into the realm of magazine editorializing.

What Price Lottery?

It seems to be a queer complex of human nature that, with all the public denunciations of stock market gambling, real estate speculation, and sales of speculative foreign securities, there should be a rising sentiment in favor of lotteries and an actual boom in this sort of gambling.

We have heard the opinion expressed on many occasions recently that a government-operated lottery would be one solution of the taxation problem. The idea has also been advanced that as long as there is going to be this kind of thing anyway and that there is nothing we can do to prevent it, the Federal treasury might as well be benefited by means of a tax on every lottery ticket sold.

The people who argue this way are the ones who are loudest in their condemnation of the New York Stock Exchange, which they blame for causing the depression. "It ought to be abolished," every man connected with it is a thief and ought to be put in jail. So long as it exists and robs people of their hard earned money, there can be no constant prosperity.

But compared with the usual lottery, the Stock Exchange is an immaculate and sanctimonious citadel of business. It sometimes gives a man an opportunity to benefit by the use of a little brains and intelligence. If it is subject to the same economic fluctuations which affect all businesses and if there are always people who invariably "bite off more than they can chew," a conservative investor can often come out with his shirt still on his back.

The same is not true of the lottery. If you play this game you are bound to lose. The odds are always against you. No amount of thought and figuring can beat the law of averages. But there is something fascinating about taking an impossible long shot, even though you are a sucker. So we find plenty of customers ready at any time to buy a lottery ticket.

So long as the government seeks to regulate the stock market and the sale of securities to protect innocent invest-

MOLEY OUT
BY MARK SULLIVAN

The retirement of Professor Moley from the Roosevelt administration is the beginning of a process in which Democrats of the old school are about to press quickly and firmly towards the right, the government, into partnership with the historic Democratic principles and away from recent innovations.

The beginning of the movement synchronizes with the beginning of a feeling of confidence about business and the country. These old school Democrats have not been subjected to any of the innovations of the Roosevelt administration so far as it is understood they are emergency measures only. The leaders have been perfectly willing to subscribe to the Roosevelt program as long as it is not subject to any of the innovations of the Roosevelt administration so far as it is understood they are emergency measures only. The leaders have been perfectly willing to subscribe to the Roosevelt program as long as it is not subject to any of the innovations of the Roosevelt administration so far as it is understood they are emergency measures only.

The picture of the Roosevelt administration as a whole was moving toward a more exclusive economic nationalism than any Republican ever dreamed. The difficulty of making such a situation work was increased by the fact that Secretary Hull is by nature a man to whom discrimination is in principle a disaster. The difficulty was further increased by the universal respect in which Secretary Hull is held. Hardly anything could do more damage to the Roosevelt administration in the eyes of the Democratic Party than the appearance of causing Cordell Hull to be in the position of a mis-leading figurehead.

Senator Carter Glass came near to being put in the same kind of position from which Secretary Hull is now freed. President Roosevelt asked Senator Glass to be Secretary of the Treasury. The Virginia Senator, after several days of consideration, declined it was commonly understood at the time that Senator Glass was unable to satisfy himself that, if he were Secretary of the Treasury, the sound-money policies with which he is identified would be followed. It was likewise surmised at the time that Senator Glass was unable to act for himself that he, as Secretary of the Treasury, would have complete control of the choice of assistants. Had Senator Glass accepted the Treasury post, he would be today in the position of an emergency symbolizing one policy while another policy is being followed.

BIG INCREASE IS REPORTED IN BUYING POWER

(Continued From Page 1) An assistant administrator, that a major of labor policy precipitated the break, by asserting that "the only issue between Mr. Cates and myself is the issue of statutory interpretation and faithfulness to a decided policy of the President."

Behind the scenes negotiations went forward under the direction of deputy administrators to get the bituminous coal and retail codes ready for President Roosevelt's signature next week.

Reports continued to pour in of activity by workers pressing in every community the drive to bring stores under the blue eagle and have consumers buy from NRA establishments.

Johnson was silent upon the attitude of Henry Ford, who has not affiliated himself with the code of competition for the automobile industry.

For the first time he cancelled his semi-yearly conference with newspapermen and at the hotel it was said he had no comment to make on reports of a tented action by the motor magazine.

The federation of labor said that from March to July, its membership dropped 2,023,000 men. The men had gone back to work and that trade union reports disclosed that in August employment continued almost as rapidly as in July despite the check to business.

"Income of wage and salary workers were higher by 900,000,000 in July than in March," the survey said. "On a yearly basis this amounts to a gain of $4,440,000,000. Farmers' income this year is estimated at $2,000,000,000 above last year."

"This even before it is fully underway the recovery program has already poured new purchasing power into the market at the rate of over $4,000,000,000 a year. This alone would be enough to raise retail sales 17 percent."

The effect of this new purchasing power is already being felt. There is not much chance of any federal operated lottery which would amount to a wholesale flooding of the American market.

Chicago Crime Fighting With Back To Wall

Among the additional 59 listed were these: William Druggan, brother of Terry Druggan, who is serving a federal prison sentence for income tax violations. George Druggan, another brother of Terry.

William (Klondike) O'Donnell, alleged leader of a West Side beer and racketeering gang. George (Bois) Moran, leader of a Northside gang which was virtually exterminated by the St. Valentine's Day massacre in a North Clark St. garage in 1929. Joe Sallis, for years the reputed head of a Southside gang. James (Fur) Sammons, ex-convict who served 20 years in prison.

Thomas Touhy, co-leader with his brother, Roger, of the Touhy gang, suspected kidnapers. Frank Diamond, brother-in-law of Al Capone, one time Chicago gang leader now in the Atlanta, Ga. federal prison as an income tax law violator.

Gus Winkler, once suspected of complicity in the St. Valentine Day massacre, and now under sentence as a gun-toter.

As the crime war raged on, Chief Justice John J. Frydalski promised that only a beginning had been made, and that the authorities are "never going to stop."

There were more convictions Thursday and Thursday night. Walter Gubka, described by police as a Northside Side gunman, was found guilty by a jury and sentenced immediately to the maximum under the new vagabond law—six months in the work-house. Chester Gallas, 28, and James Kuratko, 30, were convicted of slaying Jacob Pederson, a street car motorman during an attempted holdup.

Gallas was sentenced to life. Kuratko got off with a 14 year sentence.

Ford Is Planning Big Offensive, Is Latest Word

(Continued From Page One) has not changed his mind about remaining outside the NRA agreement. Questioned as to Ford's company's plans, they point out repeatedly that the Ford Motor Co. pays better than the minimum wage demanded in the NRA automotive code and that the employees work an eight-hour, five day week. The NRA code demands a 43-cent-an-hour wage, and 25 hours a week, while the present Ford rate is 60 cents an hour.

Ford several weeks ago in his last public statement on the NRA code, declared he would have to "live down to it." He has been represented as objecting strenuously to possibilities of unionization through provisions of the code.

Cates had said he believed that instead of craft unions, such as bricklayers or iron workers organizations, spread through various industries, the proper form was an ordering of each industry under a code with wage brackets far in excess of skillful crafts. Cates said differences over labor policy led to his departure from NRA.

"I early determined that it was the function of NRA as prescribed by the statute to maintain an attitude of perfect neutrality, to lend itself to no theory, and to execute the law," Johnson said. Mr. Cates, quite recently, wrote me that he thought existing craft unions are obsolete and that he had set himself to stop it at every turn. Obviously that is an attitude in violation of the statute which we are both sworn to enforce.

"I rely on the logic of circumstances to demonstrate this law as an essential principle on which it bases out. I do not conceive this or any other statutory mandate as a subject for the propagation of personal predilection. The only issue between Mr. Cates and myself is the issue of statutory interpretation and faithfulness to a decided policy of the President."
