Seven hundred school children quietly awaited the ound of the gong which was to end their day's work and end them scampering home to their parents. Instead, just ten minutes before the hour for dismissal came the sound of a blast that was heard for miles around. The walls of the building crumbled; the roof rose and then fell crushing out the lives of 425 children, injuring scores of

No one seems to know how it happened. The school superintendent to whom the lives of 1250 pupils and the finest rural school house in the country had been entrusted, speculated. It might have been an accumulation of gas coming out of the earth from under the building. And then there was that gas pipe, also coming up from under the building through the floor. Just a few days before he had ordered that pipe capped by the janitor.

But however it happened, an incredible tragedy has occurred. It matters little now whether it was some human weakness, some careless action on the part of some individual who failed in his hour of greatest need, or another one of those disasters which the elements alone occasionally cause when they go on a rampage. The deed is done. And 425 little children have been sacrificed, and countless parents, relatives, and friends hopelessly be-

It is hard to believe that anything quite so horrible could actually happen in real life.

How To Pronounce

Are you one of those sticklers for good English who never can say anything without first looking it up to see how it is pronounced and who goes around checking everyone else on his pronunciation until everyone runs and hides when he sees you coming for fear you will confront him with some such proposition as "How do you pronounce 'indefatigability'?"

If you are, try this out on your friends some day and furnishes a huge target for his see how they pronounce it:

"Under the asure sky crouched an indisputable Indian. His forehead was bedizened with herbage, and he wore Los Gehrig has agreed to work a scarlet belt about his abdomen. Though his conduct was this summer for a paltry $36,000 exemplary and decorous, he lived in extraordinary squalor. Though, like a patriot, familiar with the tribal leg-

CANDLELIGHT

By NINA OLIVER DEAN You have a nimble wit; I think it was made of Atlanta's beels."

The myth that Thackeray had no sense of humor, set going probably by someone who never got beyond one of the great Victorian's lengthy introductions, has been revived recently in connec tion with the Hollywood producthe outset that there is not much opportunity for what Corey Ford has called "abdominal mirth," the kind of laugh one gets from viewfor the humor is the subtle brand that brings a smile instead of laugh, and sometimes a smile accompanied by a tear. But the smiles are there, and plenty of hem, from the opening chapter at Miss Pinkerton's Academy in Chiswick Mall to the last page wherein Becky Sharp goes to church and interests herself in destitute muffin men.

The humor of Thackeray partakes not only of the Ironic qualalso of the gentleness of Barrie, in the portrayal, at least, of those characters with whose weaknesses he deals with a tender touch such es Dobbin in "Vanity Fair" and Colonel Newcome in "The New-comes." The ponderous Jos Sed-ley, who lumbers through "Vanley Fair," much like the elephant with George Osburne compared to hing creators satire. The first picture of Jos on his arrival in London with his Hessian boots and enormou neckcloths, vainly imagining that he is a famous dandy, and the later pictures in a military role attached to the Duke of Wellington's army, growing fierce miltary moustaches which he shaves off hastily when danger comes,

Women Of Glamour' Rich In Wit, Drama And Surprise Scenes

A superbly enacted comedy drama, rich in romance, pathos and emotional power, comes to the Ritz Theater Tuesday with Its straightforward, daring tale of a love that defled the conventions of a society too smug to be realistle. The film is Columbia's "Women of Glamour," written by Lynn Starling and Mary C. McCall Jr., with Virginia Bruce and Melvyn Douglas in the leading roles. Supporting the stars is a large cast including Reginald Denny, Leona Maricle, Thurston Hall, Pert Kelton and Miki Morita.

Taking a serious theme, and infusing it with brigt flashes of tender romance and sharpwitted comedy, Director Gordon Wiles has painted a screen pic fure that approaches entertainment perfection.

Melvyn Douglas, sterling actor wifose flair for the modern touch was so well illustrated in "She Martied Her Boss" and "Theo. dora Goes Will," comes through with another perfect perform
