conducting the inspections since the state mandated it in 1972, explains that once concluded, he returns to the office and the recording is transcribed. Then, depending on the extent of the violation the maintenance department or the school fixes the error. Before the inspection began of Longwood's 28 classrooms, Carlton first checked in with principal Arletta Coberly. In the school office with Mrs. Coberly, Carlton notes than an office fire extinguisher is placed too high. "The fire extinguishers have to be five feet from the floor to enable a short teacher or student to get to it."

Carlton explains. In the classrooms some objects hanging from electric light fixtures and wires placed in such a way that they can be tripped over. "Sometimes they may look like small things. but we check everything is to just keep the water fountains clean," Cariton explains, "because having a water fountain with dirt in it or other foreign materials can be a severe health hazard."

Reflecting on the most serious problem he has incountered during his six year tenure, Carlton noted that exposed air conditioning wires at Lyman High School would have been the most severe. "That's the first thing I noticed when I walked into that classroom and everyone seemed to be unaware of it," he said.

That hazard was corrected within a matter of hours, Carlton said. 'Very few go on for any length of time," he added.

Nearing the end of the Longwood inspection Carlton arrived at the school playground and examined the slides and other recreation equipment. "We always check the ladders on the slides and the area around the equipment to make sure there aren't any metal pipes or similar objects lying around," he said.

Another infraction found at the school was a shelf located above the door in a portable. While the shelf seemed secure, Carlton noted there was always the consibility it could become cose and fall, causing possible injury. The occupants said it would be aken down.

Terming the first inspection "better than ormal," the next stop was Winter Springs Elemen-called pods. "This type of class set up causes a special problem as the law requires that all exit signs have to be visible and there has to be easy access to the exit," Carlton said.

While the school passed the first point, several of the partitions had to be moved to provide the ample ent route.

Another requirement which both schools met was the easy ability to open the doors. "The doors should open with a maximum of 15 pounds of pressure," he explains.

The only other infraction at the new school was that originally been designated for storage was being used by students so it needed a lighted exit sign.

Also checked at both schools was the primary and secondary exit routes to be used by the students and teachers in case of an ther gency.

Signs have to be posted in visible places and periodic drills are required. Cariton is not the only one who conducts the inspections as the insurance company also makes periodic inspections. However, Robert Karns, an insurance agent noted that "overall the picture is very good." He added "from time to

ERA Supporters Lobby

For Deadline Extension

WASHINGTON (UPI) - Backers of the Equal Rights Amendment, buoyed by a huge women's rights demonstration, fanned out across Capitol Hill today in an effort to salvage ERA with a seven-year extension of its ratification deadline.

The battle to win an extension remains too close to call, according to Rep. Margaret Heckler, R-Mass., the senior woman member of the House and a founder of the women's caucus in Congress.

A vote is expected by the House Judiciary Committee within two weeks and in the House by the end of July. Senate action would follow House approval.

Decision Due On Missiles

WASHINGTON (UPI) - President Carter is back in the Oval Office, reportedly pondering whether to inform the Russians he has decided to build multiple-hole installations for America's missiles when the current SALT protocol expires.

Carter reportedly is weighing a decision on informing the Soviets the United States may alter the status of its Minuteman ICBM missile system by digging thousands of underground silos so the missiles could be moved around from one to another.

That system, plus one to put the missiles on tracks for concealment purposes, would make the ICBMs less vulnerable because an enemy would never be sure where they were located.

Nazis: 'Jews Deserved It'

CHICAGO (UPI) - A small band of brownshirted Nazis Sunday predicted a Jewish holocaust in America, but their diatribes left a crowd of several thousand people feeling flat. Frank Collin, Chicago's Nazi leader who denies the Jewishness of his own father, strutted on the top of a white van and shouted to the crowd:

"I can't believe there was a Holocaust. But if there was, they (Jews) deserved it. Just as they're going to deserve it this time.'

when it took off from the Rhode Island airport in heavy fog and nose-dived into a farm field about four miles away.

Abuse Centers Get Support

WASHINGTON (UPI) - The government is increasing its support for centers to help child victims of sex abuse and incest. The National Center on Child Abuse and Neglect, a Health, Education and Welfare Department agency, is being helped by the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration to finance the centers to ease "devastating" reactions to sex abuses that leave fear and unjustified guilt scars that may never be erased.

Leverage Is Best, Not The Boycott

Apartheid - the loathsome policy of racial segregation in South Africa - has become one of the most heated issues in the corporate boardrooms and public meeting halls of America.

Critics of the South African regime are calling for more U.S. trade sanctions along with divestiture of U.S. investments in that white minority-ruled county .

The call for divestiture has been made directly to more than 350 American firms doing business in South Africa, and indirectly through their shareholders.

The most heavily pressured shareholders include municipal entities and institutions such as the University of California, whose regents have been lobbied by student protest.

The action they are being urged to take is viewed, by those who urge it, as a heavy economic club to swing at the South African government. But in our own view, not forgetting the moral imperative of challenging apartheid outright, divestiture is an empty, potentially counterproductive gesture. The South African economy is one of diversity and durability, based as it is upon precious natural resources, high export demand and cheap labor which, though exploited by our standards, is attracting industry. American companies doing business in the republic are among the largest multinational firms in the free world.

It is unrealistic to suppose that these economic ties would be cut for purely political reasons, but rearguard prodding from American stockholders hardly can affect vital corporate policy with affirmative results

Investment withdrawals would have more impact on wayward, one-resource countries such as Uganda - whose own genocidal regime curiously has escaped the attention of those up in arms over South Africa. Why, indeed, are the human-rights activists not calling for a boycott of Idi Amin's coffee export to this country?

-- Another-problem with divestitures of this magnitude is that a massive unloading of shares actually may drive down stock prices, and weaken the financial strength of U.S. institutions and corporations

And if that doesn't happen, the stock otherwise will wind up in the hands of new shareholders who may value profitability higher than the social responsibility of their predecessors.

For this very reason, we see more merit in the proach of the Rev. Leon Sullivan, a black director of General Motors Corp. He urges American stockholders with South African-related investments to retain and use their ownership of the companies as leverage for changes in apartheid.

Sullivan himself has gathered the signatures of dozens of American firms on a pledge to push for changes in South African law that would bring about fair employment practices and integrated working conditions.

In the long run, such efforts promise results. Apartheid is something that must be confronted head-on, the hard way, rather than merely shunned.

Dear Bag Boy, er, Bag Person, that is, Do you realize the extent of your importance? Think about it. You are the last word at the supermarket, which consumes a hunk of consumers' time and money. To me, grocery shopping is one heck of a big deal, and not to be taken lightly. But you could make Milady's chore more pleasant and much lighter by not stuffing the bags so full that the super strength of an Amazon is necessary to remove that heavy load from the far corner of the car trunk. When a woman shops alone during the day, odds are she does not have a strong set of arms and backbone at home to lug the parcels inside.

Try as I may, I cannot stretch the backbone several more inches to remove that heavy bag. I have literally lifted my torso into the compartment to unload a portion of its contents into another containe

Although I am agile with flexible reflexes. I cannot bend forward far enough to grasp the bag with both hands without my feet leaving the concrete - and ouch, my aching back.

And while I'm pick, pick, picking, many's the time, in the efforts to battle the bags, I have "picked" a good garment with unsightly little snags from rough places on the car, and wiped up several layers of street dirt from its exterior on my clothes. Tucking the groceries away is another deplorable, distasteful detail after hauling them inside. I normally shop after work, and by the time I get the last bag (including me) inside. I'm so pot on, and while the water is warming, I toss the perishables into the cooler, slip into something comfortable, and sip the brew while reading something - sometimes the dictionary or telephone book - for a few minutes relaxation.

When my courage gets built up, I sneak into the kitchen to store the other edibles.

I didn't get too upset over the package of flattened rolls - this is the norm.

Nor did I get too uptight that the graham cracker crust, placed in the bag sideways, was piled up like an ant mound. The expensive apple pie hiding in the bottom of a bag upside down was no real calamity. We had scrambled pie for a different dessert.

But the unforgivable faux pas was when I discovered two pounds of pure butter in the bottom of another bag covered with two ripe 'n ready canteloupes. The fruit odor had drifted into the butter which had to be fed to the garbage disposal. Many working women grocery shop on their lunch hour, dash home, put away the perishables only, and dash back to work. There is a sensible, simple solution. Open several grocery bags at a time and play pitch. Pack Milady's bags lightly and separate the perishables from the insect spray, etc.

Then a nice tip will top the day.

What goes up is supposed to come down, eventually. The airlines, however, have been doing their best of late to disaprove the rule so far as it applies to business trends.

Consider that passenger traffic is up a estimated 20 percent this month - and that following an 18 percent jump in May which topped a 13 percent increase for April. Revenues and profits are on the same course - and this not despite but because of reduced fares. It's onward and upward and all because i bureaucrat took a radically unbureaucratic approach to the airline industry and, to its initial dismay, freed it from the cocoon of federal regulations which had determined its evelopment and operational procedures for four decades. As Civil Aeronautics Board Chairman Alfred E. Kahn saw it, the cocoon had developed into a straitjacket. The regulatory system which was supposed to ensure orderly operation in the public service actually shortchanged the public and prevented the airlines' expansion into mass transportation industry.

Early this year Kahn reversed the pattern of 40 years. Routes, traditionally and stingily parceled out to carefully selected carriers, were opened to competition and the lines were encouraged to develop competitive fare schedules. The results are recent history. The airlines have seen the all-important load factor - the percentage of available seats booked on flights - climb to an average of more than 60 percent. Since operating costs are about the same whether a plane is one-quarter or three-quarters full, the extra passengers are in the category of found money There has, however, been a price to pay in terms of convenience. So many special fare plans and packages have been introduced that passengers and ticketing personnel alike are hard-pressed to find their way through the schedules and come up with the best fit for an individual traveler's needs and wallet. If it was difficult to get a phone call through to a reservation desk before, it is doubly so now.

Still, the bargain flights are worth the hassle and delay for a growing public, much of it company's employment record." Ironically, in becoming a mass transportation service the airlines are cutting into a veteran in Johnson said it is essential for American that category. The bus industry, which has begun making noises about the need for some public assistance, cites lower air fares as a major cause of its declining-passenger problem. But that's business - very good business as far as the airlines are concerned.

Meanwhile, the airlines continue to devise new fare plans.

A recent innovation comes from British Airways, which wants to offer not one, not two, but three classes of service between London and

Franking Privilege Violations WASHINGTON (NEA) - Common Cause, which has a way of afflicting the comfortable on Capitol Hill, has really set the cat among the pigeons with its law suit attacking use of the franking privilege.

In pursuing documents that would help substantiate its allegation that members of Congress use their free mailing privileges for political purposes, Common Cause stumbled across the fact that many senators keep personal and official papers at the National Archives under a free "courtesy" storage deal.

Common Cause attorneys promptly set out to subpoena senatorial documents from the Archives, touching off panic among the solons. It seems many senators have been using the Archives as a handy and supposedly safe storage place for everything from income tax returns to ivorce papers - and the prospect of Common Cause lawyers rummaging through such materials has sent Democrats and Republicans alike into a tizzy.

An informal, bipartisan committee of senators has been seeking ways to fight the Common Cause suit, with the help of outside counsel. Its chairman, ironically, is Sen. Herman E. Talmadge, D.-Ga., whose acrimonious divorce has led to a Senate Ethics Committee investigation of his personal financial dealings.

Actually, the senators have little to fear as far as their private papers are concerned. Common Cause lawyers have an index to documents in storage at the Archives and are subpoenaing only those which appear to involve use of the frank. Senatorial staff aides, not Common Cause attorneys, fetch the papers from storage. The lawsuit challenging the constitutionality of the law giving members free mailing privileges has been dragging on for four years now, with both House and Senate resisting every step of the way. So far, the U.S. District Court has been siding with Common Cause on all its procedural flower delighted the Vic torian color sense. It was often called the "ear drop" because of its similarity to ladies' earrings in the way it swung down from its spray.

A very popular way to grow flowers and plants was in a window garden. Victorian bay and oriel windows were especially suited to this purpose. It was not uncommon to have two window gardens - one in a sunny location planted with begonia, ivy, geraniums, lantana; and another in a shaded spot planted with ferns, rubber plants, white petunias. Shelves were built in the window and the floor underneath was generally covered with zinc to protect the floor from moisture. Sometimes a curtain was hung below the sill to hide the watering can and other indoor gardening tools.

Hanging baskets were as popular then as they are today. Ready-made baskets were constructed from wire and painted black or green and fancy terra cotta pots were used. Just as often they were homemade and decorated with pine cones and acorns which were glued on in elaborate designs. Wooden bowls and cocoanut halves were
