Tasting Oviedo

OVIEDO — Seminole County's fastest growing city will sponsor the Second Annual "A Taste of Oviedo," Saturday, May 18, from 10 a.m. to 7 p.m.

Angela Williford, executive assistant for the Greater Oviedo Chamber of Commerce, said the purpose of the event was "to show people a little of what Oviedo has to offer."

Some of the new offerings this year include tethered hot air balloon rides, an exhibition of classic cars and an authentically recreated 1950s gas station.

Taste of Oviedo will feature specialty dishes prepared by area restaurants. Visitors to the celebration will also be able to enjoy a variety of musical entertainment while strolling down Alexandria Boulevard adjacent to Oviedo's City Hall.

For art lovers, a large exhibition of arts and crafts will be displayed by artists from throughout the Southeast. A limited edition art print, signed and numbered by artist Duana Suckee, will be on sale.

Children will be welcomed by Splash, Shades and Izzy, the mascots for Wet 'n Wild, Orlando Solar Bears and the Olympics.

According to Williford, Taste of Oviedo is free to the public and also has free parking and complimentary Lynx shuttle service from Oviedo High School, Lawton Elementary School and Stenstrom Elementary School in Oviedo. For more information, contact the chamber at (407) 368-8800.

TDC meeting

SANFORD — The Seminole County Tourist Development Commission is to meet this afternoon at the Central Florida Zoological Park in Sanford. Included in the program is a presentation on funding from the Irish Festival, and the Sanford Chamber's Bass Tournament. If approved, both of these requests will be included as part of the 1996/97 TDC budget.

SJRWMD meeting

PALATKA — The St. Johns River Water Management District (SJRWMD) will hear several Seminole County related requests at a meeting Tuesday, May 14. Listed under Consumptive Use applications are requests from the Seminole County Commission for a permit in the Lynwood-BelAire area, from Seminole Community College and the Seminole County School Board for urban landscaping at SCC and Oviedo High School.

For management and storage of surface water requests, the board will hear applications from Suntec Builders for the Wentworth Subdivision and from Augustine Limited for Waverlee Woods.

The City of Sanford also has an application scheduled to be heard regarding modification of a previously issued permit for drainage improvements for the Mill Creek area.

The Florida Department of Transportation has two permit requests listed for SR-438 Pearl Lake Causeway to Douglas Avenue.

The meeting will be held at the SJRWMD headquarters, BR-100 West, Palatka, beginning at 1 p.m. Tuesday.

Correction

Due to misinformation provided by the law enforcement agencies, the passengers in a van involved in an accident on Thursday, May 2, were misidentified. The group of riders were employees of the Sanford Auto Auction.

Money is a bigger concern to women

From Staff and Wire reports

SANFORD — Men just don't notice the little things when it comes to money matters in the home, a national survey showed recently. And things are no different here in Seminole County.

Banker Bobby Douglas, vice president of SunTrust Bank in Sanford, said he has noticed in his position at the bank, that women are far more aware of "every penny" than their male counterparts.

"They know every penny that should be in that account," he said. "They are very aware."

For many women, that awareness comes from necessity.

School district statistics show that in some areas, 70 percent of the children live in single parent homes, led primarily by women. The women often work two, sometimes three, jobs in order to make ends meet.

"They know how hard they have to work for that money," Douglas said. "They know where it is."

Chiles to OK redistricting bill, Sanford not affected

From staff and wire reports

SANFORD — The same parts of Sanford and Seminole County represented by the third congressional district will apparently remain unchanged. The overall district however, will be redesigned.

State Representative Corrine Brown, who will lose a portion of the district still says she is disappointed, "...not just for the voters in the district but for the entire state."

Governor Lawton Chiles however said he will approve the newly re-drawn district although he has reservations about the length of qualifying time for candidates.

The Legislature passed the proposal last week well before the May 22 deadline it had been given by a federal court to come up with new boundaries for the District 3 seat held by Brown of Jacksonville.

Early in the discussion of the redistricting, Brown indicated she intended to run for election to the district regardless of its structure. Since the matter was approved by the legislature however, she has not issued any direct statement about her candidacy.

A three-judge panel ruled congressional districts could not be drawn solely for the purpose of racial gerrymander.

"This new plan makes appropriate changes without causing major disruption to the voters of our state," Chiles said Wednesday.

But Chiles said he was concerned about the 21-day qualifying period for candidates who want to seek office in the new district, which would run from Jacksonville to Orlando and shift Gainesville, Lake

Murder arrest

FORT LAUDERDALE — A man wanted in a Lakeland murder was arrested in Broward County more than a week after the 42-year-old victim was shot to death while sleeping on his living room couch, police said.

Police say 23-year-old Edelmiro Cortes of Lakeland opened fire on the wood frame house where David Stillwell was dozing on his living room couch Monday night. One of the bullets struck him in the back, killing him.

Polk County authorities determined Cortes might have fled to the Dania area, just south of Fort Lauderdale. Cortes was arrested without incident after a deputy spotted his car Tuesday.

Cortes confessed to a Broward Sheriff's deputy and Polk deputies traveled south to interview Cortes.

He was held in the Broward County jail on charges of second-degree murder, shooting into an occupied home and related charges. He was being held without bond until he can be transferred to Polk County.

Fla. gun used in NY shooting

DAYTONA BEACH — The gun used to kill three people in Daytona Beach last week matches the one that Ronald Douglas Hernandez used later in a shooting spree in New York state, police said.

Since three bodies were discovered last Thursday in an apartment, police have theorized that Hernandez, 39, shot the three to death April 29 before renting a car and taking off for New York state. On April 30 in New York, Hernandez wounded three people before killing himself at the end of a police chase.

Pieces of bullets recovered after the shootings in Poughkeepsie, N.Y., were compared in the Florida Department of Law Enforcement laboratory with fragments found in the Daytona Beach apartment where the three died.

The same gun was used in all the shootings, FDLE concluded Wednesday.

Daytona Beach police expect to close their file this week in the murders of student pilot Luigi Cravoio, 27, his brother, Ricardo Cravoio, 24, and Luigi Cravoio's girlfriend, Renata S. Rinkau, 23.

Police have said Hernandez bought the gun at the Ammo Dump in South Daytona and picked it up after Florida's three-day waiting period for acquiring weapons. The store operator would not comment.

Hernandez, a former Ulster County, N.Y., resident, moved to Florida after suffering a severe back injury when his New York City taxi collided with a car.

Sixth Lord arrested

FORT MYERS — A sixth teen linked to the Lords of Chaos, a gang accused of arson and murder, has been arrested.

Thomas Torrone, 18, was arrested Tuesday night and charged with second-degree arson in the burning of the historic Coca-Cola plant in Fort Myers. He was taken to the Southwest Florida Juvenile Detention Center.

"It's a very, very sad situation," his mother, Gwendolyn Mackey, said.

Four other teenagers are charged with first-degree murder in the death of Riverdale High School band director Mark Schwebe. The 32-year-old was shot in the head with a 12-gauge shotgun last week as he stepped from his home to answer a knock at the door.

Several members of the group told authorities they shot Schwebe because he caught two of them as they planned to burn down the high school auditorium as part of an arson spree.

Members also confessed to other crimes, including the torching of the Coca-Cola plant, a church and restaurant, and an armed robbery and carjacking at another restaurant.

The teens said they considered themselves an armed militia, not a street gang. Police confiscated dozens of weapons from their homes and cars, including M-16s, semiautomatic rifles, silencers, ski masks and camouflage outfits.

Two plead guilty in shooting

KISSIMMEE — Two of 10 young defendants in the shotgun killing of another youth have pleaded guilty as accessories and will testify against the alleged shooter, prosecutors say.

The slaying of Larry Neal Oliver for his shiny red customized pickup last year turned into one of the largest and most unusual homicide cases in Central Florida.

Seven of the defendants met through their jobs at Walt Disney World. Three others met the Disney workers at topless bars in Orlando. Investigators said the group of polite, well-spoken and largely middle-class suspects kept the secret of the victim's death for a week.

Charissa Wilburn, 19, who worked as the character Pluto at Disney's Magic Kingdom, admitted she hid a shotgun from the unsuspecting victim minutes before his death. Her boyfriend, Mark Tocci, who also worked at Disney, admitted he let his truck be used to cart away Oliver's body.

Speed limit increases approved for holiday

By The Associated Press

ORLANDO — Motorists may not change their driving habits this Memorial Day weekend, but more of them will probably be driving closer to the speed limit.

The state has raised the speed limits on several major highways, a response to congressional action last year that removed federally imposed speed limits. In the 1980s, Congress lifted interstate speed limits in rural areas. Florida's action extends the raising of speed limits to metropolitan areas.

The speed limit on Florida's Turnpike, most of Interstate 95 and a small section of Interstate 4 near Orlando will be raised to 70 mph. The change includes a six-mile stretch of the turnpike through Orlando that is now limited to 55 mph.

Changing the speed limit signs along 156 miles of the turnpike from Interstate 75 at Wildwood to Fort Pierce will take several days. Completion is scheduled for May 24.

Until then, motorists should obey the posted speed limit signs or risk a speeding ticket, said Turnpike spokesman Steve Pustelnik.

Changes to speed limits on I-4, I-95 and I-75, should be completed on May 23, said Steve Homan, Central Florida district spokesman for the Florida Department of Transportation.

Speed limits on I-95 are being increased to 70 mph between the Georgia state line and Fort Pierce — with the exception of six miles in Volusia County, where it will remain at 55 mph.

Roughly the first nine miles of I-4 west of I-95 are being raised from 65 to 70 mph. The rest of I-4 remains unchanged.

Vandalized walls restored

By The Associated Press

JACKSONVILLE — A cheer rang out when two dozen sweating park rangers completed a job of fitting a slab of broken masonry back into the wall of a 180-year-old slave cabin on the Kingsley Plantation.

The rangers, some from as far away as Alaska, were repairing the work of vandals who park officials said pulled part of the wall down last year.

The rangers were at the historic site on Fort George Island on Tuesday as part of a program held every two years by the National Park Service's Williamsport Preservation Training Center in Maryland to teach rangers how to preserve and maintain historic areas.

"Training in the field is a good classroom," said Tom McGrath, chief of the training center.

And the Kingsley Plantation is a good place to learn because "not only do you have an excellent example of colonial buildings, but maybe the largest collection of tabby slave quarters," McGrath said.

The work is being done to preserve history rather than recreate it, McGrath said.

Dennis Walsh, a ranger from Valley Forge National Park in Pennsylvania, was curious about tabby, the material used to build the cabins. It is a mixture of lime, sand and oyster shells.

Kids village erasing scars of Nazis

By THE FLORIDA Associated Press Writer

KISSIMMEE — During a busy life, Henri Landwirth never forgot his lost boyhood as a prisoner in a Nazi concentration camp for Jews.

So when he prospered in business several decades later, Landwirth became a dream maker: fulfilling the wishes of critically ill children who want to visit Mickey Mouse or some of the other famous characters at Central Florida theme parks.

Landwirth, 69, estimates that the Olive Kids The World village that he founded 10 years ago has played host to 25,000 kids and their families from around the world.

"I know what it is to have no control over your life at a very young age," says the Belgian-born Landwirth, who spent more than five years at Auschwitz before escaping in the waning days of World War II.

This weekend, at least a dozen astronauts, scores of corporate executives, a smattering of foreign dignitaries — and some 1,400 other people who have helped in one way or another — will join the founder in celebrating the 10th anniversary of Olive Kids The World.

The 35-acre village near Walt Disney World serves as the home-away-from-home for the visitors, many of them clinging to their last few days or weeks of life.

The children, their parents and siblings spend six days here, at no expense, after their sponsoring group provides transportation and any medical care necessary.

It is all made possible by the generosity of many major corporations and small businesses. They have contributed an estimated $75 million in cash, goods, services and time over the past decade.

Thousands of employees from the theme parks and other companies volunteer to keep the village operating and entertain and transport the families.

Landwirth, a slim, gray-haired Santa Claus without the beard, presides over it all with a wide smile. His total involvement in the project has made for "the happiest 10 years of my life," he says.

He was 13 when he and his twin sister Margot were separated from their parents.

In the running

Rick Shaeffer has announced his intention to run for Sanford City Commission seat 1. Shaeffer has already opened a campaign account with First Union Bank in downtown Sanford. He will be seeking the seat presently held by Lon Howell, in the city election scheduled for Dec. 3. Shaeffer, 48, is a Sanford native. He is married and has one daughter. He is employed by Sanford Paint and Body Shop.

POLICE BRIEFS

Shooting

Sanford police are investigating a shooting reported early Wednesday at a residence in the 2800 block of Hiawatha Avenue. According to the incident report, a man answered his door to find another man facing him, armed with a shotgun. Police said the man struck the victim in the head with the shotgun, and went through his wallet. Finding nothing however, he reportedly left and entered a vehicle, at which time he reportedly fired a .45 caliber pistol, hitting the resident in the foot.

Police said two other persons in the doorway of the residence were also fired upon, with two bullets striking the home.

Police Commander Dennis Whitmire said the wound in the man's foot was not life-threatening, and he will be going to his personal physician to have it removed.

Police had not immediately determined a possible reason for the shooting or the attack.

Drug arrests

Members of the Sanford police Special Investigative Unit (SIU), searching for a woman wanted on an outstanding warrant, reportedly located her Tuesday near the same location, 10th Street and Maple Avenue, where she was originally arrested on April 23. Tanya Lynn Mizer, 28, 915 Maple Avenue, had been arrested on a charge of sale/delivery of crack cocaine and possession of crack cocaine. She was wanted on a warrant issued in that case, and was taken into custody Wednesday.

Also arrested with Mizer during the April 23 street level undercover operation at 10th Street and Maple Avenue, was Telly Savalas Medlock, 22, of 1000 Maple. He was charged with Sale/Delivery of a controlled substance (crack cocaine).

Argument

Two women were arrested by Sanford police Tuesday, in response to a disturbance call at 2550 Hartwell Avenue in Sanford. Elizabeth Mitchell, 32, a resident of that address, and Deloris Williams, 31, of 2853 El Portal Avenue, Sanford, were each arrested on charges of disorderly conduct.

Drug sale

Sanford police investigated Tuesday when they believed they saw a possible drug sale in progress at 11th Street and French Avenue. Victor A. Ranero, 57, of Deltona, was arrested on a charge of purchase of a controlled substance (crack cocaine). Police said they found a seven-inch folding knife in his pocket, and also charged him with possession of a concealed weapon.

Linalette Leonard Grant, 18, of 506 1/2 W. 13th Street, was arrested at the scene for sale/delivery of a controlled substance.

Accident

Sanford police arrested Iranie Georgia Baker, 39, of 1011 Vihlen Road Tuesday. Officers said she had reportedly been involved in a minor traffic accident in the 2500 block of French Avenue. The vehicle she reportedly struck was driven by Sanford police Sgt. Darrell Brewer. Neither vehicle was said to have been seriously damaged.

Brewer reportedly called police with the description of Baker's vehicle, and it was detained as the result of a traffic stop in the 100 block of S. French Avenue. Baker was charged with driving under the influence.

Undercover arrest

Sanford police arrested Julian Bartholomew Wimberly, 20, of 23 William Clark Court at his residence Tuesday. Officers said he was reportedly involved in a drug sale to an undercover agent at First Street and French Avenue. He was charged with sale/delivery of a controlled substance.

Battery

Kurt William McLeod, 41, 192 Morning Glory Drive, Lake Mary, was arrested by sheriff's deputies at his residence Tuesday following a reported altercation with his wife. He was charged with aggravated battery domestic violence and battery.

Sanford police reports

Two Hummel figurines and a tray of 70 assorted rings, with a total value of $450 were reported stolen early Wednesday from a business in the 300 block of S. Sanford Avenue. Police said an estimated $250 in damage was done during the burglary.

A cellular phone valued at $300 was reported stolen from a woman's purse Tuesday in the 1300 block of S. French Avenue in Sanford.

Postal inspectors nab child porn operators

By RANDOLPH E. SCHNEID
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — Postal inspectors announced today they have shut down the largest known commercial distributor of child pornography in U.S. history.

Forty-five people have been charged and more arrests are possible in the nationwide investigation.

The arrests follow a two-year undercover investigation, chief Postal Inspector Kenneth J. Hunter said.

The probe originated with a San Diego company called Overseas Mail, he said. Postal inspectors began investigating complaints that the company was sending out catalogues offering child pornography.

One operator of the company, James Leroy Kemmish, was arrested in 1994 by customs agents when he was returning from overseas. Agents found $18,000 in cash and child pornography when they searched his baggage.

"Simply shutting down Overseas Mail wasn't enough, because those who created the demand for child pornography were still out there," Hunter said.

The post office took over the business after Kemmish was arrested, changing its name to Island Mail and running it as an undercover operation, he said.

When people ordered child pornography from the catalogue, postal inspectors made the deliveries and then arrested the recipients if they accepted the parcels. Most of those arrested were charged with possession of child pornography.

In all, the postal service conducted 130 searches in 36 states during its undercover operation.

Hunter said the videos offered by Overseas Mail are "in actuality videotaped evidence of a crime taking place. They show images of children having sex with each other or with adults — children as young as 7, 8 or 9 years old being sexually abused in unthinkable ways."

The undercover operation was known as Operation Special Delivery. Hunter said the videos sold from $50 to $290, depending on the age of the children involved. A review of the company's financial records showed it grossed $10,000 a week during one six-month period.

Hunter said another man believed to have been involved with the company, Troy A. Frank, was found dead in Mexico last year. Hunter said Frank was believed to have committed suicide.

FDA warns Pfizer of violations

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The government has accused pharmaceutical giant Pfizer Inc. of failing to report serious side effects of its drugs, finding violations dating to 1983.

Federal law requires drug makers to tell the Food and Drug Administration of serious side effects within 15 days, so the government can decide quickly whether the problem threatens public health.

But Pfizer repeatedly failed to report side effects from eight drugs, including such big sellers as the heart medicine Procardia XL and the antidepressant Zoloft, the FDA said in a warning letter mailed April 26 to Pfizer Chief Executive William Steere Jr.

Last year and in 1994, Pfizer reported the side effects between 77 and 514 days late, an FDA inspection concluded.

When the agency reviewed company records, it found similar violations dating to 1983.

Pfizer spokesman Brian McGlynn said the company had received the letter and would respond promptly to the FDA's concerns.

The FDA has no indication any patients were harmed by the delays, but companies are required to report side effects because the FDA — not the manufacturer — decides when side effects are risky enough to require that other patients be warned, said agency spokesman Larry Bachorik.

The six other drugs cited in the FDA's letter were Diabinese, Minipress XL, Feldene, Norvasc, Diflucan and Terramycin.

Seeking true leaders

Tis the season. Politicians representing us on the state and national levels who are presently holding office, are starting to campaign. Mail and fax copy being sent to the Sanford Herald will attest to that.

We have little doubt that many publicists and press secretaries have recently found employment.

Yesterday, 13 separate press releases were faxed from one senator's press secretary. With three received in the morning and 10 in the afternoon, each was a separate release telling of the great work this senator has done for the people of Central Florida, even though the area represented is but a small portion of Seminole County, and has nothing to do with Sanford.

Yet we are told of the great accomplishments this senator has achieved during the legislative session and the wonderful benefits to be derived by the people of the state and area. Of course, others voted for the same items, and helped support many of the same bills, but one would think these matters were this senator's sole responsibility.

We aren't picking on this particular senator. In fact, we won't even mention a name, party, or district. This however, is a good example of how many of our legislators operate.

Place a phone call to them regarding information sought regarding a local problem, and they are hardly ever available. If located, they seldom are willing to share what information they have. "I've have to get back to you," they say, and never return.

When you write them, or call them, they will probably be a copy of a form letter with just your name added. Makes one wonder if what you wrote even reached their eyes much less entered their minds for consideration.

But let it get to a point where re-election is approaching, and they will be everywhere. They will be attending dinners, chamber of commerce meetings, and holding forums for the general public. They will attend various open house functions and be ready and willing to pose for photos with local dignitaries.

They will be sending press releases by the gross, and mail to every mail box and post office box in the area.

Unfortunately, in attending political debates or meetings, we have, too often, heard candidates promise to "keep you informed," only to lose contact with them until their term in office is nearing conclusion.

Some politicians are very willing to respond to the general public and cooperate with the press. We could name names, but if we forget to include someone, that person would probably take offense, and we don't want to alienate them.

What we suggest is that people keep their eyes and ears open to find out what their elected officials accomplish, and stand for, not necessarily as one of many other legislators, but as one who is a true leader. We, as members of the media, are doing this. We hope you, as a voter, will do likewise.

Satisfied parent

This article is in response to the negative article on Hamilton Elementary School, printed Tuesday, April 30, 1996. Please consider printing this article.

Thank you.
My child attends Hamilton Elementary. In the past I was dissatisfied with Hamilton. I even withdrew my son from the school. However, he was placed back at Hamilton after I personally witnessed the wonderful changes Mrs. Bingham and her staff had made.

I realize that there are a few children that attend there that have behavioral problems. These children are in every school. They are not only at Hamilton. They are not of one ethnic, social or economic background and most of their problems come from home life. There is only so much a school can do. They are not there to be substitute parents for those who neglect their parental responsibilities. So if we want changes at schools, I would suggest that those changes must first start at home!

NAT HENTOFF

A journalist who made a difference

I.F. Stone, one of my mentors in this business, used to tell young reporters: "If you intend to use the First Amendment to change the world, forget it. If you're lucky, you may be able, over time, to make small, incremental changes."

Once in a while, however, a journalist does make a big difference, even rescuing innocent people from prison -- and changing the way many other journalists cover a particular kind of story.

For much of the last 10 years, Dorothy Rabinowitz has been rigorously investigating cases of pre-school teachers and others around the country who have been convicted of sexual child abuse. She first became involved in the New Jersey sentencing of Kelly Michaels to 47 years in prison on 115 counts of bizarrely molesting 30 children from the ages of 3 to 6. (One child testified that Michaels had turned her into a mouse. Others said the teacher made them eat a "cake" of her face.)

The press at the time found the testimony of the accusers entirely convincing and a Pulitzer Prize winner, Anna Quindlen, then a columnist for the New York Times, urged her readers to "believe the children."

Rabinowitz interviewed everyone she was able to reach, including the furious parents of the allegedly abused children. She also obtained transcripts of the state's "investigator" who questioned the children until the kids gave the required answers.

I also had those transcripts. The manipulation and intimidation of the children was so obvious that if the trial had not been about sexual violations of kids, the charges would have been dismissed. The prosecution did not introduce a single piece of physical evidence to support the charges and the children's stories.

After five years in prison, Michaels was released because lawyers who had read Dorothy Rabinowitz's investigative pieces volunteered to prove her innocence. By then, most of the press had come to the balanced conclusion that whatever an injustice had been done, but there was no apology.

Rabinowitz had joined the Wall Street Journal by then, writing commentary. But, an investigative reporter, she bases her commentaries on research that comes from leg work.

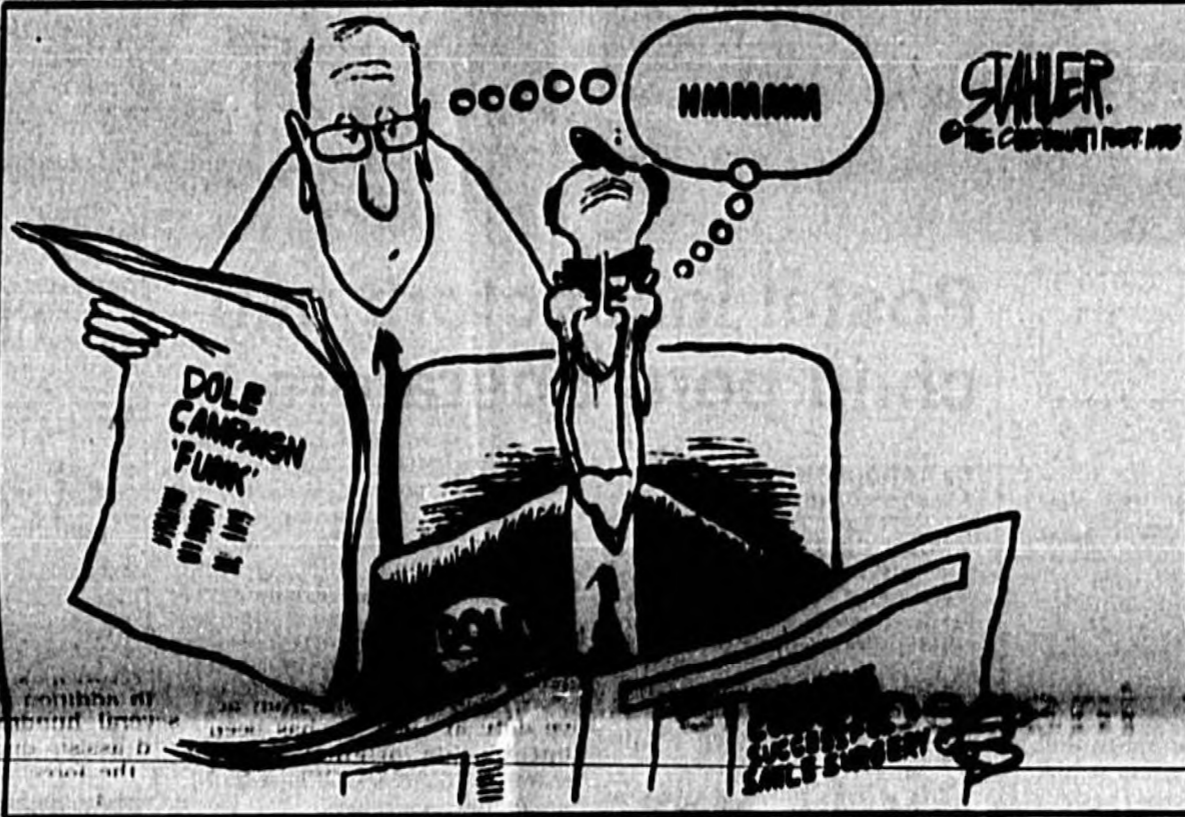

Although she writes on other issues, Rabinowitz continues to confront prosecutors and jurists who have convicted defendants accused by children -- convicted by therapists and law enforcement "specialists" in sexual abuse. An Alan Kore, a history professor at the University of Pennsylvania, notes:

"When Rabinowitz has discussed to full public scrutiny and understanding in early remembrance of Burke's which arose -- a jurisprudence of leading questions, suggestibility, disregard of evidence and logic, and carelessness joined to fanaticism."

Rabinowitz was a finalist for a Pulitzer Prize in commentary this year but was not considered worthy. Some members of the ultimate deciding Pulitzer Board had been told -- as one of them assured Tucker Carlson a writer for the Standard -- that she had had no effect on the local situation she wrote about. So much for accuracy of reporting on high.

Once in a while, however, a journalist does make a big difference, even rescuing innocent people from prison.

MORTON KONDRACKE

Candidate Dole must come alive

It used to be called "gridlock," but divided government may not be so bad after all. For it to continue, though, Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., has to come alive as a presidential candidate.

At the rate things are going, Dole will lose the presidential election as badly that Democrats will win back the House and President Clinton will be pulled to the left in his second term as he was in the first two years of his presidency -- a bad thing for him and the Democratic Party.

Clinton fought his party to get the NAFTA trade deal approved and to begin deficit reduction, but congressional Democrats exerted no pressure on him to fulfill his pledges on welfare or campaign finance reform and actually encouraged him to push for the comprehensive health care reform plan whose failure led to the 1994 GOP landslide.

Divided government in 1995 and 1996 hasn't produced agreement on welfare, campaign finance, health care, or a balanced budget, but a good argument can be made that Clinton and a Republican Congress could make beautiful music together in 1997 and 1998.

Clinton, it seems pretty clear now, is a blend of old liberal and new Democrat tendencies. After he won in 1992, he became a champion of "activist government." In this year's State of the Union message, he declared that "the era of big government is over."

Which will it be if Clinton gets re-elected in 1997? A lot will depend on who runs the White House staff and what kind of pressure Clinton is under from Congress.

If Democrats hold a significant edge in the House and liberals dominate major committees -- a certainty, given the decimation of Democratic moderates in 1994 -- the pressure will be on to abandon entitlement reform and budget balancing in favor of "public investment."

The Democrats' answer to the problem of middle-class income stagnation might be not only Clintonian central programs like job-training vouchers and tuition credits, but also big government efforts to induce corporations to close gaps between executive and worker pay, guarantee health and pension benefits, and invest strictly in the United States.

If Republicans control Congress, though, Clinton can continue to act as a break on their excesses -- such as their plan to deny education benefits to children of illegal aliens -- while possibly cutting deals to balance the budget, control entitlement growth, and reform affirmative action and welfare.

Presumably, a re-elected Clinton will want a solid record of accomplishment to show for his presidency. Republicans, too, will want to show they are not irresponsible extremists. So negotiations could produce a raft of creative centrist solutions to national problems.

But divided government requires a better campaign than the dismal one Dole is presently running. In fact, Dole needs to come alive just to give proper voice to Republican principles, which close to half the electorate support.

Not only is Clinton 15 to 20 points ahead in the polls and $10 million ahead in spending money between now and the conventions, he's also using the mid-phase of this election year to maximum advantage -- and Dole is not.

Myatified White House aides point out that Dole had the GOP nomination in hand more than a month ago and basically has come up with only two of five votes since then -- on "liberal" judges and the gas tax -- while Clinton has had the airwaves to himself.

Over the coming month, Clinton plans to make at least three commencement speeches -- at Penn State, the Coast Guard Academy and Princeton -- setting forth his vision of America in 2001.

Meanwhile, Dole still has not made up his mind how to judge his twin jobs of Senate Majority Leader and presidential candidate -- partly, say Senatorial allies, because he does not trust Majority Whip Trent Lott, R-Miss., enough to delegate day-to-day management of the Senate to him.

Lott damaged chances of a close working relationship, other Senators say, when he decided to oppose Dole on the issue of U.S. troops in Bosnia and Dole was informed about it by reporters, not Lott himself.

Dole will, his allies say, delegate floor management of certain issues to others, as he did recently with Sen. Alan Simpson, R-Wyo., on immigration, but he's still worried about being out of town when Democrats call up a significant amendment.

In the absence of being able to travel the country freely, Dole needs to start making major speeches setting forth if not a "vision," a term he despises, then at least a "game plan."

It's a good sign that he's assembling an economic team to work up a major tax-cut proposal -- possibly for delivery this month at the Denver Economic Club.

Romania's orphans continue to languish

WASHINGTON -- The situation of Romania's orphans is one of the world's ongoing tragedies, exacerbated by the same kind of xenophobia that caused its citizens to submit to the dictatorship of Nicolae Ceausescu for decades.

There are now more than 100,000 institutionalized children in Romania, and their living conditions are often primitive. Though the numbers had fallen at one point, the current figures are close to the number discovered after Ceausescu was overthrown in 1989.

The government's unwillingness to change its orphanage policies caused one of the most infamous tragedies in modern history: Without Borders, to leave Romania last year.

And the government's refusal to permit massive adoption, based on stubborn insistence that Romanian children should stay "home," perpetuates the insanity Ceausescu began. Only 289 Romanian children were allowed to be adopted last year by American families -- a process that can sometimes take years and involve significant bribes to government officials. That tiny number makes no dent in the number of children being institutionalized because of the poverty of their parents or other reasons.

Our associate Dale Van Atta was one of the first to visit Romania's orphanages after Ceausescu's fall. He saw first-hand the tragedy wrought by an epidemic of HIV-infected infants. Incredibly, nearly 80 percent of all AIDS victims in Romania at the time were children under the age of 4. Most were infected by dirty needles used for as many as a dozen patients before being cleaned or discarded.

Various relief agencies have been successful in improving the lot of the infected, since these infants constituted a minor percentage of the more than 100,000 in orphanages. But the rest get little attention, no more than a few minutes each day. Doctors Without Borders, in its farewell report, estimated that at least one in 10 of these children will end their lives in psychiatric institutions -- if they live past childhood.

The tragedy is directly attributable to the folly of a dictator who outlawed abortion and birth control. In 1966, Ceausescu issued State Decree No. 770 which made abortion illegal for any woman under 40 who had not yet produced four children. He was intent on increasing Romania's population from 23 to 30 million by the year 2000. He wanted more workers to build his vision of a rich Romania.

The first year, Romania's "mother heroines," as Ceausescu called them, did double the birth rate. But then it leveled off, as parents who couldn't feed their own children sought illegal abortions to end unwanted pregnancies.

Ceausescu then instituted County Demographic Commissions, Communist Party officials whose sole job was to oversee monthly gynecological examinations of females of child-bearing age at their place of work. They were dubbed "the menstrual police" by some Romanians.

Despite these draconian examinations, the number of women injured or killed from illegal abortions soared. One Romanian source told us that in 1989 alone more than 800,000 women were hospitalized for abortion-related complications.

The number of infant deaths also soared. Despite the sobering statistics, a pervasive national pride still prevents the adoption of these tragic orphans into comfortable homes in the West.

Most were infected by dirty needles used for as many as a dozen patients before being cleaned or discarded.

Prosecutor brings Clinton's name into Whitewater cross-examination

By JAMES J. WOODS
Associated Press Writer

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. — Prosecutors threw James McDougal's own words at him as they tried to show that his story has changed over the years to protect President Clinton and the first lady.

Wednesday's cross-examination focusing on McDougal's relationship with his former Whitewater partners served as a prelude to the anticipated showing of Clinton's videotaped testimony by the defense.

Lawyers said they expected the tape to be played in court today, after McDougal wraps up a third day of testimony.

McDougal told FBI agents last June that Clinton, when he was governor of Arkansas, came to McDougal in the mid-1980s and said he and his wife needed money, prosecutor Ray John said.

John said James Blair, a longtime Clinton friend and the general counsel to Tyson Foods, quoted McDougal as making similar statements during the 1992 presidential campaign, when Whitewater first arose as an issue. Blair's notes about the conversation were obtained by the FBI.

On the stand, McDougal called

Blair a "notorious liar." As for McDougal's interview with the FBI last June, McDougal said the agents had jumbled up their account of the meeting.

McDougal now says he himself initiated the offer of money for Mrs. Clinton, suggesting to the governor that McDougal's savings and loan put her law firm on retainer.

Relying on meeting schedules from the governor's office, the Whitewater prosecutor pursued a grueling cross-examination, trying to elicit an explanation of three meetings McDougal had with the governor in late 1988 and early 1989.

McDougal said he couldn't remember the purpose of the first one, the second one might have had to do with the Whitewater real estate venture, and the third might have concerned McDougal's complaints about state health inspectors.

All three meetings occurred about the time McDougal, Gov. Jim Guy Tucker and Municipal Judge David Hale are accused of engaging in a series of fraudulent loans from McDougal's failing S&L and Hale's government-backed lending company, McDougal, his former wife Susan and Tucker have been on trial for 10 weeks. Tucker and McDougal are accused of conspiring to defraud McDougal's S&L and Hale's government-backed lending company of over $8.5 million in loans. Mrs. McDougal is charged in connection with a $800,000 loan that has never been repaid.

Hale, the prosecution's star witness in the trial, has said that Clinton benefited in the mid-1980s from the illegal $800,000 loan — an allegation the president has called a "bunch of bull."

Also Wednesday, U.S. District Judge George Howard Jr. rejected a media request for immediate access to Clinton's videotaped testimony.

ABC, CBS, NBC, Cable News Network, the Radio-Television News Directors Association and the Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press had asked Howard to release the tape as soon as it is played, arguing that no legal reason exists to keep the tape out of the public domain.

Howard said Wednesday it wasn't fair to the defense to force lawyers to deal with the media request at this point in the trial.

The White House wants the tape to remain under seal, fearing Clinton's political opponents would use it in campaign ads.

Money

Ann Harper, the administrative assistant at Huntington Bank in Madison, said she agrees with that assessment.

"Women are very much aware of the money in their household accounts," she said. "They are the ones who are most concerned with the details of the budget."

Nationally, compared with men, women worry more about finances, have a gloomier economic outlook and are more likely to think about money than sex, according to a Money magazine poll released today.

More than half of the women surveyed said they would have trouble paying an unexpected $1,000 bill, compared with one-third of men. Money said in its 11th annual "Americans and Their Money" poll, to be published in the magazine's June issue.

"Women were more downbeat than men on almost every issue relating to their own finances and to the economy," said Adam Richard, senior vice president of the Wilbur & Shulman polling firm, which conducted the survey.

Sixty percent of women said they think more about money than sex, compared with 34 percent of men. Nearly a third of women said they often fret over money, compared with only 17 percent of men. And 54 percent of women expect the United States to face a serious recession soon, compared with 16 percent of men.

Harper said she often speaks with women who are concerned for the national economic picture, but only in terms of how it relates to their personal finances.

"Women are preparing for those unexpected bills," she said. "They want to know what's coming and they want to be ready for it."

Women may worry more because they pay closer attention to microeconomics, said Lauren Lecher, a Totowa, N.J., financial planner.

"They're the ones carting the kids back and forth, running to the cleaners and doing the food shopping," she said. "Men tend to not be as involved in that. Men are bottom line people. Women are line-by-line people."

Douglas said that men never pay attention to details such as the price of staple items in the grocery store. As the price of those items increases, the household budget is tightened, a detail that men often ignore.

"The other day I went to the grocery store and bought four baseball steed tomatoes," Douglas said. "On the way to the checkout, I noticed those things were 88 cents apiece. I was shocked."

Kim Vasa, a sociology professor at the University of California at Berkeley, said women are more worried "because they're poorer."

"If you're already feeling insecure, you're also concerned about the future," she said. Women earn an average of 78 cents for each dollar earned by men, the magazine said. In the survey, only one in five women said they earn what they deserve, compared with nearly one in three men.

Despite the gender gap, men and women had a mixture of hope and fear for the economy.

Fifty-seven percent of all respondents said the American dream is still attainable, up from 53 percent last year. But nearly six out of 10 said the nation's economy is in a long term decline, a dramatic increase over the 43 percent who said so four years ago.

Asked to name their top job worry from nine choices, the largest group of respondents, 41 percent, picked "low rates." Wages and benefits rose by 2.9 percent for American workers in 1988, the smallest increase in 15 years.

On politics: 63 percent said they would vote for President Clinton, while 26 percent planned to pick Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, in a field evenly divided among Democrats, Republicans and independents.

64 percent said taxes will rise if Dole is elected president, while 36 percent said taxes would rise under a second term for Clinton.

62 percent said they would be better off financially with Clinton as president, while 39 percent said they would fare better under Dole.

The mail-in survey was conducted in February and March. It included responses from 1,918 household decision-makers and had a margin of error of 2.9 percent percentage points.

Toyota says it will build $400 million engine plant in W.Va.

By JAMES J. WOODS
Associated Press Writer

CHARLESTON, W.Va. — Toyota Motor Corp. plans to build a $400 million engine plant that will employ up to 300 people.

The plant announced today, to be built on a 230-acre site in Putnam County, will be able to produce 300,000 engines a year for Corollas when it goes into operation in late 1990, company president Hiroshi Okuda said.

Toyota, Japan's largest automaker, also has an engine plant in Georgetown, Ky., which produces 800,000 engines a year, and a plant in Canada that makes 50,000 a year. The addition of the West Virginia plant will allow the company to put North American-made engines in all North-American-made Corollas.

"Today's announcement of this new engine plant is yet another step in Toyota's localization of all aspects of the vehicle production process," Okuda said.

The announcement brings good news to a state that traditionally ranks high in unemployment. West Virginia's unemployment rate was 8.8 percent in March, the latest available.

The plant will be built at Buffalo, about 25 miles northwest of here.

Sen. Jay Rockefeller, D-W.Va., said he began talking to Toyota about investing in West Virginia 10 years ago, traveling to Japan and meeting with top company officials.

"With today's announcement, he said, the state "shows the world that we have arrived on the global economic stage."

The automaker qualifies for state tax credits and $1,000 in state-funded job training for every worker hired. The state also will spend $2 million on site, water, sewerage and road improvements.

country this week as part of a national policy conference between outstanding women leaders and the Republicans in Congress," Mica commented.

The summit, which concluded Wednesday, included two days of policy roundtables designed to develop creative solutions to the problems facing Congress, including problems in the workplace, the economy, family, society, government, and taxation.

"I am honored to be selected to learn more about issues facing our country and to give input regarding those here in our own community,"

Stairs said.

Stairs, a mother of four with two grandchildren, owns and operates Stairs Property Management & Realty in Sanford. She has been a past recipient of the City of Sanford's Warren E. "Pete" Knowles award and the Sanford Rotary Businesswoman of the Year award.

In addition to meeting in various sessions in Washington, Stairs was scheduled to be briefed on the emerging trends in business and society, and was to meet with members of Congress as well as join Speaker Newt Gingrich for breakfast at which Majority Leader Bob Dole was to be keynote speaker.

Critics say poor inspections are jeopardizing air safety

By LARNA BROWNE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — Poorly trained airplane inspectors and a mismanaged computer system are endangering the safety of air travel, government inspectors and cloaked whistleblowers told Congress.

Some of the criticism came from behind a screen, as two industry officials testified anonymously Tuesday, saying they feared retribution if they identified themselves.

Some also came from government officials, armed with published reports containing the same warnings.

"Mr. Jones," an aviation consultant who used to work for an airline, testified anonymously that most FAA inspectors were easily snowed by airline attempts to hide problems.

"If there's not a problem, they don't go looking for it," he said. "The airline wings could be falling off, but as long as the paperwork is all right, they don't care. So we make the paperwork look right."

"Mr. Smith," an FAA inspector, complained that part of the problem is inadequate training.

Trained to inspect small aircraft, he said he was assigned to larger planes. When he asked for additional training, he said, he was turned down.

"There has been a situation, in fact, where I didn't even know how to open the door," he said.

These are not isolated cases, said Sen. William S. Cohen, R-Maine, chairman of the Governmental Affairs subcommittee on oversight of government management. He said his staff interviewed more than 40 FAA inspectors and more than 100 other officials who made similar comments.

Cohen and others complained that the FAA determines which airplanes to inspect based on a computer system that is riddled with inaccuracies. Key terms have no uniform definitions, and inspectors do not consistently report violations.

"In one case, an FAA inspection was recorded for an aircraft that the carrier in question doesn't even use," he said.

"The result is that the FAA does not target its limited resources wisely, critics say. In 1990, one plane was inspected 300 times although no significant violations had been identified; meanwhile, 1,100 aircraft operators were never inspected at all, said Lawrence H. Weintrob, a deputy assistant inspector general for the Transportation Department.

The FAA needs to give inspectors specific guidelines for what to review, he said.

"Without minimum standards, we have little confidence that inspections are more than cursory reviews," Weintrob said. "At the very extreme, we observed inspections that consisted of nothing more than a walk around the aircraft looking for leaking fluids."

FAA Administrator David R. Hinson said his agency has increased the number of inspectors. He said the computer system has some problems, and officials are working to correct them. And he said the FAA is redefining what constitutes "essential training" and plans to make more available.

Meanwhile, across town, the National Transportation Safety Board turned its attention to the hazards of travel by rail.

Chairman Jim Hall recalled the deadly crash Feb. 16 in nearby Silver Spring, Md., where 11 passengers unable to escape from the blazing wreckage died.

"Having rail cars where people can't get out and fireman can't get in is unacceptable," he said. "It's just common sense, if you're going to put 100 people in a vehicle you need to have a way for them to get out in an emergency."

Federal Railroad Administration spokesman David Balger said his agency is working on new safety rules.

connected with the department's K-9 training.

Since his retirement from active duty in 1982, he has been kept by his original police department partner Officer Ned Golden.

"We got Yoscha, a German shepherd, directly from Germany back in 1968," Golden said. "Then, after going through official K-9 schooling and training, he joined the Sanford police department in early 1967, and spent nearly six years on the street with us."

In addition to participating in several hundred apprehensions and arrests during his 10 years on the force, Yoscha was most prominently known for his trophies and awards won during K-9 competition. He was a consistent winner in local competition, and made his mark in both regional and national competition.

In the nationals, one of the top hopes of all police departments and trainers is to have their dogs listed in the top 20 across the entire nation. Yoscha came in 11th in 1980, second in 1981, and even though his health began failing in 1982, came in fourth overall, as well as taking the first place in criminal apprehension competition.

"One of the most prestigious awards in the USPCA (United States Police Canine Association)," said Officer Golden, "is the Pat Cahill Award. It's for the highest achievement in performance and aggression as well as several other factors. Yoscha took that in 1981 in the national competition."

Golden said Yoscha's falling health was noticed in 1988, and the dog was officially retired to Golden's care, later that same year.

Since that time, Yoscha has been replaced on the SPD K-9 force, and other dogs have made their mark in K-9 service to the city. But for Officer Ned Golden, the winner of many trophies and much recognition has passed, but of even more significance, he has lost a good, true and loyal friend.

Clinton ready for gas tax rollback

WASHINGTON — President Clinton is ready to go along with a gasoline tax rollback, but Democratic and Republican lawmakers still can't agree on how to make it happen. Some economists doubt the savings will be passed along to motorists anyway.

However, with soaring pump prices generating election-year heat, a key House committee today was ready to vote on temporarily repealing a 4.5-cent gasoline surcharge that was imposed three years ago as part of a Clinton deficit-reduction package.

In the Senate, the issue continued to be bogged down in squabbling over whether the tax should be linked to a proposal increasing the federal minimum wage.

On Wednesday, Clinton said he would agree to the temporary tax repeal, but would sign the bill only if he also got from Congress separate legislation increasing the $4.25 minimum wage.

Budget balancing plan

WASHINGTON — House and Senate Republicans bracing for an election-year fiscal battle with President Clinton say their new budget-balancing plans, not his, do an honest job of closing federal deficits and revamping costly programs.

But as they've done since last year, Clinton and fellow Democrats are cutting GOP plans as extremist and warning Republicans not to savage programs that polls show are beloved by the voters.

"While there are some signs of movement away from the extreme positions they took last year, they are once again calling for unacceptable cuts in Medicare and Medicaid, education and the environment, as well as increased taxes on working families," White House Chief of Staff Leon Panetta said Wednesday.

Secular party concedes

NEW DELHI, India — The secular party that led India to independence and held it together for decades conceded today that it has lost a parliamentary election — and probably the government — to Hindu nationalists.

The biggest winner in three days of balloting was the Bharatiya Janata Party, which in 1982 helped organize a rally that touched off deadly Hindu-Muslim riots.

But incomplete election returns and potential problems the party could have finding partners for an alliance left it unclear who would govern this nation of 920 million people, the world's most populous democracy.

"We accept defeat. There is no denial of this fact that people have rejected us," said Foreign Minister Pranab Mukherjee, the campaign manager for the governing Congress Party, which has dominated Indian politics since independence in 1947.

Air pollution
Environmental group: Tougher standards for particles in air

By N. JOSEPH HENRY
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — Tougher standards are needed for controlling dust, soot and microscopic particles in air because the pollution causes tens of thousands of premature deaths annually, an environmental group says.

The Natural Resources Defense Council, in a study on air pollution in 239 cities, said the particles — many smaller than one-seventh of the thickness of a human hair — are causing an estimated 64,000 premature heart and lung-related deaths each year.

"Clearly current health standards are not protecting thousands of people from the deadly consequences of particulate air pollution," said Deborah Shuman Shprentz of the NRDC. The Environmental Protection Agency is reviewing tougher requirements for particulate air pollution. Such pollution includes smoke, soot, dust and tiny aerosol particles as well as emissions from diesel fuel, gasoline combustion and coal-fired plants.

"A growing body of evidence now suggests that particulate matter (in air) poses a serious threat to public health in many American cities," agreed EPA Administrator Carol Browner. She called the NRDC findings "a welcomed study" that will help the agency develop new health standards for such pollution.

The EPA requirements for particulates in air are based on standards dating back to 1967 and do not cover the smallest particles — those less than 10 microns in diameter. Health experts say these extremely small particles are even more dangerous than the coarser variety because they are not normally caught by human defense mechanisms and can lodge deep in lung tissue.

"The single most important public health decision facing EPA this year is whether to establish new air quality standards for fine particles," said Ms. Shprentz, the study's author.

She said the NRDC analysis used studies by the Harvard Medical School and the American Cancer Society on the long-term effect of ambient air pollution on human health and applied the findings to local pollution data in the 239 metropolitan areas.

The Harvard study followed the health of more than 16,000 people in six small cities for a period of 14 to 16 years. The 1983 American Cancer Society study examined the effect of air pollution on premature death involving more than 200,000 people in 151 cities.

The NRDC study proposed that as many as 64,000 premature deaths from cardiovascular disease "may be attributed to particulate air pollution each year," or about 0.8 percent of the nearly 1 million such deaths annually. Such pollution also has been linked to increased childhood asthma cases and other health problems for the elderly.

"People face a risk of premature death due to exposure to particulate air pollution in almost every U.S. metropolitan area," said the study. It said in many cases the premature deaths occur even though the cities meet current federal standards for particulates.

According to the NRDC analysis, as many as 37,000 lives could be prolonged if the EPA adopts tougher standards that cut particulate pollution in urban air, especially the extremely fine particles not now regulated.

"Lives are not being shortened by days or weeks, but by one or two years in the most polluted areas" because of particulate pollution in the air, said the study report.

SANFORD — Now you don't see that every day. Fans at Chase Park were treated to a couple of odd happenings and two great games in the Sanford Recreation Department Men's Wednesday Night Spring Slowpitch Softball League. Manny Silvia very nearly tossed a perfect game, allowing only a walk to Brad Brunley in the second inning, settling for a no-hitter and the Hopkins Meats offense touched Crazy Wings pitchers for 20 hits as the undefeated league leaders posted a 20-0, two-plus inning victory. The game was stopped by the seldom-used 20-run rule. In the second game, Polar Bear Wednesday night champ Fitzgerald's scored seven runs in the fifth inning to erase a 6-4 deficit and held off a furious comeback effort by previously undefeated Wells Contracting in winning their first game of the season 11-10. Fitzgerald's tried to do the same thing in the nightcap, using a pair of four run innings to take an 11-3 lead in the top of the sixth inning and then trying to withstand a Monroe Harbour comeback effort. Monroe Harbour scored three runs in the bottom of the sixth to cut the margin to 11-6 and then scored four runs in the seventh inning to make the score 11-10 with two out and a runner on first base. Myriel Reid scored all the way from first base on a single by Greg Zayas to tie the game at 11-11, but it looked like the game was headed to extra innings when the next batter popped up. The ball was dropped in short right-center field, however, keeping the inning alive and Ben Green lopped single over the first baseman's head to score Zayas with the game winning run, giving Monroe Harbour a 12-11 triumph. FAST TRIP

Looking out on the New Smyrna Speedway from inside a race car is a little different than watching speedway action from the bleachers. On Friday, Florida Highway Patrolman Jim Braze, who is assigned to Seminole County, treated Herald photojournalist Roger Harnack to several laps on the half-mile speedway to get a real taste of racing. At more than 5,000 rpm, Braze had the car up to speeds nearing 120 mph. Unfortunately for Braze, Friday's speedway tours were the only laps he ran this weekend because his Outlaw Motorsports Monte Carlo was undergoing upgrades. Braze's chassis was built in Samsula and his engine in Sanford. He expects to be back racing in a couple of weeks in the Hooters Cup series.

Teach students financial skills

As the weather turns warmer and the summer months get closer, everybody knows what's on the mind of practically every student in the country: summer vacation.

Many students are also looking forward to an opportunity to get a part-time job and save some money for down the road. Teenagers, especially those still in high school, are heading toward a time in their lives when a healthy savings account will be a great benefit, especially if they are planning to attend college because they may need to buy a car, or may not want a job to conflict with their studies.

For younger kids, who aren't old enough to legally get a job, this lesson is still an option. After all, even a 10-year old has a desire for money, whether it's for pocket money or an actual purchase. Combine that with the fact that every household has chores that need to be done, and you have a perfect opportunity to teach some valuable lessons.

BARBARA NORTON

Personal finance

In fact, most parents give their kids an allowance. By attaching some responsibilities to the money they receive, kids learn the connection between the work they do and the rewards and privileges they receive.

The most important aspect of this lesson is accountability. Whether the money comes from a part-time job, household chores, or an allowance, kids tend to appreciate it more if they have to budget it. That means that you, as a parent, can't bail them out if they overspend. If your child asks up consistently looks two days before pay day or allowance day, and you give them an advance, not only are you missing out on the financial responsibility lesson, you're teaching them that someone will always be there as a safety net every time they fail. And that negative lesson stretches much further than just money.

Summer jobs are also a great way to teach your kids that the work they do is something they can take personal pride in. However, it isn't an automatic benefit that results simply from their employment—it's up to you to drive that point home by asking questions and being genuinely interested when they want to talk about work.

Also, remember that the most powerful instructional tool a parent has is the example they set. If you want your son or daughter to have pride in their work as an adult, you need to communicate that you have pride in your work now. If they only see you complaining about your employer and your job, they'll learn that work is a burden to be resented and even avoided.

Typically, children will respond favorably to support from their parents, and a great way to show that support, as your child begins their summer job, is to match their savings at 50 cents on the dollar. Make an agreement with them that, at the end of the summer, whatever they have in the bank, you'll add 50 percent to the total. In that way, you'll be giving them a bonus that's a constant and built into the plan from the start. The bonus you'll see in your child's bank account every penny.

Tell friend he needs a new hairpiece

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I have some very dear friends. I'll call them John and Mary. We are all approaching our 60th birthdays and have taken many trips together and, needless to say, we are very close.

Here's the problem: John wears the worst hairpiece imaginable. It is not styled, and the color no longer matches his own hair, which crops out at the nape of his neck and stubs. (Sometimes it is on crutches.)

When we are out in public, heads turn and strangers whisper and snicker. We feel that someone should tell John, but how to approach the subject is the problem. Telling his wife is out of the question. In all the years of their marriage, she has never seen him without his hairpiece. (He lost his hair as a young man and started wearing a toupee in his 50s.)

ADVICE

ANIBAL VAN BUREN

We think if he's going to wear a hairpiece, it should be styled properly, or perhaps he should get out of better quality. He can easily afford it. Once he admitted that he wished he had never started wearing a hairpiece — and now he doesn't know how to stop.

Abby, have you any suggestions on how to tackle this delicate subject?

HAIR-SPLITTING

DEAR HAIR-SPLITTING: A true friend would discreetly tell John that he desperately needs a new, correctly styled hairpiece. Tell him without delay. You would be doing him an enormous favor.

DEAR ABBY: Please address this annoying problem in your column.

Many TV programs — and this includes documentaries and nature series — have background music so loud it drowns out the dialogue. We feel that background music should be just that — background: it should enhance, not overpower.

I hope you think this is important enough to address in your column.

MR. AND MRS. ELLINGTON MILLS, HOT SPRINGS, ARK.

DEAR MR. AND MRS. MILLS: I agree. I've become an expert on reader, having watched "N.Y.P.D. Blue" on ABC since its beginning. What a terrific series — but why does the background have to be so loud?

DEAR ABBY: My problem is this: As in my company, salespeople try to sell on different individuals in our office. Usually they will have taken items such as newspapers, pens, etc., to give to the person they deal with on a regular basis.

Our receptionist apparently felt she should have first dibs on those pens and newspapers and ends up for them. This obviously puts the salesperson in an awkward position in which he or she must first give those items to get back the "pen" at the door.

We have discussed this among ourselves and are at a loss for a solution. Our receptionist is the type who takes everything said to her personally and feels that everyone is out to get her. As her immediate supervisor, it would fall on me to speak with her regarding this matter. I would appreciate your thoughts on this.

J.L. IN NASHVILLE

DEAR J.L.: By all means, speak to the receptionist, and since no words in telling her that the tables give any credit for the individual on whom the salesperson is calling, unless they are specifically directed to her.

As her supervisor, it is your job to control her behavior even though it may be unpleasant to do so.

DEAR ABBY: I'm a happily married mother with two great little boys and a job that takes more of me than I'd like. I manage to balance things well, except for one straw that's about to break my back: my mother.

Mother is emotionally dependent on everyone around her. She expects all her pleasure and recreation to come from others. She constantly complains because my father has ended with friends several mornings a week. Frankly, I don't blame him. I can barely stand to be in her presence. She puts me down constantly, criticizing how late I serve my children dinner (I walk in the door at 6:30 and we eat an hour later than 6:30), how they "seem to get sick more often than most kids," and how her friends' children take their mothers through to play, to visit Christmas, etc.

Abby, I've had it! I'm an tired and stressed when I get home at night that calling her, even for five minutes, is more than I can face. I never let myself to talk to her but I'm desperate because I cannot be a mother of the 70s. I'm a mother of the 50s — keeping a large home, working full time, serving as chauffeur to my sons, and trying to nurture a successful marriage.

Our relationship is almost as dysfunctional and beyond hope as it can be, and I don't have the energy to repair 25 years of resentment.

I hate to write her off, Abby. How can I handle my mother?

THIRD OF THREE, INDEPENDENCE, MO.

DEAR THREE: Before you hurt the relationship with your mother, realize that there are some things that you can do to change the way she relates with her. Your mistake is taking her criticism to heart and getting defensive. Realize that finding fault in her way of getting attention and making conversation. Stop feeling guilty because you cannot call her every day.

The next time she criticizes, try smiling and agreeing with her. "You're right, Mom. I'm a terrible mother." "Yes, Mom. With the schedule I have to keep, I'm not the attentive daughter you had hoped for." If you agree with her, she can no longer protest the discussion. The subject will be closed, and you can go on to something else.

DEAR ABBY: When we entertain at home and a guest brings a bottle of wine as a gift, my husband thanks the guest, puts the wine in our wine closet and serves our own wine at dinner.

He believes the selection of the wine is part of the dinner preparation. I feel the courteous thing to do would be to serve the guest's wine with our dinner.

What do you think?

FURNACE IN ANNVILLE

DEAR FURNACE: Your husband is correct. You had to not obligated to serve the wine brought by a guest. It's perfectly proper to put it away to serve at some future occasion.
