$250,000 Center May

A $250,000 recreation center which would be the scene of acquatic shows and other spectacles may be built on Lake Monroe in the vicinity of the bandshell and the new boat basin. Through the efforts of the Chamber of Commerce, the Sanford site has claimed the attention of Orlando businessmen W. R. Kemp, operator of Orlando's Coliseum, and Richard Sodero, who have been secking a desirable location for the proposed acquacde and amphitheater.

Many other areas have made strong bids for the open-air center which would undoubtedly be one of the top tourist attractions in the state. "Roughly 100 offers of sites" have been received by Kemp and Sodero, it was revealed. Many of the sites would be provided at no cost.

The structure would be modeled to a large degree after a similar attraction at Jones Beach, Long, Island, which has grown in popularity each year.

Drawings are now being made of the proposed center. but everything is still pretty much in the "exploratory" stage it was pointed out.

Chamber of Commerce officials, at a meeting held in Orlando early this week, emphasized the many desirable advantages of the lakefront and the Orlando businessmen expressed favorable interest in a site here. Attending the meeting were interested Sanford businessmen and officials.

The amphitheater would seat approximately 5.000 persons, who would be treated to top-notch water shows and other high quality entertainment, it was emphasized. Kemp's Coliscom is pretty much a "miniature" of the proposed structure.

A few problems, such as parking space, still confront the project here, but these are expected to be ironed out in time.

An Age Unknown

This may be the Atomic Age for some, but for others it is even more the Oil Age. Industrial need and search for oil has transformed living conditions in many areas of the globe which long have been regarded as waste lands. This is true of Northwestern Canada and of the Arabian desert. Now there are signs that oil may be found in the swamps and jungles of the Niger River Delta. This would be the first major discovery of oil anywhere in Africa south of Egypt.

At the present Nigeria is an agricultural. country. Should oil in any quantity attract large industrial interests, the economy of Nigeria would be radically changed. There is speculation as to what this would mean to the Nigerian people. Some observers feel that the future of a Nigeria with oil will include movements toward a national inde-

The Federation of American Scientists rezards as a serious oversight the fact that billions of dollars are being spent on weapons while very little has been spent on dispersal of Industry. The Federation claims close knots of vital research plants make too good a target. An atomic or hydrogen attack might wipe out the plants and dangerously cripple the production of the nation. Dispersal, say the scientists, is a necessary defense measure and one that presents expectation of being reasonably effective.

to avoid steps that might lead to public panic. But the moment danger threatens is a short moment. It is not the moment to think of massive defense. Public apprehension and anxiety which might come as a reaction to plans for protection against an unwanted, unlooked-for war must be faced today to prevent the hopeless panic of negleet should the petion ever be seriously threatened.

HAVE you noticed—we're having June again? And June is graduation time. I, too, once graduated, paying my backers $14.80 for a twodollar ticket at the local handbooks. The odds had been much longer against me, until Uncle-Robroy was elected to the school board that I can never forget the merry, mad, social whirl of my pre-graduation days. The parties -such parties-playing "Spin the Plate" night after night; it seemed then that we might go on spinning plates forever, with no thought of the future. The Junior-Senior Banquet, with the Domestic Science Department transformed into a veritable Delmonico's, though incomparably better. (Who has ever dined at Delmonico's when every person present in any capacity, in dining-hall or kitchen, was firstname known to him?) Unknown foods-"Arroz con Pollo," which turned out to be rooster and rice; demitasse-a "first" for most of us, and likewise a "last." The charming lady teachers and lovely girl classmates dazzling in gowns which were the epitome of fashion, accented by the perfect background of the gentlemen's dark clothing. Witty toasts drunk in grape juice punch-my own hastily conceived and haltingly spoken tribute to the Welch Company, which was laid to rest amid the slategray silence which it richly deserved.

And there was Class Night, with the valedictory address delivered by an attractive selfpossessed young lady. (I supposed, for many years, that "valedictorian" meant "best girl student"). The Class History was declaimed by a young man of argumentative inclination who possessed the most aggressive vocal equipment which has ever assaulted these cars, and for whom we all predicted a brilliant career at the bar. Sadly, that career was terminated by a weary bartender. With the reader's permission, we will pass over the Class Personalities without comment, in order to get to the Class Will, which I have never been able to force myself to re-read, nor can I even recall it without blushing, shuddering, and leaping from my chair.

The Class Play was a typical presentation of a British classic titled "Green Stockings." The alleged plot of this opus hinged upon an improbable custom among certain classes of British people, which required that an older unmarried daughter, once her young sister has succeeded in bagging any sort of husband, must wear green stockings. The dramatic possibilities which this vehicle offered were not abundant, and we scored a clean miss on each of them. The local weekly, which was harboring a dramatic critic of hitherto undisclosed virtuosity, said "-the entire performance was of the quality which we had confidently expected."

Here we bow to the requirement that any remarks about graduation must end with a sage and serious note. I mak only that you give to those who follow you, a better world than we have given you. I don't see how you can

Every now and then we are criticized for publishing too many bathing beauties-but this one we couldn't resist. In July they plan to select "Miss Universe" at Long Beach, Calif., (pardon us) and, just to show what the contestants look like, here are four entries from last year. Second from left is Rosemary Talucci of Miami Beach who scored high and just missed the his title. This year's contestant for the Miss Universe title wil this week at Miami Beach in the annual Florida Beauty-Talent Pageant-in fact they are going to pick two Florida beauties to represent us at the Miss Universe contest.

That's how welcome publicity came to Holly Pine, a young actress of Jacksonville. Instead of sulogizing her thespian talenta, the newspapers of Johannesburg played her up as a girl whose ultra blonde complexion even the South African sun could not tan. The African press secribed it to the fact that she was a native of Florida, therefore not susceptible to the sun's devastating

Miss Fine joined a theatrical troupe which traveled the world over-her experiences diversified, some thrilling, others dangerous. She was in China when the Japanese invaded the country. She spent several weeks studying wild animal life in Africa, during which period she earned the sobriquet of "the girl who wouldn't ten."

Holly Fine's second claim to fame came when it was revealed that the Jacksonville actress made two trips around the world in search of romance, only to find it in the boy who lived next door to the Fine home on Buffale Avenue. "I went a long way to find what I wanted," she said, "and I am going to be just plain Mrs. Hinteling from new on." The levely ex-actrum did just that, set-ted down as the happy wife of a Buffale

FLORIDA'S TUNG

Rom one tree to more than 5,000,000 pounds of tung oil, or a million dollar business in less than half a century. That is the story in brief, of the tung oil industry in Florida.

The tung free is indigenous to China and it was there that the tung industry was originated. But Florida is the laboratory in which it was developed in this country. Among the various economic plants introduced into Florida in recent years, probably none has attracted more attention than the tung tree, so named because of its heart-shaped leaves, the word "tung" in the Chinese language meaning "heart."

The first tung grove and the first tung mill in this country were here and from Florida was shipped the first commercial assignment of this poisonous, but valuable, oil.

Cultivating the tung tree in America was first attempted in 1902, when Consul Gen. L. S. Wilcox of Hankow, China, sent seeds to inviduals in California. The venture failed.

Then in 1904 another small quantity of seeds was received in Washington, from whence the U. S. Department of Agriculture distributed them to experimenters in warmer parts of the country.

The greatest interest in these first plantings of tung trees was manifested in Florida. William H. Raynes of Tallahassee obtained permission to plant five trees which had been sent to the superintendent of a cemetery there, Only one survived as a monument to this pioneering work, but from that one has grown this country's tung industry.

Five years later, Mr. Raynes sent to Washington the first bushel of tung oil fruits to be produced in America. Within two more years, a bushel of nuts from the original tree was sent to the Paint Manufacturers' Association at Gillsboro, N. J. From them, two and two-tenths gallons of tung oil was extracted—the first produced on the American continent.

At least one grove came from Mr. Raynes' tree—that planted by Dr. Tennant Ronalds, at Tallahassee, in 1912. From the Raynes tree also, the Bureau of Plant Industry grew seedlings and distributed them to individuals. Ten were planted by the Florida Agricultural Experiment Station at Gainesville.

The first tung oil mill in the United States—in fact, the first in the world—was constructed by the Alachua Tung Oil Company, in 1929.

In 1932, the first commercial crop of tung nuts in the United States-two tank cars, or 60,000 pounds-was obtained from Florida groves.

From 301,000 tung trees planted in Florida in 1930, the crop had grown to 2,291,000 by 1945

In 1944, the yield in this country was 30, 400 tons of fruit, 7,000 tons of which was Florida grown.

Today, there are approximately 34,700 acres of commercial tung trees in the state. The 1950 census showed a total of 3,187,934 of all ages located on 800 Florida farms. It has been ascertained that one ton of fruit averages 17.5 per cent oil, of which 86 per cent is normally recovered, resulting in 300 pounds of salable oil

There are 16 processing mills in the tung belt, comprising Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi and Texas and of them, six are situated in Florida: at Capps, Maranna, Gainesville, Jumpy Run, Lloyd and Compass Lake.

Outstanding among these mills is that of Tung Oil Products, Inc., formerly at Brooker, but now at Gainesville, where it occupies four acres of land. Organized in 1947, the company offered four varnishes to the trade in the immediate vicipity of Florida the following year —4,000 gallons in quantity. Last year the firm sold more than 100,000 gallons of varnish, using 85 per cent of the tung oil produced from its thousands of acres of tung trees.

In the year 1953-54, production in the entire tung oil belt was 144,900 tons of air dried nuts, as against 132,100 tons the previous year. The 10-year average is 42,887 tons.

Because it has such important drying qualities, tung oil is utilized extensively in industry in this country, just as it is in China. Perhaps the most important of its uses is in the manufacture of paint and varnishes, which consumes approximately 80 per cent of the total amount.

It goes also into the manufacture of oil cloth, linoleum, printers' ink; as a water-proofing agent in materials for masonry, cloth shoes, clothing; to produce a hardness which provides the grip on automobile brake linings; and as a protective coating on the inside of food cans, among its many uses.

The electrical industry uses it extensively is making insulating compounds for cables, dynamos and motors.

During the recent hostilities, the entire production of tung oil in the United States was taken over by the government to be used in the war effort. Cartridges and shell cases were protected with it and it served, also, in the field of aeronautics.

All this from the farm product originating in Chins, rediscovered and developed from one tree into a million dollar business in Florida,

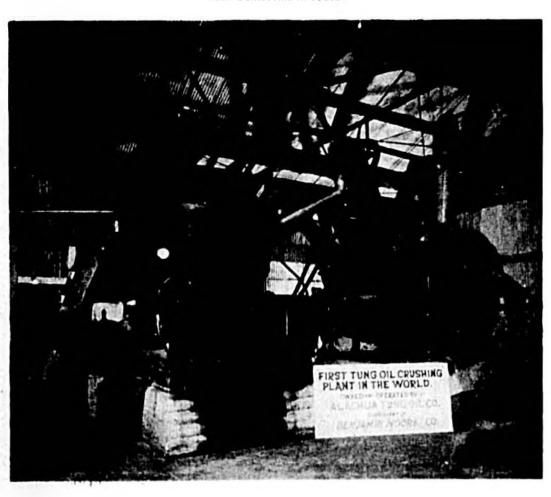

A WORKMAN at the Gainesville plant of Tung Oil Products Company illustrates one of the processes in making paints and varnish from Florida tung oil.

NOT ONLY valuable to Florida's economy but tung tree groves lend beauty to the landscape. Tung nuts (inset) cover the ground, ready for gathering and crushing into the oil that goes into the nation's finest paints. Below is the world's first tung crushing plant, built near Gainesville in 1929.

The present 6,000 industrial plants include a 41 per cent increase since 1950. While tourism was formerly the largest industry in Florida, it has taken second place to manufacturing in gross volume. Pinancial figures for the former stood at $1,100,000,000 last year, and the latter grossed $1,200,000,000. From its position as 18th largest industrial state at the end of 1954, Florida promises to become ninth within the next five years. Natural Resources Help

The state's vast wealth of natural reaources is responsible to a great extent for its industrial expansion — natural resources such as wood, phosphate, cit-rus, seafood and equable climate.

From Florida's earliest days, its forest resources have been one of the vital links in the state's economy. The industry annually produces nearly $300,000,000 worth of manufactured products and employs approximately 30,000 people.

The accompanying article on Florida's current economic stature and our state's bright business outlook was prepared in part from the daily, weekly and monthly reports of the Florida State Chamber of Commerce. We feel that the employees and executives of the State Chamber who are responsible for gathering and disseminating the information which has been brought to focus in this article deserve the highest praise for a comprehensive job well done.-The Editor.

FLORIDA'S M

By CLAUDE JENKINS

ONE of Florida's real estate gems has recently been discovered that heretofore has been lying unrecognized in the panhandle portion of the state, while others of this fabulous peninsula have been basking in appreciated glory.

This virgin tourist territory named "The Miracle Strip" by this writer less than two years ago, was once the private shore ren-dezvous of the colorful pirate, Billy Bowlegs, whose grave can be seen at Fort Walton Beach. "The Strip," as it is more commonly referred to, is that section of Northwest Florida's Gulf Coast which stretches like a glittering necklace between the thriving cities of Pensacola and Panama City. The Strip lay dormant until U. S. Highway 98 was opened in the early 30's.

Since then, it has steadily gained recognition as an outstand. ing tourist attraction, and recognition is bringing about a polishing job that will soon enable this "Pearl of the Panhandle" to occupy a prominent spot in the state's sparkling crown.

The Miracle Strip is growing at both ends and in the middle. Big business such as Chemstrand and Newport Industries, coupled with the vast Naval training program, has changed the financial and population picture of Pensacola, The Strip's gateway to the West.

At Fort Walton Beach, half-way between Pensacola and Panama City, the development of this section of the state has hit the "boom" status. The official announcement by military authority that Eglin Air Force Base was to be a permanent installation, acted as a development "afterburner" in getting progress on the move. Too, the growing popularity of Fort Walton Beach and of her sister communities known as "Northwest Florida's Playground Area," has injected fuel to its fires of growth.

A shining example of what outsiders think of the Playground Area along the Strip as a future Florida attraction, is best shown in a large concrete building wrapped around a 500,000 gallon steel tank, located on Santa Rosa Island, just outside the city limits of Fort Walton Beach.

The Gulfarium, or "Living Sea," was ramrodded by two young marine biolo-gists who came up from Miami. This new tourist lure will operate along lines adopted by the famed Marine Studios, which give the public a peek at the various forms of sea life usually kept hidden undersea.

Five miles east of Fort Walton Beach is the fishing village of Destin and East Pass, where the waters of the Gulf of Mexico and Choctawhatchee Bay merge to form an ever-changing panorama of technicolored wonder.

The beauty here is hard on a writer! Its magnificence presents a problem for even the most adept adjective employer. It has to be seen to be appreciated. Gulf front property has reached the comparatively astounding price of $60 a front foot, and the end is nowhere in sight! Every year marks the debut of one or more new motels in this particular area. Still, accommodations are inadequate at the height of the summer season.

Caresaing the shore between Pensacola and Destin is Santa Rosa Island, a narrow strip of sand dunes which, from the air, resembles a floating white ribbon. The intra-coastal canal passes through the sound created by the island, which has been deeded by the state to the three Panama City marks the eastern end of this "New Frontier," as Scripps-Howard columnist, Bish Thompson, recently dubbed it. At no place else on the American continent, and few places outside it, can there be seen a more beautiful example of nature's handiwork than the snow white sands and sapphire blue waters along this 100 miles of Florida Gulf Coast, Marine geologists have stated that this unprecedented beauty was created by natural forces working off shore.

Undersea activity has channelled muddy currents to flow elsewhere, thus leaving the beaches a miracle of unstained sand and clear, blue water.

These basic parts were retained by the present Florida Constitution, which was adopted in 1885. Before this, however, Florida had two other seals, one of which suggests an artist's delight.

Before Florida was admitted to the union in 1845 it was a United States Territory. At this time a seal quite similar to the Great Seal of the United States was used. It was a circle two inches in diameter consisting of an American eagle with outapread wings resting on a bed of clouds with his right talon clutching three arrows and his left an olive branch. Above the eagle was a semi-circle of 13 stars and around the outer circle was the legend: "The Territory of Florida." This was used for more than a year after Florida's admission to the union.

The Constitution of 1838, under which Florida was admitted as a state, provided for a seal which would "be kept by the Governor, and used by him officially, with such device as the Governor first elected may direct." William D. Moseley, Florida's first governor, ordered a new seal made, and in December, 1846, the first Great Seal of the State of Plorida was delivered.

HISTORIC GAMBLE MANSION

By BOB HANSCOM

In the little town of Ellenton, located on the northern banks of the Manatee River, five miles east of Palmetto on Highway 301. one will find historic Gamble Mansion, now the Judah P. Benjamin Built sometime between 1843 and 1850, it is a two-story structure, 93 feet by 43 feet in dimensions, with walls nearly two feet thick. Eighteen large pillars, 18 inches in diameter and 25 feet high, support the roof, forming upper and lower verandas which extend across the front and two sides. In the rear is a double, detached kitchen, connected with the main building by a covered passageway. The overseer's house, slave quarters, and other houses were at some distance from the Mansion.

The house was built by Maj. Robert Gamble, of brick manufactured on the grounds from lime, shell and sand with perhaps a mixture of sugar or cane juice as a hardening agent. The lime was also made locally by burning, crushing and sifting oyster shells. The same substances were used to make the "tabby" with which the exterior of the building is plastered.

Unable to weather the panic of 1857, the mansion was sold in 1858 to John Calvin Cofield and Robert McGeorge Davis, Louisiana sugar planters, for $190,000. The new owners, after enlarging the refinery, leased the plantation to W. A. Griffin.

When Griffin joined the Confederate Army in 1862, Capt. Archibald McNeill and his family moved into the mansion. Mcmade it into sugar and stored it away for the use of the Confed-

On Aug. 3, 1864, a Union raiding party came up the Manatee River in a small schooner and destroyed the sugar refinery and engine room. The mansion was looted of all food.

Two months later, two men drove up to the mansion in a buggy and asked for lodging. One was Maj. John T. Lesley of Tampa, well known in the Manatee section.

The other, a short, rotund gentleman, clad in a faded green broadcloth coat with long cape was introduced as "Mr. Howard." Captain and Mrs. McNeill's children and guests learned after his departure that "Mr. Howard" was Judah P. Benjamin, Secretary of State of the Confederate States of America.

Duning his stay at the mansion the Federals made a surprise raid. Benjamin and McNeill barely had time to escape through the kitchen into a thicket of scrub palmetto. At one time the searchers were within arm's length of the two men.

After this experience, Benjamin moved to the more secluded home of Capt. Frederick Tresca, grandfather of Palmetto's present mayor, Warren Tresca. Captain Tresca lived about two and a half miles south of the village of Manatee.

Captain Tresca secured a sloop to take Benjamin out of the country. He was taken overland to Sarasota. The hazardous journey began June 23. After two narrow escapes from Federal ships and several changes of vessels, Benjamin arrived at Namau in the Hahamas, an English possession, then as now. He proceeded to England, where he embarked on a second career as a leading member of the English bar.

In 1926, the Judah P. Benjamin Chapter of the United Daughters of the Confederacy, purchased the mansion and deeded it to the State of Florida, which agreed to restore it and preserve it as a monument. On July 1, 1949, it was placed under the jurisdiction of the Florida Board of Parks and Historic Memorials, a state HISTORIC JUDAH P. Benjamin Memorial, better known as Gamble Manslon, is a memorial to a way of life that was swept away by the War Between the States. Because of its connection with a dramatic incident during the last days of that war, the mansion has become an historic site. It was first opened to the public in 1931.

THE CONFEDERATE Secretary of State slept here while fleeing from Federal troops, Each of the bedrooms in Gamble Mansion had a separate outside entrance and porch.

Many of us have been here for over 21 years, and the progress made in our lifetimes has been amazing indeed, but D. Harold Stimpson reminds us that prior years have been but primary years-that real progrese, dramatic and amazing progress, lies in the years ahead.

Stimpson, who this year took office as the 30th president of the Florida Association of Realtors, points out that "there is only one Florida!" "An indication of our increasing prosperity here in Florida is the number of people who, in improved circumstances, are disposing of older homes and acquiring more modern and attractive ones," he says, "and there is a definite trend investment-wise, too, with more and more people buying well-selected land to be held for the inevitable appreciation in value."

"With increased industrial development, and with our agricultural program continually expanding," says Realtor Stimpson, "the remaining millions of idle Florida acres are already commencing to dwindle - and they are going far faster than any of us realize. ANCIENT MISSIONS

Of the Mission of Atacuimi, whose ruins are now included in a state monument just west of New Smyrna, this writer finds nothing in the histories available except that it was built by Francisco Monks in

One of the most important missions in the western part of the colony was San Luis de Talimali, which was about two miles west of the present site of Tallahassee. This seems to have been quite a settlement, with a deputy governor in residence, in a "Country House defended by pieces of ordnance and a garrison of infantry."

San Luis was a mission center, with at least five smaller Missions in the immediate region, perhaps for the protection of the larger place which had a population of 1400.

San Luis was destroyed by the priests and abandoned in 1704. Nine of the missions in this Apalachee District had been attacked and many wrecked. The inhabitants were killed or carried off to slavery by Governor James Moore of South Carolina and Creek Indians under his command. Seven other missions between these and the St. Johns River met a similar fate.

By 1706, all the North Florida missions were virtually wiped out.

Of late years, research and excavation have determined the sites of some of these missions.

There were, of course, no roads in these early days. The Indians traveled on foot following game trails or striking through the forest they knew so well. The Spaniards, who rode horses and wore heavy armour, needed roads. The food produced by the missions was necessary to the life of the St. Augustine settlement, and while some of it could be sent by river, much had to be transported overland.

So the trails connecting the missions gradually grew to be roads that could be used by pack horses and later by carts and WAROUS.

As everthing started in St. Augustine, a Zero Milestone was erected there. A great sphere of coquina, six feet in diameter, was placed in the plaza. It has since been moved near the entrance of the old fort. The road that started here became known as the Old Spanish Trail.

From St. Augustine, it ran west to Picolatta, where travelers crossed the St. Johns, presumably by canoe. It turned southwest around Santa Fe Lake and crossed the Natural Bridge section near the present town of High Springs. From there, it ran northwest to Fort White and Monticello and Fort Luis, now Tallahassee.

It was eventually extended entirely across the continent to California, and is still known as the Old Spanish Trail.

A second road was built about 1763, from New Smyrns to St. Augustine. History tells us this "was built by subscriptions of s number of public spirited gentlemen." It continued to Cow Ford, the early name of Jacksonville, where it crossed the St. Johns, ran north across the St. Marys River on the Georgia boundary and on as far as the Altamaha River. This was called the King's Highway and is now a part of U.S. 1.

By W. E. MIXSON

The day of the big ice cream festival had arrived and the ladies of the Apalachicola Trinity Church had worked long and hard to make it a success. Prospects for a complete sell-out were good, as the hot Florida aun beamed down on prospective customers and whetted their appetites for the ice-cold succulent dish. Everything was in readiness, except for one minor detail-there was no ice with which to freeze the ice сгении.

Call the ice man, then? No. This was back in 1846. when ice had to be shipped by boat from New England, and the asking price for it in the "hot South" was from 75 cents to $1.25 per 100 pounds. The ship bringing the ice down for the ice cream festival had failed to arrive on schedule. It looked like a dark day, indeed, for the good Trinity Church ladies, when there appeared on the scene a small Spanish-looking man with dark hair and brown eyes. Wringing hands were elevated in exultation, for the small man had brought with him enough ice to freeze the ladies' ice cream.

The small dark man was Dr. John Gorrie, Apalachicola's leading physician. The ice with which he saved the day for the church ladies had been made artificially in a machine he had made himself.

M AN has been using ice as a cooling agent for centuries. The Emperor Nero had his slaves carry snow down from the mountains to cool his wine, and Alexander the Great had trenches dug for storing snow with which to cool his wine. Marco Polo returned from China in the 13th century with recipes for water and milk ices.

The early Egyptians were perhaps the first to learn the secret of cooling by evaporation. They filled shallow trays of porous material with water and placed them on beds of straw to influence freezing while being exposed to the cold night air. Dr. Gorrie's ice machine, one of the first to be patented in the United States, was not developed for the purpose of making ice cream or cooling wine, however. In treating malaria and yellow fever patients, Gorrie had arrived at a theory of body temperature control for the treatment of these two diseases. He believed that by lowering the temperature of the patient and his surroundings a cure could be effected. He, therefore, began pioneer experiments with air conditioning. His system was to have air enter a room from the ceiling, passing over a block of ice. The cooled air settled to the floor and was exhausted through an opening at the floor level.

NEEDING ice for his experiments and because of the expense and difficulty of having it shipped from up north, Gorrie began work on a machine to produce ice artificially. According to a story told by a Negro slave who had assisted Gorrie, the first machine was used merely to cool the hospital room in which the patient was being treated. The making of ice came about accidentally. Gorrie forgot to turn the machine off one day, letting it run overtime and, as a result, ice was produced. The history of Gorrie's life before he arrived in Apaichicola in 1833, is based for the most part on conjecture. It is generally conceded that he was born in Charleston, S.C., Oct. 3, 1803, and lived there for some years. It is not known where he received his early schooling, but records of the College of Physicians and Surgeons of the Western District of the State of New York show that he was graduated from that school in

As has been previously mentioned, he was small of stature, had dark hair, brown eyes and was of the Spanish type. Gorrie was hesitant in speaking of his

Spanish type. Gorrie was hesitant in seeaking of his parents, but he supposedly once confided in a friend that his father was an officer in the Spanish army. From the time of Gorrie's graduation from medical school until his arrival in Apalachicola, his activities are shrouded in mystery. There are stories to the effect that for a while after receiving his medical degree he was a resident of Abbeville, S.C., and was a guest in the home of John C. Calhoun.

A PALACHICOLA, at the time of Gorrie's arrival, was a prosperous export point for cotton. Many foreign ships entered the bustling harbor daily, and cotton buyers from all over the world made their headquarters in Apalachicola.

Gorrie's skill as a physician soon became known all along the Gulf coast and in the interior. Besides being the town's leading physician, Gorrie, at one time or another, held positions as postmaster, member of the a director and, later, president of the Branch Bank of Pensacola, part owner of the famous Mansion House and treasurer of the local Masonic lodge. In 1838, Gorrie married Mrs. Carolyn Frances Beman. Of this union, there were two children, a daughter, Sarah, and a son, John Myrick Gorrie, who was a major in the Confederate Army during the Civil War.

GORRE MONUMENT was erected at Apalachicola in 1999 by Southern Ice Exchange,

During Gorrie's stay in Apalachicola, the Gulf Coast areas were plagued with serious epidemics of malaria and yellow fever. In 1841, the nearby town of St. Joseph was all but wiped out by yellow fever. In that same year, 100 persons in Apalachicola died of the dread

As a physician, Gorrie was chiefly concerned with cures and preventatives of the fever, and became a sort of a specialist in that field. He recommended the draining and filling in of marshes. In an article in a medical journal, Gorrie offered this theory: "gauze curtains, though chiefly used to prevent annoyance and suffering from mosquitoes, are thought to be also sifters of the atmosphere and interceptors and decomposers of malaria."

I ноизи he did not realize just how close he had come to putting his finger on the exact cause of malariathe peaky mosquito-Gorrie did know the preventative means. He also noted the fact that the epidemics were closely associated with the seasons; that the hotter the weather, the more prevalent the fever. This led to his experiments with air conditioning and body temperature control.

In 1844, giving up his many civic duties and much of his medical practice in order to do so, Gorrie began work on his ice machine, utilizing the principle of compressed air to lower the temperature of brine to be used for refrigerating purposes. By 1845, Gorrie was using his machine to cool rooms. It was not until 1850, however, that he completed his first working model for the production of ice.

On May 6, 1851, he was issued a patent for his machine. Actually, Gorrie's was not the first patent issued for an artificial ice machine. He was preceded by James E. Manuel of Philadelphia, who was issued a patent for such a machine on July 12, 1839. Gorrie's, however, was the first patent issued for actual production of ice by mechanical operation.

Before he even completed his first working model, tured on a large scale much cheaper than it could be imported from up North. He maintained that with his machine, on a large scale, a ton of ice could be made on any part of the earth for less than two dollars.

In 1850, Gorrie was afforded the opportunity of giving a dramatic demonstration of his ice machine. As the story goes, a French cotton buyer, a Monsieur Rosan, was giving a big dinner party at the Mansion House and needed ice to cool the champagns. Friends of Rosan did not believe the ice boat would arrive in time for the dinner, but Rosan assured them that there would be ice for the champagne. Resan even wagered baskets of champagne that he would have ice.

The dinner got underway and the ice had not arrived by boat, but, at a highly dramatic moment, servants merched into the dining room bearing silver salvers on which there were blocks of ice about the size of bricks. Again, Dr. Gorrie had come to the rescue of a social event with his ice-making machine. The champagne was cooled with the artificially produced ice, and the losers of wagers good-naturedly paid their bets.

After receiving his patent for the manufacture of ice,
Gorrie tried unsuccessfully to raise capital with which to finance ice making on a large scale. Everywhere, he was met with derision or disinterest. The New England ice merchants were especially antagonistic toward Gorrie's proposed ice making venture.

Gorrie finally came to the conclusion that the demand for cheap ice in the South was not great enough to support an ice industry. Discouraged and disillusioned, he spent the latter part of his life in semi-reclusion in his Apalachicola home. While on his sick-bed, a few days before his death, he refused to see anyone. But he told his wife that she must let all the friends who had called see his body after he was newspaper. According to his wishes, he was buried in the "public burying ground situated near the margin of the Bay of Apalachicola." In 1893, his body was disinterred and buried in the Magnolia Cemetery on the outskirts of Apalachicola. As is often the case with famous men, Gorrie did not achieve fame until after his death. Today, in Statuary Hall of the Capitol Building in Washington, there are statues of two illustrious Floridians. One is of General Kirby Smith, famed Florida Civil War general. The other is of Dr. John Gorrie. And there are several monuments to Gorrie's memory in the state of Florida. Today, thanks to men like Dr. John Gorrie, it is a simple matter to obtain ice cubes from our own mechanical refrigerator or have the ice man deliver a huge chunk of the cooling agent to our back door.

One of the humerous aspects of Gorrie's early ice making experiments is the fact that, though he possessed the mechanical genius to invent an ice making machine, he couldn't think of a simple way of solving the problem (one still faced by refrigerator owners today) of removing the ice from his freezing trays. Gorrie recommended the use of cans that were smaller at the bottom than at the top and said that the cans should be greased. According to a friend, Gorrie never thought of the simple expediency of placing the freezing cans in warm water to aid in the removal of the ice.

This summer (which marks the 100th anniversary of the death of Gorrie) when the hot sun is bearing down with all its might and we are enjoying the comforts of air conditioning with a tall cold drink at hand, we might give an appreciative thought to Dr. John Gorrie, physician, scientist, humanitarian, and Florida's first ice man.
