Deadly battle avoided?

HOUSTON — David Koresh told federal agents that the deadly gun battle at the cult compound Feb. 28 could have been avoided if they had called first.

"It would've been better if you just called me up or talked to me," Koresh told Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms negotiator Jim Cavanaugh in a telephone conversation during the first hours of what turned into a 51-day standoff. "Then you all could have come in and done your work."

Transcripts of the recorded conversations were published in today's Houston Chronicle.

Four ATF agents and several cult members were killed in the shootout that erupted when the agents raided the compound near Waco in a search for illegal weapons.

The Chronicle obtained transcripts of dozens of cellular phone conversations and police radio transmissions. The newspaper didn't say how.

Van Gogh landscape donated

NEW YORK — Publishing magnate Walter H. Annenberg gave the Metropolitan Museum of Art a Vincent van Gogh landscape for which he paid $57 million.

"Wheat Field With Cypresses," an 1889 scene of a windswept landscape beneath a rolling sky, is one of the artist's best-known images. The painting was to go on view today.

Annenberg, a museum trustee and a former U.S. ambassador to Britain whose publishing empire once included TV Guide, recently bought the painting — for the most he has ever paid for a work of art — in order to donate it to the Met.

"It is one of the great paintings I have admired over the years," he said. "I thought it was something the museum must have."

Annenberg bought it from the family of the Swiss industrialist Emil G. Bührle, who died in 1956.

Stop look-alike houses

NEW LENOX, Ill. — Call it the cookie-cutter rebellion. Some communities have adopted ordinances to put a stop to subdivisions lined with look-alike houses.

The village board in New Lenox is among the latest to consider an anti-monotony ordinance.

"We don't want to look like we came from a cookie-cutter," said village president John Nawakowski, who expects the proposal to be approved next month.

Nowakowski said Monday that New Lenox, 20 miles southwest of Chicago, is trying to maintain a sense of decor despite its rapid growth. Its population has doubled to 10,500 since 1980.

"I think it'll force some innovative architectural exteriors," he said.

No major opposition has developed against the plan, which would ban construction of identical houses beside, and across the street, from each other.

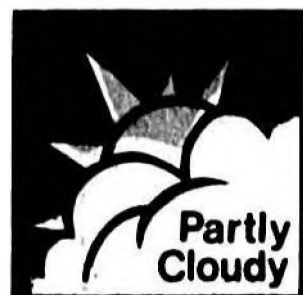

The nearby village of Tinley Park already has an ordinance saying "no two single-family dwellings of identical ... facade" can be next to each other. Identical homes cannot comprise more than a quarter of the houses on a block.

Girl raped? Dad sues

Lawsuit filed against school, welfare agencies

By SANDRA ELLIOTT
Herald Staff Writer

SANFORD — The father of a girl allegedly raped while at a school for abused and neglected children has filed a suit for negligence in Seminole County Circuit Court against the school and several welfare agencies.

Pineview Academy, a school for emotionally handicapped children in Sanford, was named as a defendant in the suit. The girl's father claims she was fondled and raped by two boys when left unsupervised at the facility.

The suit claims school officials "knew or should have known the minor would be in danger of such an assault if left unattended and unsupervised at Pineview Academy."

Also named as defendants in the suit are the Department of Health and Rehabilitative Services, Loch Lowe Preparatory School, also known as Pineview Academy, Seminole Community Mental Health Center, Inc. a/k/a Seminole Children's Village and the State of Florida Guardian Ad Litem (GAL) program.

The plaintiffs seek damages in excess of $15,000 and are requesting a jury trial.

The young girl was taken into HRS care in 1992 and placed at Pineview and Seminole Children's Village. She was also supervised in the GAL program.

The suit claims the girl was subjected to emotional abuse, physical abuse, neglect and or sexual abuse including but not limited to being raped by students at Pineview. She was removed from Pineview and Seminole Children's Village and placed in residential treatment, according to the suit.

Further, the suit claims the minor was not effectively monitored or placed in the proper facility for her needs.

As the result of the alleged neglect, physical, emotional and/or sexual abuse in addition to the mental and emotional traumatization, the suit claims the girl has incurred and will continue to have medical bills as well as pain and suffering and loss of ability to earn money in the future.

Pineview directors did not return phone calls this morning.

School days get shorter as summer nears

By VICKI DeBORNIER
Herald Staff Writer

SANFORD — The days are getting shorter as summer approaches.

If that sounds wrong to you, you're probably not a student in the Seminole County schools.

The final days of school will be shorter than the other days of the school year if the school board approves the traditional schedule change that allows students to take exams or to simply wind down the year a little more easily.

Students in the lower grades wrap up their year, in some cases, with quiet celebrations while their older counterparts spend the time taking the examinations in each of their classes.

Additional houses in Lake Mary subdivision?

By NICK PFEIFAU
Herald Staff Writer

LAKE MARY — The Lake Mary Planning and Zoning Board will discuss Wednesday a re-platting of the Timacuan subdivision that is expected to occupy most of the meeting.

During this past Thursday night, the Lake Mary City Commission approved an amendment to the Timacuan Development of Regional Impact (DRI). Timacuan originally was planned for construction of 1,097 residential units.

When the city purchased the Sports Complex property, which is located in what had been part of the Timacuan DRI, the original development order was amended to reflect the action, and the number of planned residential units was changed to 741.

City Planner Matt West explained, "Now, they are bringing a request to re-plat the subdivision to allow more units, up to 988, through several changes in the original approvals. Several different requests will be presented under New Business at the P&Z meeting Wednesday night."

Another subject to be presented for discussion pertains to another ordinance passed many months ago by the city commission. "They approved a temporary sales ordinance," West said, "but now, with the boulevard almost completed, we need to reexamine it and consider the possibility of cancelling the ordinance."

West said the cancellation would not affect seasonal sales such as

Christmas trees or fireworks. "But the occasional roadside vendors such as hotdog stands would not be permitted," he said. "Much of it pertains to the amount of parking spaces in specific areas, and access traffic."

Other items to be discussed at the P&Z meeting include a request to vacate drainage and utility easements, presented by John Houff of Stratford Court, and a Landfill/Hazmat Survey.

Sanford places moratorium on borrow pits

By NICK PFEIFAU
Herald Staff Writer

SANFORD — The Sanford City Commission took a look at borrow pit/mining matters last night. Regulations are still under study, but the commission voted in favor of a moratorium on such operations.

Just last Thursday, the city's Planning and Zoning Commission tabled a request for rezoning of property in the eastern area of the city near E. 24th Street. The request for rezoning was to allow for mining on the property.

A study of borrow pit and mining was requested during a city commission workshop several weeks ago by Commissioner Whitey Eckstein.

In response, City Planner Jay Marder supplied members of the commission with copies of borrow pit regulations established in the City of Oviedo and Seminole County.

"I just want you to know I am against borrow pits," Eckstein said during yesterday afternoon's work session. "If any request comes up, I want to

Accord near on 10,500-bed prison building plan

By GURT ANDERSON
Associated Press Writer

TALLAHASSEE — The 10,500 new prison beds contained in a construction program put together by Gov. Lawton Chiles and the Legislature are only a temporary fix, some legislators said.

"This is kind of a big Band-Aid," said Senate Democratic Leader Pat Thomas of Quincy. "We don't have a comprehensive prison plan."

Even though the program that neared agreement Monday would mark the largest single-year authorization of prison construction in Florida history, some legislators said it only delays the overcrowding crisis for a few years.

"My fear is we're going to throw a lot of money into a system that doesn't work well in the first place," said Sen. Howard Forman, D-Pembroke Pines. House and Senate leaders hoped to adjourn the session as early as Thursday, instead of continuing until June 8 as Chiles initially proposed. The governor called the session after vetoing a 7,000-bed plan he described as inadequate.

The new plan, crafted by Senate Republicans and House Democrats, uses a $166 million cash windfall that became available when economists lowered expectations for welfare and Medicaid cases. The new dollars doomed any hopes the governor had for a cigarette tax increase to pay for a longer-term building plan.

Chiles indicated support for the legislative plan so long as a new commission is created to recommend long-term solutions to the corrections system, including changes in sentencing guidelines.

"Fortune has smiled on us in terms of the found money," Chiles said. "I think we made a giant step forward."

The plan, which was approved Monday afternoon by Appropriations Committees in both the House and Senate with only two negative votes, authorizes 10,524 new prison beds. Of those, 938 are given only planning money, leaving the actual fully-funded total at 9,586. There are 53,000 prison beds currently in the system or coming on line.

The only major difference between the bills is $9.5 million the Senate included to pay for a "Safe Schools" program that hires police officers, buys metal detectors and takes other steps to improve safety. The House has no such provision.

Cop is recognized 18 years after his murder

By The Associated Press

TAMPA — Eighteen years after the contract killing of Richard L. Cloud, the vice detective has been memorialized among slain police officers.

"He finally made it. He earned it with his life," said Cloud's son, Paul Cloud.

A black-and-white photograph of Cloud has been added to the memorial wall. A gold marker recounts the time and the day he died: 9:45 a.m., Oct. 23, 1975.

Cloud was gunned down in a mob-style hit at his home when a man ran the doorbell, then shot him three times when he answered the front door.

Cloud's career as a vice detective generated nearly as much controversy as his murder. News stories detailed his life and his work. Some thought he was dirty; others said he had dirt on the corrupt.

Seven months before he died, the 34-year-old Cloud was fired for refusing to take a lie detector test over an accusation he beat a prisoner.

Cloud continued his fight against corruption even without a badge. He testified about underworld activities before federal grand juries and became an informant for the FBI.

Less than two years after his dismissal by the police chief, he was reinstated by the mayor. The pension board ruled he died in the line of duty.

"It is only right that he join the other 19 individuals who made the supreme sacrifice in service to the citizens of Tampa," read an order by Chief Eduardo Gonzalez. Gonzalez gave Cloud the memorial recognition last month after some officers made a request.

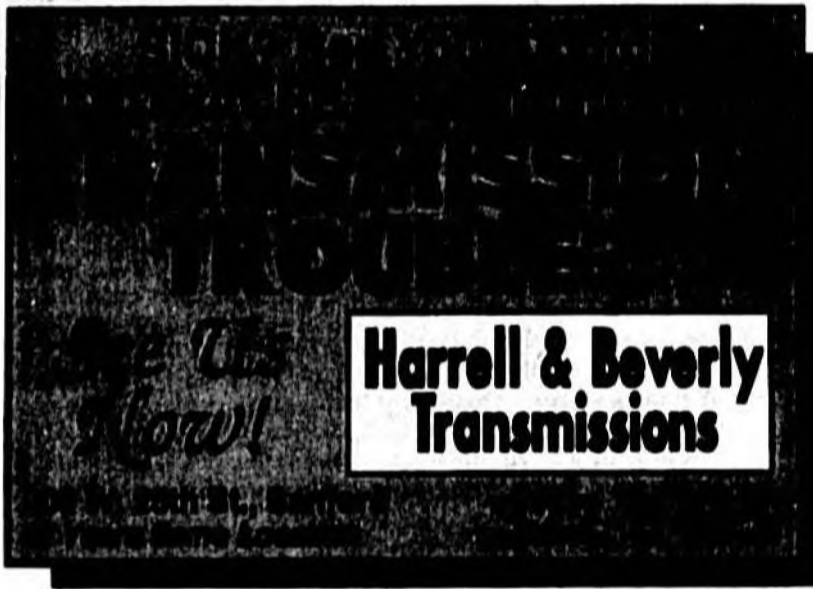

D.J. Halligan, a retired detective and Cloud's former partner, said he tried for years to get Cloud put on the wall. "Nobody wanted to touch it," Halligan said. Cloud had angered too many people over the years, he said.

"This was very long overdue," Paul Cloud, 25, said in a telephone interview from his home in Houston where he is awaiting word on his application to be a city police officer.

Prosecutors said mobsters paid for Cloud's murder. He'd been digging too deep into narcotics dealers and the underworld.

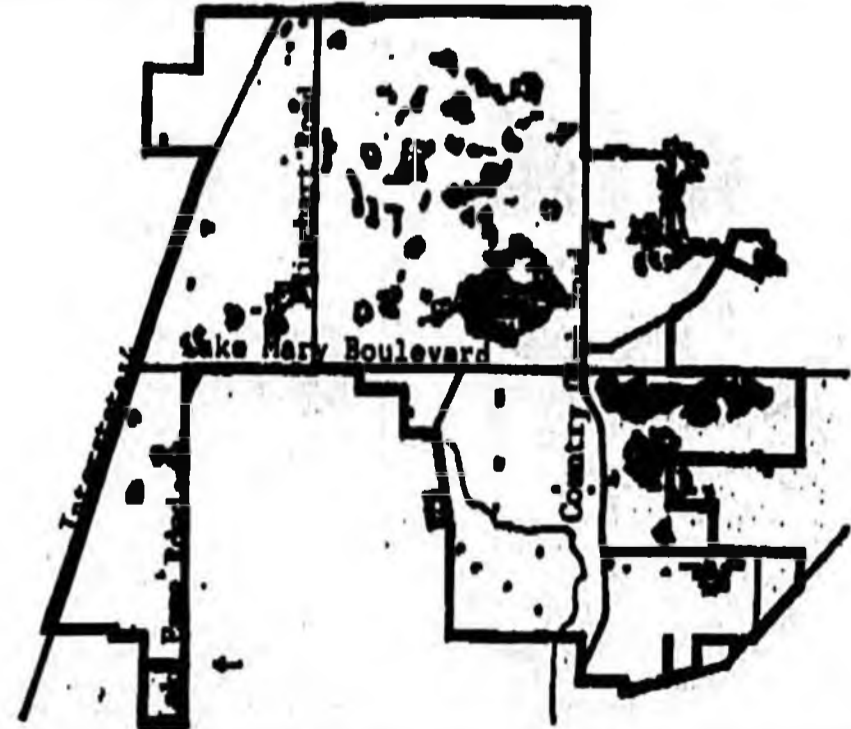

His investigations, both public and private, pressured the drug business of reputed mobster Victor Manuel Acosta. Acosta hired the man to arrange Cloud's murder.

Salute to high school grads

High school wasn't easy. Students put in many hours of classes, homework and study in order to graduate.

Except for certain honors, most of the students have not gained prominence or been cited for outstanding achievements. They just plodded through the graduation requirements until they could receive their diploma.

Except for those moving on to higher education, many grads will now join the adults of the world, seeking that paycheck each week.

While they can be proud of the successful completion of high school, the new graduates may also be concerned over what will happen next. Will they find a job? Will they be able to earn enough money to support themselves?

It took hard work and many hours to get through high school. It will take harder work to handle a job. If this has been accepted by the grad walking out of school and into the workplace, the future will be brighter.

If, on the other hand, they begin adulthood with a feeling that they are deserving of a high salary and easy-to-handle job immediately, they are heading for many disappointments.

There is an old axiom: "If at first you don't succeed, try, try again." It should be made clear that trying requires working harder.

In order to succeed in any job, an employee must prove himself or herself. The person paying the salary must be convinced that the new person is capable of handling the assigned work, and has potential to improve.

Congratulations to all high school graduates. May you be successful in your next school, the one specializing in adulthood.

...Salute to college grads

You thought high school was rough, but you went into an even more strenuous education and completed college. You deserve a pat on the back from everyone.

High school gave you the knowledge you need. College taught you how to use it, not only for your own personal success, but for the betterment of all.

With the opportunities offered in today's colleges and universities, you have been surrounded by some of the best education ever made available. You have perhaps learned more than even the graduates of a year earlier.

Similar to high school students however, the world of work is not going to start you off at the top. You will still be required to prove your value before you begin to move upward.

Many companies send representatives to colleges at graduation time, seeking people with certain degrees who may prove to be of value. Many graduates take advantage of this opportunity and eventually become successful. A few however, are turned down. A degree does not warrant special privileges.

By utilizing college skills, graduates will probably be able to move higher in the work-world at a faster rate than others. There is no guarantee however. The management triangle gets smaller as it leads to the top and is harder to reach.

Congratulations to all college graduates. We look forward to having you join the world with your many skills and expanded knowledge. Use your degree well.

Time to rethink the war on drugs

As I sat in a barber's chair in the heart of downtown San Diego, the man clipping my hair nonchalantly noted a drug deal in progress. I was taken aback. I had seen at least two police cars cruise down the street only minutes before.

This is the current status of the war on drugs in the nation's cities. The buying and selling of illegal narcotics continues to flourish, even though the last decade has seen almost a ten-fold increase in the amount of federal dollars spent to staunch the drug trade.

There are some who believe that the drug war simply cannot be won; that America should throw in the towel. At a recent "drug summit" in Washington, D.C., Baltimore Mayor Kurt Schmoke renewed his call for decriminalization of drugs. In a recent opinion piece in The New York Times, U.S. District Judge Whitman Knapp argued that the government should "get out of drug enforcement."

But the surrender to drugs that Schmoke and Knapp advocate would quicken America's social decay. It would result in more, not less drug abuse. Emergency rooms would treat an increasing number of overdose victims. Hospital maternity wards would have to provide care for even more crack babies. AIDS clinics would be confronted with an even larger population of HIV-infected intravenous drug users.

Washington should continue to wage the war against drugs, but the battle plan needs to be changed to emphasize demand. The government no longer should squander 85 percent of its drug control war chest trying to stem the flow of illegal narcotics into the country. Such a strategy is almost doomed to failure.

Burn down one Peruvian poppy field and another grows in its place. Arrest one Colombian drug lord and a successor picks up where he left off. Head off a cache of drugs in south Florida and a shipment makes it over the U.S. border in Southern California.

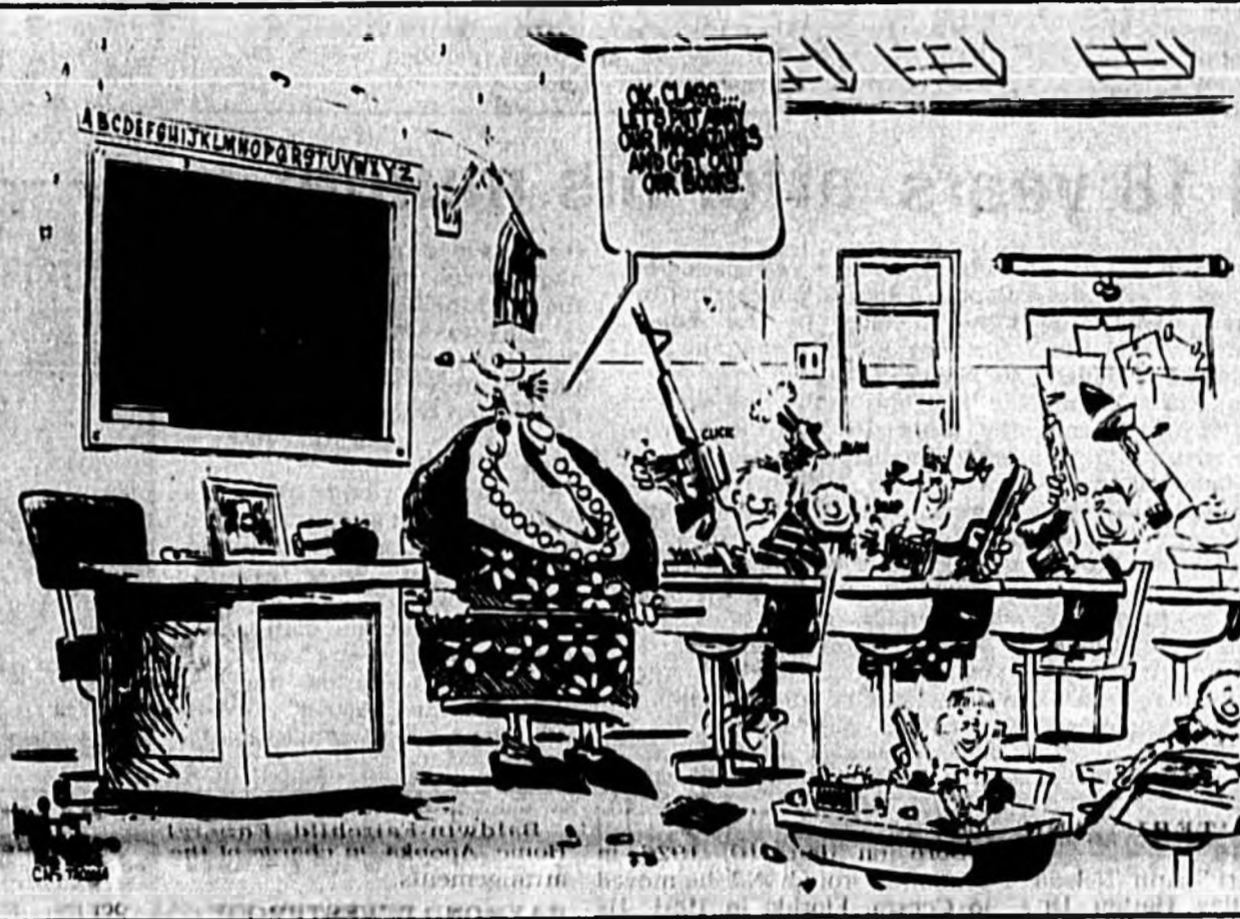

With lower profit margins, drug merchants might find it worthwhile to pursue other lines of business.

Attorney General Janet Reno noted recently that the drug interdiction effort mounted by the federal government over the last four years had stopped only 25 percent of the drugs targeted for the United States. To have more than a negligible effect on drug usage in this country, the government would have to interdict 75 percent of incoming drugs.

This will never happen. As long as cocaine is valued on the street level at roughly $1,500 an ounce compared to only $350 an ounce for gold there will be drug merchants prepared to use any and every means to get their illicit product into the hands of interested customers.

It is profit that drives the drug trade. And the way to reduce the profitability of drugs is not by stemming supply (the more scarce a desired commodity, the more valuable), but by dampening demand.

If the government deprived drug dealers of enough of their customers -- say 75 percent of the 12.5 million Americans who use an illegal drug at least once a month -- the profit margins for drugs would decline significantly. With lower profit margins, drug merchants might find it worthwhile to pursue other lines of business.

Let's not forget about the boys

Several thousand of us participated recently in the national Take Our Daughters to Work Day. Reading the newspaper accounts of lucky little girls in law offices, utility company bucket-trucks, and brokerage firms, I lived it with them.

How I would have loved to have been taken to work 30 years ago, as these girls were, as a precious commodity my parents wanted to encourage. It might just have been the greatest experience of my girlhood and caused me to consider career choices I never dared to dream of.

I'll acknowledge I had no reservations when I heard the plans to take our daughters out of school for a day and bring them to work. After all, recent studies have shown that girls' self-esteem plummets between the ages of 11 and 13, and that even well-meaning teachers unconsciously respond to and encourage boys more often in classrooms.

Then I saw the boys left behind.

Reporters who visited classrooms where many of the girls were out in the workplace being treated like treasures found a group of scared, threatened and, in some cases, sulky boys. I can't say I had a lot of sympathy for their "The girls get all the good things!" whine, but I sure did understand how it felt to be passed over because of one's gender.

I've been left out of high-school sports programs while my male classmates have had all the new equipment the taxpayers could heap on them. I've been not allowed to play in neighborhood boys' games; and even kicked out of a Dixieland band in college because the bandleader was afraid male bar owners wouldn't hire a band with a woman walling on a clarinet. Visiting these feelings on a boy doesn't do a thing to rectify mine, and I'm not sure how it affects future gender equality in this country.

It's not that I think affirmative action is wrong, that sometimes we don't need to overcompensate when people have been denied opportunity. But the problem inherent in affirmative action is that it visits the sins of the father on the sons. By the time any corrective action is taken, many of those losing jobs and scholarships to the disadvantaged have no understanding of the history that led up to this point. History began when they were born, and they believe THEY are now the disadvantaged -- discrimination's new victims.

Pulitzer Prize-winning columnist Anna Quindlen of The New York Times made a wonderful point when she said there was "something important we needed to communicate to our daughters about their worth in the world." She believes the boys' experience of being left back in the classroom that day wasn't all bad, because they "learned what it is like to feel overlooked because of your sex. My fourth grader had to write an essay about how he might feel if he were a girl, and his empathy level was pretty high."

But even if the boys gained some wisdom for their pain, does it follow that we should start pulling groups of historically disadvantaged children out of classrooms for special encouragement and leaving the so-called advantaged behind? Say, "Take Our Black Children to Government Offices Day," or "Take Our Low-Income Children on Cool Field Trips Day"? Even if there are benefits from these programs, what kind of message do we give kids when we design these activities in settings where some kids go and some are left behind?

I still think that taking our daughters to work was great intent, if not perfect execution; and thousands of little girls' lives were enriched. I just wish it had been handled with a more "win-win" plan.

What's happening to forests?

Amid the attention now focused on deciding the future of Pacific Northwest forests, one of the most vital long-term promises to the American people remains almost wholly unaddressed. The promise is that the national forests will not be cut faster than they can be regrown and that they will be regrown once they are cut. There is considerable evidence that the promise is being broken.

Reforestation is one element within the framework of maintaining the national forests as healthy ecosystems that support needs from biological diversity and watershed protection to recreation. In this context, inadequate reforestation is part of a broader pattern of forest mismanagement that, in the eyes of many, has pervaded the stewardship of the national forests.

The U.S. Forest Service asserts that within the national forests, "all harvested areas are regenerated promptly." But a far more disturbing picture of failed and poorly stocked tree plantations and of annual timber cuts that outstrip the rate of reforestation can be drawn from Forest Service records and the findings of its own employees.

Two key provisions of the 1976 National Forest Management Act govern the Forest Service's reforestation program. One provides that timber cuts from national forests be no greater than "a quantity which can be removed from such forest annually in perpetuity on a sustained-yield basis." The other allows cutting "only where there is assurance that such lands can be adequately restocked within five years after harvest."

The recent history of California's Sequoia National Forest provides a test case of how these laws have been enforced. "The Sequoia National Forest is definitely not following a program of timber stand establishment that will produce future yields of timber products as intended," forest silviculturist Robert R. Rogers warned his superiors in November 1983. One of the examples he cited was a forest district that spent $40,000 a year on tree planting, but because the work involved no site preparation, "Without doubt the planting was a near total failure. ... In fact records are so poor that the district cannot even determine where the planting was done."

In follow-up reports written in 1985 and 1988, Rogers complained of "incomplete or of inadequate" tree plantation records, and warned again that because plantation growth rates were only 31 percent of planning assumptions, "performance was well below that needed to sustain expected future harvests on the Sequoia National Forest." Plantations are the replanted timber stands the Forest Service intends will be harvested to supply future needs.

He concluded, "Enough is now known to show that past actions have not been adequate to produce the growth upon which our long-term planning assumptions (for sustained yield) are based. To continue past actions, and at the same time expect relatively high yields from lands managed intensively for timber, would be to create an unreconciled contradiction."

In 1991, however, the story changed. By then Rogers was arguing, "The Forest Service keeps detailed records of its planting of trees and its success rates of various plantations." The assertion came in response to a lawsuit protesting the Sequoia's proposed new 10-year forest management plan.

As part of the suit, the Sequoia National Forest surveyed 25,184 acres of the forest's tree plantations. Those plantations, according to Forest Service rules, should contain a recommended stocking level of 200 trees per acre, and at least a minimum of 180 trees per acre. Below that level, additional planting to meet minimum stocking is required. The point isn't academic. To be sustainable, the annual timber cut is based on computer projections that assume plantations are actually growing the recommended number of trees per acre.

The Forest Service reported, however, that 17 percent of the surveyed Sequoia stands contained fewer than the minimum stocking level of plantation trees.

Further, new Forest Service surveys show that 10 plantations involving 1,721 acres that had been reported as containing between 172 and 382 trees per acre, are actually growing well below minimum levels, at 55 to 82 trees per acre.

Unfortunately, the Sequoia's problems are not isolated aberrations. They reflect the general pattern, particularly in the heavily logged forests of the West. Shedding light on these problems is the first step toward correcting them.

There is considerable evidence that the promise is being broken.

Your One Stop Showplace For Ceramics!

If you have not been paying attention to what's going on last couple of months (in which case you might have had to have been on another planet) you may not realize that Lake Mary now has several new businesses and restaurants, putting it right up there with the likes of Sanford or Altamonte Springs. The small town is now a "big" city. AND, Lake Mary Boulevard is FINALLY open.

But the most exciting news of all is the opening of the one and only ceramics shop in Lake Mary! That really puts the town on the map.

A Ceramic Showplace's owners Dee Redwine and Linda Herndon are thrilled with the response they have received since they opened their store on April 15. A Ceramic Showplace is located in the Shoppes of Lake Mary, at the corner of Lake Mary Boulevard and Country Club Road, behind the 7-11 convenience store and behind the 7-11 convenience store and behind the 7-11 convenience store.

And what does Lake Mary's one and only ceramics shop have to offer? Everything from greenware to finished pieces, and classes, too! There are even classes for children, ages eight and up, 10:00 AM to 12:30 PM on Saturday only.

A Ceramic Showplace carries brushes, cleaning tools, paints and stains such as Dona's, Gare Fash-en-hue, Duncan and Mayo glazes and Olevia colors underglazes. All supplies are available for purchase. Greenware and bisques come in a wide variety, but the store's collection concentrates on some interesting pieces for Christmas, Indian and southwestern-lovers.

Possibly putting them in another "one and only" category is the fact that A Ceramic Showplace is offering "Liquid Suede". Liquid Suede is especially good for Indian pieces, to simulate the hides that they wore. It can also be used on other clothing such as Santa's suit or the wise men's robes in nativity scenes. It is also fabulous for "soft" baby items.

Liquid Suede can also be processed to look and feel like leather. This would be great for southwestern pieces. Santa's boots and belt and harnesses for horses.

Liquid Suede can be sealed to protect it from the weather and can be washed without losing the suede texture. Come in and let Dee and Linda show you the many applications for this stain.

The workshop is open with no table fee during the day. Monday is "no smoking" day, until 10:00 PM. There is a $3.00 table fee for any evening hours. The store is also open late on Tuesday and Thursday nights.

Linda and Dee became friends through a shared interest in ceramics. Linda has 20 years experience and is certified to teach. For Dee, ceramics was just a hobby. They met at one of the local ceramics shops and started selling their finished pieces together at craft shows. Then they decided to put their friendship to the test, and go into business together. Linda says it has been "a lot of fun and a lot of play!"

For more information on what A Ceramic Showplace has to offer, give Linda or Dee a call at 328-7303.

A healthy change

Doctors' opinions on national health care, '71 vs. '92.

Doctors' opinions on national health care have changed substantially since 1971, when 66 percent of those asked believed it would worsen the health care situation in the United States. In 1992, only about half felt that way.

Clinton decides against scaled back health reform

By CHRISTOPHER CONNELL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — President Clinton has decided not to heed economic advisers who wanted him to significantly scale back the basic package of health benefits he has promised all Americans, an administration official says.

Instead, Clinton has given a firm commitment to a broad benefits package, with improvements for most Americans in such areas as immunizations, mammograms and regular checkups for healthy children, the official said Monday.

"The scope of services is comprehensive and better than what (most) people have today," added the official, who spoke only on condition of anonymity.

The White House canceled a meeting Monday night at which Clinton and his advisers were to have grappled with how to pay for health reform. Clinton decided to concentrate for now on pushing his budget bill through the House.

But last Thursday night, Clinton decided against going with a stripped down benefit package proposed by some economic advisers who wanted to soften the impact of reform on business, the source said.

A health care expert outside the White House said he was told Clinton opted for "the more generous, more comprehensive benefit package, although perhaps with a little higher cost-sharing." The expert also asked not to be identified.

The administration source declined to specify how much Clinton would ask people to pay in deductibles and copayments for their insurance.

But their out-of-pocket costs will vary depending on whether they choose to enroll in cost-conscious health maintenance organizations or insist on keeping fee-for-service arrangements with their doctors, the official said.

Ron Pollack, executive director of Families USA, an advocacy group lobbying for health care reform, said the Clinton package

"will be more protective than what the overwhelming majority of people have today."

"People won't have to worry if they have the wrong accident or disease that they are going to be financially devastated," Pollack said.

Families USA was organizing a closed-door meeting with Hillary Rodham Clinton today for several hundred representatives of consumer groups being wooed to support the administration's plan.

The Clinton package, due to be unveiled in mid-June, will cover a wide range of health services, from hospitalization to doctor bills to prescription drugs.

AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland said Monday that organized labor remains adamantly opposed to taxing employee health benefits to help pay for health reform.

The White House is still weighing whether to make people with the richest health benefits pay income taxes on part of them. Clinton's health advisers have pushed for a package so generous that relatively few people would be hit by such a tax.

Kirkland made clear that labor doesn't want any union members taxed.

"Our movement is unified and determined in its opposition to the idea of taxing employee health benefits," Kirkland told several hundred Service Employees International activists.

"Our people fought hard to win those benefits. They've already paid for them by forgoing higher wages," he said. "Those benefits ... shouldn't be taxed as income."

He expressed confidence the administration is "moving in the direction of a broadly based, fairly financed package ... including universal coverage," and applauded the idea of making all employers pay a payroll-based health tax.

"That is the (option) that makes the most sense," said Kirkland.

Economy: Productivity's up

By DAVE SKIDMORE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — Economists say it over and over again: the key to the nation's long-term economic health and a rising standard of living is productivity.

The more efficient that American businesses and workers are in making products and delivering services, the better off everyone will be, at least theoretically.

Productivity — output per hour of work — grew 2.8 percent last year, the best in two decades. So why aren't Americans celebrating newfound prosperity?

The answer is that everyone isn't better off.

At least so far, the improvement in productivity is coming at the expense of job growth. Businesses are making do with fewer workers. Low inflation has encouraged businesses to bolster profits by cutting costs. Uncertainty about future growth has added to their reluctance to hire.

As a result, the unemployment rate has remained stuck at 7 percent for three consecutive months — from February through April — and isn't much below its eight-year high of 7.7 percent last June.

"Right now, the benefits of stronger productivity growth are accruing to U.S. businesses and shareholders in the form of higher profits. It has yet to benefit, for the most part, the working man in the form of higher wages and salaries and benefits," said economist Mark Zandi of Regional Financial Associates of West Chester, Pa.

Productivity growth, according to Wassily Leontief of the Institute for Economic Analysis at New York University, is the more efficient use of capital and labor. The benefits can flow to either or both, he said.

"It becomes a competition. In recent years, in this fight ... labor has lost some of its strength," he said.

Statistics bear him out. According to the Labor Department, wages and salaries rose just 2.7 percent last year, a little bit less than inflation. At the same time, according to the Commerce Department, the after-tax profits of U.S. corporations rose 10 percent last year, the best showing in four years.

Business owners are reaping the benefits in the form of dividends and higher stock prices. Indeed, the Dow Jones average of industrial stocks is in record territory. It broke the 3,500 barrier for the first time last week.

Eventually though, the benefits of improved productivity should start to flow to the average American. Efficient companies can sell their products abroad at more competitive prices. That creates increased demand for their products and, eventually, companies will have to hire more workers. Or they'll invest in capital equipment — machinery and computers — and the manufacturers of those will need to hire.

"It's a paradox," said economist Allen Sinai of the Boston Co. "American firms are getting leaner and meaner

Racial harassment charges dropped against student

By WAYNE WOOLLEY
Associated Press Writer

PHILADELPHIA — Five black women called "water buffalo" by a fellow University of Pennsylvania student dropped their racial harassment claim, complaining that the accused man had turned the news media against them.

The case against Eden Jacobowitz had been seen as a case of political correctness run amok and an embarrassment for university President Sheldon Hackney, President Clinton's choice to head the National Endowment for the Humanities.

The women abandoned their complaint on Monday, announcing the decision at a news conference. The university dropped the charges later in the day.

Jacobowitz, a white 18-year-old from Lawrence, N.Y., could have been expelled from the Ivy League school of 22,000 students if he had been found guilty.

The women said Jacobowitz and his faculty adviser, history Professor Alan Charles Kors, "chose to circumvent the process and try this grievance among students in the national media, making it an issue of freedom of speech and political correctness, while blanketing the real issue, racial harassment."

The women said the university code of conduct prohibited them, as plaintiffs, from speaking to the media while the case was before a faculty-student panel. Hackney said, however, that the women could have spoken publicly once Jacobowitz did.

After learning of the school's decision, Jacobowitz said at a news conference with members of the American Civil Liberties Union that he, too, felt victimized by the judicial process.

"This all could have been settled a long time ago," he said. He said the school thwarted his efforts to apologize to the women.

Does home remedy treat psoriasis?

DEAR DR. GOTT: Thanks to a tip from a friend, my wife has found a successful treatment for psoriasis on her elbows. She applied Murphy's Oil Soap twice daily to the affected areas and her "heartbreak" appears cured. Is this a recommended treatment for this ailment and, if not, should it be?

DEAR READER: I was not aware of this home remedy until several readers wrote me, saying that it works. One had even contacted the manufacturer; apparently Murphy's Oil Soap is widely used to treat psoriasis -- and successfully, too.

Of course this therapy has not received approval from the Food and Drug Administration; consequently, the Murphy's people cannot advertise it for this purpose. The standard treatment for psoriasis is cortisone cream or ultraviolet light therapy.

Nonetheless, I can see no harm in the novel oil soap therapy. If it is effective, fine. If not, you can always use the product to spruce up your furniture.

DEAR DR. GOTT: Your articles are always good, but a particularly eye-catching one was on narcolepsy. I have had a great deal of success with the use of shizandra, an herb. Herbologists say this hastens the regeneration of brain cells. I don't know if this is true, but it works for me.

DEAR READER: I doubt that you have narcolepsy, which is marked by uncontrollable sleep attacks, sometimes occurring at inappropriate times, such as when driving. This is not the same thing as the sleepiness we all feel from time to time during the day, especially after a relaxing meal.

Narcolepsy is treated with stimulant drugs, such as amphetamines; it does not customarily respond to herbal remedies. This is the reason why your success with the herb makes me doubt the diagnosis. While I respect your wish to use any therapy you choose, I believe you should be examined by a neurologist to determine if, indeed, you do have narcolepsy. The diagnosis is established by the typical pattern of abnormal sleep. If you do have narcolepsy, traditional treatment would be

WIN AT BRIDGE

By Phillip Alder
Two of my favorite TV shows were "Yes, Minister" and its sequel, "Yes, Prime Minister." The Minister, James Hacker, is thwarted at almost every turn by his Permanent Secretary, Sir Humphrey Appleby.

In one scene, Hacker wants to move through some legislation. Sir Humphrey says: "What I mean is that I'm fully seized of your aims and, of course, I will do my utmost to see that they're put into practice. To that end, I recommend that we set up an inter-departmental committee with fairly broad terms of reference so that at the end of the day we'll be in a position to think through the various implications and arrive at a decision based on long-term considerations rather than rush prematurely into precipitate and possibly ill-conceived action which might well have unforeseen repercussions."

"You mean, no?" asks a punch-drunk Hacker.
Maybe Sir Humphrey was sitting East on today's deal.
West led the club king; four, seven, three. He continued with the club queen; eight, six, 10. Now West, remembering East's take-out double, switched to the spade seven. Gratefully, declarer won in hand, drew trumps, unblocked his spade honors, crossed to dummy with a heart and discarded a diamond loser on the spade queen.
"Why did you leave me guessing?" asked West. "Overtake with the club ace at trick one, cash the diamond king and lead a low club back to me. Then I'll know what to do."
When you can see how to defeat the contract, take control. Don't leave partner with any chance to make a mistake, for as sure as chickens are chickens, he will make one.

HOROSCOPE

By Bernice Bede Osol
YOUR BIRTHDAY
May 26, 1993

In the year ahead the possibility that you will repeat past mistakes is extremely slight. This is because you have learned valuable lessons from your experiences and you are now ready to profit from them.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Be extremely careful today if you are required to manage the resources of someone else. You intend the best, but you may not execute your intentions in a responsible manner. Gemini, treat yourself to a birthday gift. Send for Gemini's Astro-Graph predictions for the year ahead by mailing $1.25 plus a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope to Astro-Graph, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 4485, New York, NY 10183. Be sure to state your zodiac sign.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Today you might form an alliance to accomplish a specific objective. Unfortunately, the ally you choose might be incapable of making the contribution that you need.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) You might have to deal with an assignment today that you won't fully comprehend. Don't pretend you have a handle on it if you don't. Your pride could inhibit you from requesting help.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) It's best to avoid taking any kind of financial risks today, especially those risks where the control is in the hands of others.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) In a matter that affects others as well as yourself, don't leave the development of events up to chance. Wishing won't bring it into being.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Someone may tell you some hearsay gossip about an associate today. Before you relay to others what is told to you, take the time to have the facts verified.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) If your resources aren't prudently managed today, there is a possibility you might do something unwise that could prove costly for you at a later date. Be careful.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan.

19) You'll know that you'll want to implement change to benefit you and your family, yet you might be dissuaded today and settle for something far less desirable.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Don't let your emotions make judgments for you today that should be made by your logic alone. How you feel about something might not be commensurate with what is occurring in the real world.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Try to draw a line today between your social life and your commercial life. Business or financial dealings with friends might not work out too well.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) If you are planning an informal activity today, don't include people who do not mix well with one another. This could sour the entire event.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Someone to whom you make a promise today will take you at your word and he or she will be extremely disappointed if you fail to come through.
