Loser By A Nose

A treatise on hay fever, written by Dr. Harry Swartz, calls attention to the amount of manpower lost to industry and business because of this allment, which according to previous estimates affilets about two per cent of the popu-

Dr. Swartz points out that estimates of time lost are based on the number of sufferers under treatment, and hazards the guess that there is probably a considerable number of other hay fever victims not receiving treatment. Hay fever was long considered simply a misfortune of the individual, and specific treatments have been found only in stands now, the picture can be recent years, so it is entirely likely that there still are victims who do not trouble themselves to seek medical aid.

The estimate, based on the number of bay fever sufferers among doctors' patients is that five and a half million working days are lost each year because of the affliction. This is a substantial loss, but Dr. Swartz thinks the figure is too conservative. He thinks that if industry should become aroused over this loss, and enlist the aid of medicine and the government in a concerted drive against hay fover, the ailment could be controlled.

The hay fever victim himself will probably not be much impressed by the total of lost working days. From the start of the hay fever season until its end he finds himself with little interest in anything except his nose, his eyes and whatever other items of his anatomy may be affected. If ecok re-election. Apparently the Scottish Church to the wealthy alarm over the fact that industry is losing by a nose can lead to effective action on the matter, well and good. But don't bother the victim about economic details. The only thing he's bothered about is the fact that his nose is the one which is lonbing.
