Italy's Future Appears Gloomy

Although the future of the Italian government remains in a muddle after the recent elections, there is no getting around the fact that the Communists were substantial winners. The power of the Christian Democrats and other anti-Communist parties to ward off Communist demands for a voice in the national government has been weakened, perhaps fatally.

The Christian Democrats "won" this election only in terms of regaining ground they lost in regional elections a year ago and finishing with 38.8 per cent of the vote for the Chamber of Deputies about the same strength they showed in the national elections of 1972. The Communist Party, however, garnered a healthy 34.5 per cent compared to 27.2 per cent in 1972 - and apparently did so at the expense of smaller, moderate parties that have traditionally sided with the Christian

The jockeying which now begins to form a government most certainly will see an effort by the Socialists — the third ranking party — to demand greater recognition of the Communists as a condition for co-operating with Christian Democrats in a new government. For the Christian Democrats to resist, as they are inclined to do, could produce a government so weak and unstable that still further political crises loom in the future, with all the more opportunity for the Communists to profit on the

There seems to be a difference of opinion in local Democratic circles regarding the "Sunshine In Politics" amendment. At a meeting of the Seminole County Democratic Executive Committee last week, State Rep. Robert Hattaway (D.-Altamonte Springs) referred to the amendment as the 'Sunshine Law' while Newman Brock, a well-known local attorney, countered with the position that he questioned the title of the amendment.

Rep. Hattaway, you'll recall, tried, unsuccessfully, to amend the current Government In The Sunshine law so that it wouldn't be a violation if two or more governing officials met, so long as a quorum wasn't present.

It has been pointed out many times in this corner that such an amendment would destroy the Sunshine law in that two officials could meet in private, then split up and go on to meet with other officials and possibly decide the fate of any pending legislation behind closed doors. Thus, when a public meeting or hearing was held on the legislation, the powers-that-be who would vote on same would merely be casting a token vote, having already decided-out of the public's ear-

Sunshine Law. He was referring to Gov. Reuben Askew's amendment which would require full financial disclosure of all public officials.

"I feel the way to restore trust in public officials is contained in the amendment," Hawaway said. He stressed the most important part of the proposed amendment was the mandatory full and public financial disclosure for all elected constitutional officers and candidates.

Hattaway further said the amendment would make any public official who used his position for private gain liable for the full sum he had appropriated and the amendment would also hold liable those persons or parties with whom the public official had been involved.

He went on to say that the taxpayers would not have to pay retirement funds to those officials convicted of a felony and stated the amendment would effectively stop any official from lobbying or obtaining financial gain from his position for a book, titled "The Educational Theories of the Sophists" (Teachers College Press, Columbia University), editor James Jarrett writes of such men as Protagoras and Isocrates that "at their worst they were unscrupulous and irresponsible coaches who respected nought but power and saw their own skills in emotive eloquence and verbal trickery as eminently salable in a society of self-styled politicians climbing on top of each other in a frantic race for eminence." Such Sophists still exist and one such individual is Terry Herndon, the executive director of the National Education Association.

Testifying recently before the Democratic Platform Committee, even while conceding that the federal government's fiscal efforts in education are "chaotic" and "a morass," Mr. Herndon nonetheless urged that Uncle Sam take "its rightful place in funding education" by increasing its financing from its present $5

Seeking to leave the impression that education in America is being starved to death, Mr. Herndon made all the usual arguments of the professional educationists: present school financing is inequitable, the average annual perpupil expediture differs among the states, etc. At one point he declared:

"In the end, federal money to education increases by a few hundred million dollars. At the same time, defense spending increases by more than the total amount spent on education by the federal government." Our national priorities Patricia R. Amat must be reordered, says Herndon.
