FIRST DUTY OF the Gazette de Lausanne:

Many of Them Sympathize With the Allies, but Demand Fair Treatment.

STANDS BETWEEN TWO FIRES

European Republic Declines to Be Overswed by Powerful Neighbors -Refuses to Starve or Be Driven Bankrupt—Would Fight for Rights.

By EDGAR ANSEL MOWRER, (Correspondent of the Chicago News.) Lausanne, Switzerland.-Selgnobos his "Histoiro Politique de l'Europe Contemporaine," begins his chapter on Switzerland as follows:

. "The interest of Swiss history must not be measured by the size of the country. This little country holds a very important place in the history of contemporary European institutions. To whoever desires to understand the evolution of our modern democratic society, this bistory may be recommended as the most instructive selection of examples of the application of the principle of popular sovereignty."

Foreigners who know Switzerland, with or without having visited it, as a | from my territories of a whole series country of tourists, hotels, mountains, picturesque chalets, mountain rallroads, glaciers, milk chocolate, St. Gall embroideries, cheese and refuges for revolutionists, may be pleased to know that of all the people of Europe the Swiss have, historically, been the most belligerently tenacious of their independence and that they are today the people who have gone farthest in the realm of popular government

The "initiative" has been general since 1848, and the "referendum," considered a most radical, modernist measure, came in about the same time Proportional representation was adopted by the Italian canton of Ticino as far back as 1891

German Element Is Strong.

The Swiss confederation counts to day approximately 3,450,000 inhabi tauta, of whom about 200,000 are Ital the ailies, has been to make the Swiss ian by race and language, 750,000 con | conscious of their nationality and to sider themselves French and the registart a wave of patriotism. Negotiamaining 2,500,000 speak German. Thus tions are going on to regulate the matimportant. It can control in federative political matters. The French cantons, with the important centers of Geneva and Lausanne and their excellent newspapers, play intellectually a role somewhat beyond that presumed by their numerical inferiority. The Italian element is relatively insigni-Beaut, although one of the most bril liant of the government ministers Sig Motta, comes from the Tiemo

So much by the way of prelude to a presentation of Switzerland's posttion during the present great war.

At the beginning of hostilities the French and Italian cantons manifested a sturdy but inoffersive sympathy for the allies. The German cantons. to the contrary, gave vent to a strigle strong burst of Germanophilia I have not taken account of the individuals whose sympathies are always with the side-uppermost

Today, though by stages so imperceptible that they cannot be traced, the situation has become "different Here in Romansh Switzerland the population is still overwhelmingly proallies. There is little German in the streets or in the stores. As soon as Italy entered the war the Ticinese pronounced for Italy It is not an exaggeration to say that, notwithstanding the German speaking majority, there are now in the country as many open adherents of the allies as of the Austro-Germans. This means that a large number of persons who speak Gorman favor the nations of the quadruple alliance, particularly France.

Swiss Industry Badly Hurt. But a new economic problem has appeared and is forcing people to face It squarely. Switzerland, accustomed In time of peace to derive considerable profit from its fine scenery and its central position, flow pays heavily for the latter. A large proportion of the national army has been mobilized at considerable expense and kept under arms since August, 1914. Industry is suffering. The foreigner comes but rarely to the countless hotels, which stand bleak and deserted like so many gigantic mausoleums. Only a few homeless individuals from foreign parts lofter in the streets-fow by comparison with former years. Even the exiled revolutionary has quit the little country where he for so many years found sanctuary. A. few frontier towns are centeral of espionage and intrigue. That is all. The sun rises alone over the glaclers' fair desplation. There are no touriste, whileoring with cold and delight to welcome his upcoming or to turn away to hurry down the last slope homeward as he sets behind the purple mountains.

The country suffers from the loss of tourists. But most of all it suffers from the bonds and restrictions with which the warring nations, and chiefly those which command the sea, are endeavoring to correct it. During a year the strings have been drawn ever tighter and tighter. Because she lacks a seaport Switzerland can near here in one season.

Is Between Two Fires. The situation finds adequate expression in the words, of a contributor to

"Germany and Austria have said to Switzerland: 'We are perfectly willing to deliver you such raw materials as you lack. But you must give us in exchange not money but certain products of which the allies' blockade deprives us and which we need.' The allies object to this, saying to Switzerland: 'From the beginning of the war we have placed our ships and our trains at your service, and, unlike our enemies, we have never thought of imposing compensations in goods upon you. In the future, as in the past, we are quite willing to furnish you with raw materials as well as with foodstuffs. Only, desiring that our blockade be effective, we ask you to give your word not to pass on in any form whatever to our enemies that which we procure for you."

"Switzerland replies to the allies: I am grateful to you for supplying me with foodstuffs and raw materials without demanding compensation. Masters of the ocean, you have been able to do me this service, like good neighbors. Germany and Austria, although blockaded by your fleets, have also done what they could for me. Driven by need, they asked me to pay them in goods, while continuing. to pay you in specie, and I have not refused, being myself hard, pressed and neutral—that is, equally friendly to all and unwillingly to increase difficulties. In the meantime your fears are groundless, for I have taken care formally to forbid the exportation of goods of urgent necessity. And I am always on the watch for smug-

Needs of Swiss Industry.

'On the other hand, my industries must live in spite of your war, on account of which I, though perfectly innocent, suffer more than you, perhaps, believe. And in order that my industries be not ruined they must be permitted to re-export to all countries the articles manufactured from raw materials furnished by no matter what bulligerent I am neutral of my own free will, but with your approbatton. That is why, although I have obligations toward you (and I do not deny them), that you also have a few toward me, of which the lirst and es sential is to let me live.

Here is the situation in a nutshell The result of pressure from both sides; but principally from the side of Leighbors by establishing a Swiss control of all foreign trade with a view to doing away with chances for cheating For the people will not listen to propositions from wither side offering compensation after the war. They want the difficulty done away with now, immediately

While you fight?" Certainly if topfiel so it. We refuse to starve or be driven bankrupt. England and France and Italy must be brought to rentize this fact or face the consequences."

But your personal sympathies, an you have just told me, are with the countries you mention."

That is true. But you must realtze that before we are Geiman, French or Italian we hre Swiss. We have our own, country, if look after. In any but an extreme gase an attempt by the German speaking many to force the notion into war attached the allies would mean an illumentiate run ture between us and them and so bring about the ruin of Switzerland But if the present restrictions, alfendy bad, grow heavier instead of lighter, if the allies, cannot be persuaded By, our diplomats that although we ask only to live we put our entire strength behind this demands Mon Bernan, French or Italian spoulting along here. be, we shall fight side be saids the n single man, as we would do tomor row at the slighted interesting of the territorial rights.
