CHINESE MOTIF BRINGS DESIRED STYLE NOVELTY

ONCE upon a time there was a little girl who had all the clothes she wanted!

Imagine! But the little girl was an actress, and actresses must have a lot of clothes. They lead double lives, and must have two sets of clothes—one set for the characters they portray and one set for themselves, to wear off stage.

If the actress is a movie actress, she of course plays more characters in a working year than an actress of the stage—so SHE must have even more clothes than anyone you can imagine.

Oh, yes! Once there was a little girl who had all the clothes she wanted. That's the beginning. And she had had so many her head was in a whirl. So when it was time to appear in her latest picture, she didn't know what in the world to wear. Just like Every Other Woman. She'd tried dozens of frocks, Empire frocks, moynage frocks, eighteen-eighty frocks, ever so many frocks of ever so many periods. So she went to China for a change, to get her inspiration. And there is the result, right above, in the photo. The suit is silk, and the silk, its tassels, its buttons, motifs, embroidery, and hat are from China. The girl is from America. Betty

Compton, of the Paramount studios. And this is the new costume she chose to wear in James Cruze's production, "The Garden of Weeds."

The suit is in a faint coral, and beige. The motifs are delicate things embroidered in the same colors, with rare touches of Chinese blue, turquoise, jade, and just a glint of gold. The tassels are beige, with coral beads.

The shoes are beige, and are trimmed in coral bindings. The hat is mainly gold, with the same sort of embroidery on it that appears in the motifs on the coat.

All in all, the little ensemble suit is a happy blending of Eastern charm and coloring with Western chic and style.

Finding herself in a mood for things like this, Miss Compton got herself a hat like the one sketched at the lower left of the layout. It has one of the new pointed crowns, and is surmounted by a round piece of jade, from which falls a long silken tassel.

In the upper right hand corner is a bit of white jade, carved into an attractive design and hung on a silk cord. This ornament Miss Compton wears with her Chinese suit—and she carries the embroidered pocketbook that appears below, at the right.

day afternoon by a most timely and interesting address by Judge J. G. Sharon of Sanford on "Respect for Law." The speaker dwelt with great emphasis on the personal responsibility of every citizen not only to respect the law himself, but in every way and by all proper means to teach others that respect for law is the formation of good citizenship.

DAYS OF ADVENTURE

Thrilling Episodes of Fort Mellon's Early History Experienced by Ancestors of many present Day Sanford People

HOW early settlers at Fort Mellon contended against the hostilities of the Indians and for many years in constant preparation for renewed hostilities reared their families and protected their wives and children against lawless depredations, is the story found in the dusty annals of this district by those investigating the historical significance of Sanford's newest subdivision. Many of these hardy pioneers who thus fought against almost overwhelming odds that their children might have the wonderful advantage of living in this rich and healthful section, are the grand parents and the great grand parents of well known and eminently respected present day Sanford citizens.

A DAUGHTER of Mr. Hughey tells the interesting story of those thrilling days of excitement and the horror she and her family felt when one day a young son of Dr. Speer, who at that time owned the finest orange grove in Florida, came running to her home, shouting "The Indians are coming! The Indians are coming!" She quickly spread a sheet upon the floor, and throwing her small collection of valuables into it, bundled it up and together with her brood of little ones, dashed to the home of Dr. Speer about a half mile away.

THERE she found all the men in the neighborhood hastily fortifying the sturdy old log cabin, and the women grouped together in the hallway moulding bullets for the old muzzle loaders. The cabin consisted of two rooms and open hallway between. In preparing for defense this hallway was hurriedly closed at both ends by logs thrown up for the purpose. The windows of the adjacent rooms were also temporarily closed by means of fence rails. Around the cabin and about ten feet from it was temporarily thrown up provisional earth works. All was soon in readiness to withstand a long siege.

SUDDENLY a heart rendering shriek rent the air from the direction of the woods. Blood stopped flowing in the veins of the gallant little band of defenders. A moment later a black and almost denuded figure practically flew from the woods like a low lying thunder cloud on a stormy day, and soon was recognized the faithful old negro mammy of one of the settlers. Black Amanda, she was, and as soon as her wide nostrils alone could supply her body with breath, she told her story.

AS she had bent over her wash under an old oak tree on the edge of the woods, suddenly without even the cracking of a twig as warning, two Indians had pounced upon her from behind, and gaging her with her own apron, they had led her away through the woods. Finally the trio came to a little opening in the woods where there were many more Indians and in the center a tall pole around which had been piled dead underbrush. At the sight of this Amanda became greatly alarmed and decided that she hadn't cut wood and carried around huge tubs of wash all her life for nothing. With a powerful slidesweep of her huge black arms she swept the two Indians aside, tearing much of her clothing from her person, and with a spring like a panther, she was off to the woods. The Indians followed, but Amanda had the fear of the gods in her and was not to be caught. Such was the life of the early residents at Fort Mellon.

NIGHT TALKS WITH AUNT EMMY

NOT GETTING FLATTERED

Somehow, Aunt Emmy, it seems to me when I read of all the people who are investing in stock and bond transactions, can you know who is honest with what stocks and bonds are to buy?" queried Jane.

"I see, Aunt," said Jane, "you should always know whom you're dealing with and not get excited and rush into anything just because it sounds flattering and thrilling."
