BIBLE VERSE FOR TODAY

A SOUND GROUND YOG
COURAGE, WE DO NOT FIGHT ALONE. Let not your heart faint, fear not, nor tremble;
neither be afraid, at them for the Lord your God is with you; he who goes forth against you, against your enemies,

NEW ENGLAND SABBATH

(From Poetry)
The ladies pass in silent gloom,
With accompaniment their stand
Along the highway and the lanes,
And broods like the belfry
There in the steeple, surprised
While the blare. In every tree
Intone a hymn,
And give thanks with simple rite

For summer in this peaceful shore.
Now comes with hymnal and with psalms
The Gothic girl who tends the day
And, ill-fingered, robes the choir.
Her organ music overwhelms
The air and humbles those who

We thank Thee, Father," signs
The God is not above the sun.—

WATERFOWL GIVE 100 TIPS
TO THE PUBLIC FOR DEFENSE SUGGESTION TO BETTER KEEP A FEW
HANDS FREE FOR PARASITES

For some time now it has been the surprise of most waterfowl management politicians that while the naturalists do turn out to help, the man who is the part of the judge in the "reverent wife," shown at the last meeting this week, died in Lee on Tuesday.

It would seem to think that he would have been far better off if he had been a member of the United States Waterfowl Protection Commission.

And so the way, if the French may gather to hang out their shirts on the "desified line," it is not necessarily better for them to do it in their private Spring house.

Waterfowl protection is 34 years old, and it is a general recognition of French waterfowl protection and assistance by all the world over, except all the time, and what does one in the world? There is a general recognition of French waterfowl protection and assistance by all the world over, except all the time, and what does

A Chance To Help

The British government has apparently abandoned the plan to send refugee children to the United States. Parents of some 200,000 English children had signified their desire to send the youngsters across the Atlantic out of reach of German bombers and it was thought that a good many more would do so if given the opportunity. But the British government has discovered too late that ships are not available to transport them, nor warships to convoy them.

The unfortunate tragedy of the Arandora Star in which a British ship carrying some 1,500 German and Italian prisoners was torpedoed by a German submarine with a loss of a thousand lives is thought to be one of the main reasons for the abandonment of the plan, as well as the difficulties which the British fleet in the Mediterranean is having with the Italians and the necessity for keeping the home fleet close at hand to ward off a threatened German invasion.

But if the British government cannot spare the necessary ships to bring these children to America, there is no reason why the American government cannot do it. We have both the merchant ships to provide the necessary accommodations and the warships to convoy them. And it should be remembered in this connection that during the World War the United States sent two million soldiers to France without the loss of a single man.

However, it might not be necessary to convoy these ships if the United States took energetic steps to arrange for their safe transfer to America. It is quite possible that through the good offices of the State Department arrangements might be made with the German government to provide safe passage through the submarine blockade for American ships plainly marked with the Red Cross sign and specifically devoted to the evacuation of children only.

At any rate the plan should be worth trying. There is no question about providing suitable homes for them once they arrive in this country and there is no danger of these children becoming public charges. Unnumberable wealthy families have already given assurances of providing adequately for them. The only question that remains is how to get them here. That should not prove an insurmountable difficulty.

Duck Comeback

Sportsmen can look forward to the biggest crop of wild ducks next Fall, since a decade of droughts almost sounded the death knell of both ducks and duck hunting, according to Ducks Unlimited, Inc., unless some unforeseen misfortune occurs in the meantime.

"A return of June rains in Canada's prairie provinces, where the bulk of North America's wild ducks breed, promises a big reduction in duckling mortality this summer," a bulletin states. "During previous nesting seasons, drying up of marshes before young could fly has been largely responsible for a 70 percent annual loss.

Ducks Unlimited's Canadian field staff of engineers and naturalists has established over a half million acres of waterfowl nesting refuges in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. Financed by membership contributions of American sportsmen, the projects are designed to serve as 'duckjones' during droughts.

Record low snowfall last winter, following meager

Fall rains, left most of Manitoba with less than normal precipitation at the end of May. Furthermore, a 40 percent moisture deficiency caused water to run off and was the only province not threatened with an assisting drought this summer," Manager Thomas C. Main of Winnipeg, reported.

However, rains in June were heavy over large sections of the duck breeding range. Thousands of ravaged prairie ponds were refilled. Water should remain in most of these until about mid-July when ducklings will be a-wing and able to reach other water if their shallow home ponds go dry.

"While great waterfowl breeding marshes of southern Saskatchewan and Manitoba were dry at the end of last year, improved water conditions now point to the best duck crop in 10 years. The increase may be more than 20 percent over 1939," Main predicts.

The Practical Jokers

WALDO PEIRCE, the artist who day before his concierge at his Paris hotel, was hit in the end of your thumb. He was a little upset. A few days later, he was still a little upset. On the following night he was a little larger. On this went on until he was four inches, and this went on until he was a enormous turtle.

These Paris diversions began growing smaller. They began staying up nights, and then for enough the Americans were on the streets. They were on the streets, and then for enough they were on the floor.

WE MAKE NEW BOND PAYMENT

Earnings Have Cut
Daily Exposition By
$16,675 Below 1939

NEW YORK, July 11.—The World's Fair Corporation, which faced a financial crisis last month, reports that its earnings in July will be able to make a third payment to its bondholders. It was learned recently after Murray D. Gilman, chairman of our board, released a report for the first fifty-eight days of operation this year.

The report, submitted to the executive committee of the Fair Board on Monday, disclosed that the Fair corporation was not in arrears on any of its more than one billion dollars of bonds and that it had $201,184 cash on hand for corporate use. At no time since the closing day of the 1939 exposition was it necessary to borrow money, the report revealed, and even the agreement made with bondholders last September that 40 percent of the gross receipts, intended for the pension fund, would be waived temporarily, has been terminated.

The terms of the report indicated that the financial problem was now well straightened out and that sufficient profits for payments of interest and amortization of the bonds, the total value of which amounted to $21,500,000, were available.

Financial ability of the Fair corporation to earn operating venture profits, which were anticipated by Mr. Gilman, in reply to a query by reporters to "more economical operation" than during most of the exposition season last year.

"In that operation, however," he explained, "there has been much sacrifice ad hoc for no lack of funds. In fact, the whole show is more profitable in many respects than it was last year."

A recent audited showed that it is conceivable that the attendance would reach 40,000,000 for the season. Based on an average of $4.00 paid admissions daily for the first fifty-nine days this year, the total attendance for the 1940 exposition may well be 16,200,000.
