Accused abusers avoiding list

TALLAHASSEE — By refusing to accept certified letters, thousands of people accused of being child abusers have kept their names off Florida's official list, a state official said.

A change in state law two years ago requires that alleged abusers receive notice in a certified letter that the Department of Health and Rehabilitative Services had investigated and planned to add their names to the registry.

Since the state can't legally move forward without knowledge that the notice was received, the cases are put in limbo.

"The last time we counted, about 70 percent of the total number of letters were returned because they were refused delivery," Rex Uberman, whose office oversees the registry, told the St. Petersburg Times in a story published Thursday.

That's about 16,000 cases. About 10 percent of them involve allegations of abuse of elderly or disabled adults. The rest involve children.

Magic, wife have baby boy

LOS ANGELES — Earvin "Magic" Johnson and his wife, Cookie Kelly, are the parents of a baby boy.

Mother and son were in excellent health Thursday night, and neither was infected with HIV, the virus that causes AIDS, said their obstetrician, Dr. Scott Serden.

The couple "brought a little magic into the world today when they announced the birth of their son, Earvin Johnson III," Cedars-Sinai Hospital and Johnson's agent said Thursday in a statement.

The baby, born Thursday night, was 20 inches long and weighed 7 pounds, 15 ounces.

"The father is said to be looking forward to many late-night feedings and endless diaper changes," the statement said.

Schools may lose fees

By J. MARK BARFIELD
Herald Staff Writer

SANFORD — Almost 10,000 homes will be built in Seminole County without paying the proposed school impact fee, most without any school fee at all.

A county survey completed this week of planned developments in the unincorporated areas of the county and the seven cities shows 9,144 homes can be built with either no school fee or no more than $300 per home.

A total of 6,177 units will be built without paying any school fee. Of the units that are exempt from the proposed fee, developers have committed to pay $200 for each of 1,067 units. Developers have agreed to pay $300 each when another 1,910 units are built.

In all, developers of the homes, condominiums and apartments agreed to pay less than $600,000 in contributions. They will not pay more than $11.1 million in impact fees, if the fees are approved.

Almost half the units that won't pay any fee are in Heathrow, which offered two school sites to Seminole County schools instead of cash. A total of 3,080 homes can be built in the exclusive subdivision west of Lake Mary without payment of any school fee.

Seminole County commissioners will consider adopting the school fee next month. If approved, the fee will take effect in October.

School officials have proposed a $1,384 fee for single family homes, $650 per multi-family unit and $665 for new mobile homes. School officials want a fee to raise $44.4 million during the next five years to support a $154.3 million school construction program. State revenues will fill the balance of the construction fund.

In preparation for charging developers should the fee be approved, county planners reviewed all of the development agreements they have signed during the past five years that addressed school fees. In April, the majority of the county commissioners opposed a school board request to impose the proposed fees on all new construction. Only commissioner Larry Furlong supported the school board position.

Commissioners Jennifer Kelley, Fred Streetman, Bob Sturm and Pat Warren said the county had written contracts with the developers committing to either no fee or some other fee. To change the fee or charge them a fee represented the breaking of a contract, they said.

The research has found that of 55 residential

Hamilton's new Environmental Center is now officially open

By VICKI BOGNER
Herald Staff Writer

SANFORD — After more than a year of planning and hard work, the Hamilton Elementary School Environmental Center officially opened last night.

"It's been a lot of work," Richard Gregg, who has been the driving force behind the project, said. "But if you look at the center and see how it looks and what it will do for the community, you'll see it was worth it."

The center, which was planted in an unused area outside the school at 1501 E. 8th St., Sanford, now includes trees that are rarely found in the Central Florida area though they were once abundant here.

The trees and plants that are located in the center are designed to not only beautify the area, but also to attract animals and birds to the park.

As part of the school the environmental center was planned as a study facility as well as an attractive "green spot" for the community. A boardwalk snakes its way through the center to an observation deck where students will be able to observe the flora and fauna without interrupting it.

Gregg and the teaching staff at Hamilton worked with educational specialists from the University of Florida to develop a curriculum for each elementary grade level that is based on the center's plants and the animals it will attract.

Gregg said that most of the work at the environmental center is done.

"We need to do some final touch up work on it," he said. "But we wanted to do the grand opening the same (school) year as the physical work began."

The boardwalk that makes its way through the center will be engraved with the names of all of those who donated time, labor or materials to the project.

Gregg said he did not know how many

Lauderdale now classifies a resignation as one of "several options."

Scholarship board set up

By MARK PFEIFFER
Herald Staff Writer

SANFORD — The Greater Sanford Chamber of Commerce is establishing a Scholarship Foundation. The organization will provide financial assistance to college bound high school graduates.

The Chamber has provided scholarships to graduates for many years through its Education Committee, "but this will be a board all its own," said Chamber President Bob Douglas.

"Right now there are just five of us involved in the project," he said. "Two of them are the original organizers of the scholarship fund, 'Duke' Adamson and Karen Coleman. The others are Chamber Executive Director Dave Farr, and myself, with Attorney Frank Whigham helping us draw up the papers to establish the corporation."

"We are also meeting with Dr. Bill Baker, director of institutional advancement at Seminole Community College," Douglas said. "He has helped set up 11 other foundations similar to what we plan, and he is giving us some excellent advice." He added, "One of his suggestions is to have a larger than normal board, possibly 12 to 15, which would include the Chamber Executive Director and the Chairperson of the Education Committee."

Prior to this time, the Chamber has been actively

Olinger heads historic trust

By LAGY BOMER
Herald People Editor

SANFORD — The Sanford Historic Trust Thursday night elected new officers and three new members to its board of directors.

Sue Olinger will serve a year-long term as president of the group of citizens concerned with the preservation and renovation of Sanford's historic district.

Other officers include Julia Goeb, vice president; Bert Padgett, secretary; John Meeks, treasurer. New members of the board are Monte Olinger, Walt Padgett and Jean Fowler. Remaining on the board are Bob Casals and Michael Goeb. Laura Straehla will head the Duany project.

Olinger had served as chairman of the Duany project in which world renowned Miami architect Andres Duany conducted brainstorming sessions with interested citizens and officials before formulating a plan for the historic district's future. Historic Trust members and city officials are now reviewing the plan for implementation.

Olinger said this morning she has already begun to map her agenda for the coming year.

"This is such a special group. I want to keep the high level of energy all the members have. We will continue to keep centered on the preservation of our neighborhood," Olinger said.

Her plans include organizing field trips for anyone interested in traveling to historic towns such as Madison, Ga.

Citizens asked to help rebuild burned church

By VICKI BOGNER
Herald Staff Writer

SANFORD — Money received from an insurance policy on the Progress Missionary Baptist Church in Sanford will not be enough to rebuild the church after a fire damaged the building in April.

Ed Lewis wants the community to help him help the church rise from the ashes.

Lewis, with the help of members of the church's congregation and the Midway community surrounding it, has organized a fundraiser which will take place in the parking lot of Farmer's Furniture, on U.S. Highway 17-92 in Sanford, tomorrow beginning at 9 a.m.

"Anybody and everybody is welcome to come on out for this," Lewis said.

Lewis, who owns an antique fire engine that he has used in the past to bring attention to other fundraising cause such as the push to raise money to pay for a heart transplant for Nancy Dukes last year.

"I used to sit up on the top of the ladder, but I can't do that since I had back surgery," he said.

Lewis said that various members of the community approached him about doing the fundraiser.

"They believe this is a good cause," he said. "And I agree."

The fundraiser will include a variety of activities that will help bring in money to help reconstruct the Midway landmark.

On Saturday, for a small donation toward the church rebuilding fund, however, Lewis will take a photo of anyone who wants to pose with Lewis' old hook and ladder.

In addition, Lewis said, many baked items have been donated to be sold at Saturday's fundraiser.

"They've promised me there're going to be some really tasty treats," Lewis said.

There will also be a plant sale and some garage sale items available.

NEWS FROM THE REGION AND ACROSS THE STATE

Defense cuts to cost many jobs

Associated Press

FORT LAUDERDALE — A peacetime defense budget before the House of Representatives could cost Florida up to 14,000 jobs next year and 45,000 by the end of the decade, a newspaper reported.

The cuts pinching contractors would be concentrated geographically near Cape Canaveral, but nearly every part of the state would be touched.

With the House considering a defense spending plan containing $7 billion less than President Bush is seeking, politicians in Washington and Tallahassee have moved to protect Florida jobs.

U.S. Sen. Bob Graham, D-Fla., and U.S. Rep. Jim Bacchus, D-Orlando, responded Wednesday by introducing their Defense

Workers Economic Reinvestment Act as House debate opened on a $274 billion military appropriations bill.

"We're not talking about 'make work.' We're talking about high-tech public works," Bacchus told the Sun-Sentinel in Fort Lauderdale for Thursday's edition.

Gov. Lawton Chiles also has launched a project to convert defense work into private commercial ventures.

The federal legislation would:
• pay for defense workers' retraining and job placement;

• provide $419 million a year in federal grants and offer state grants for job-generating advanced technology projects;

• offer loans and grants for turning high-tech research into commercial products.

The program would cost $3.8 billion over four years, all of it coming from defense savings, Bacchus said.

Chiles' idea is to retrain workers and encourage businesses to turn from building warplanes and missiles to developing space stations and super computers for peacetime applications.

Florida's 246,215 defense-related jobs include 119,406 with contractors, subcontractors or vendors, according to the Defense Budget Project, an independent research group.

The Defense Department says the potential number of lost jobs in the state's defense industry by 2000 would be 36,000 to 45,000, not counting military personnel.

Florida now has $5 billion in defense contracts and $6 billion in military operations.

Bank records could become public

TALLAHASSEE — Records of failed state banks would become public under a bill that the House sent to the Senate on a 105-4 vote.

The legislation, which is identical to bills that previously passed the House but died in the upper chamber, would also impose a campaign contribution limit of $100 to the comptroller from those regulated by the office.

The limit is $600 now, but Comptroller Gerald Lewis recently came out in favor of the lower amount.

Lawmakers must re-enact Florida laws governing financial institutions by July 1 or they expire. Current law keeps records of failed institutions secret forever.

Under the bill (HB 854), those records would become public 30 days after the institution is shut down.

The provision is partly a reaction to the failure of Miami's Centrust Savings Bank, whose records would become open July 1 if the measure becomes law.

Libraries may benefit from lottery

TALLAHASSEE — Public libraries would get an extra $5.2 million a year from unclaimed lottery prizes under a bill a Senate panel has approved.

But although the Governmental Operations Committee approved the bill, panel members asked sponsor Sen. George Kirkpatrick to consider using lottery administrative dollars instead of prize money for libraries.

The legislation (SB 1548) has two more committee stops before it reaches the Senate floor.

"Maybe we'll just take a little more administrative funds," Kirkpatrick, D-Ocala, said Wednesday. "But the facts are they (lottery officials) don't ever spend all of the unclaimed prize money."

Under current law, the Lottery Department can use unclaimed prize money to boost prizes for instant ticket games. They say bigger prizes stimulate more sales and reap more dollars for education in the long run.

Thirty-eight cents of every $1 ticket sold goes to education.

Amtrak delays service

JACKSONVILLE — Amtrak announced it would delay the start of its Miami-Los Angeles service from October until April to allow for extensive track and signal modifications on the eastern leg.

Amtrak had hoped to begin the service this fall, but CBX Transportation, which owns the tracks, said it will take nine months to complete the modifications to allow the passenger trains to operate at acceptable speeds.

"If this train is to be a success, we must be in a position to provide our passengers with a quality service from its inception," said Amtrak President W. Graham Claytor Jr. said Thursday.

The Sunset Limited is now scheduled to begin operating three days a week April 4, 1993. Linking cities from Los Angeles to Miami, Amtrak said the train would be its first regularly scheduled transcontinental train.

The cross-country trip will take about 58 hours and take passengers through California, Arizona, New Mexico, Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama and Florida.

Informant collects living expenses

MIAMI — A star informant in a court corruption scandal has collected $31,000 for living expenses and $23,174 for telephone bills since November, court records show.

"I'd like to know what planet he called," said Stephen Bronis, attorney for suspended Dade County Judge Harvey Shenberg, one of four current or former judges indicted in the Operation Court Broom probe.

The informant is Raymond Takiff, a former attorney for Manuel Noriega. Takiff owes $410,054 in back taxes and penalties, but that amount is expected to be waived.

Ethics violation dismissed

TALLAHASSEE — An appeals court has dismissed an ethics violation against Florida's former chief fair ride inspector, who resigned after a teen-ager was killed at the 1988 Broward County Fair.

Wallace Rich was cleared by the First District Court of Appeal of having violated state law for accepting $100 from a ride company doing freelance inspection work in the Tampa area in 1984.

Another $1,400 in fines against Rich were unaffected by the ruling. The Ethics Commission is expected to formally adopt the court ruling today.

"We believe this is finally the last step in the case," Rich's attorney, Scott Makar, said on Wednesday.

Rich resigned his state job in 1989 amid charges involving cronyism and misuse of public office. Most of the charges were dismissed by the Ethics Commission following a lengthy hearing in 1990.

Lawmakers: Permits for tobacco sale

By GUY ANDERSON, Associated Press Writer

TALLAHASSEE — Using licenses for merchants and tougher penalties for violators, lawmakers are again hoping to enforce state laws prohibiting sales of tobacco to minors.

"We all know what tobacco does," said the sponsor, Sen. John Grant. "It kills people. When smokers start young, they have a hard time quitting."

The legislation (SB 1524), which cleared the Senate Finance, Taxation and Claims Committee on a 7-0 vote Thursday, is aimed at enforcing current laws that ban sales of tobacco products to people under 18. A 1989 study found that 82 percent of minors who wanted to buy cigarettes were able to do so.

If the bill becomes law, an estimated 29,000 establishments where tobacco products are sold would have to get a dealer permit from the state. That would include places where there's a tobacco vending machine.

The permit would cost $50 or less and would have to be renewed every year.

Violations could be punished through a non-criminal fine of up to $500, and the Department of Business Regulation could suspend or revoke the tobacco permit. The agency could also levy a $1,000 administrative fine.

"It gives us the ability to control the sale of tobacco, much the same way we control the sale of alcohol," said Grant, R-Tampa.

Groups such as the American Lung Association and American Heart Association say Florida would lead the way for the nation on restricting access of minors to cigarettes and other tobacco products.

"This will serve as model legislation for the country," said Beth Labasky, a lobbyist for the Lung Association.

Merchants could require people to show proof of age before selling tobacco products and vending machines would have to be located where an employee could see them under the bill.

The $1.4 million raised by the new permits would mostly pay for 32 new DBR agents to enforce the law.

Bridging the gap

Like a giant honeycomb, a bridge embankment for the Seminole County expressway rises at the edge of County Road 427 west of South Sanford Avenue. By the end of next year, the $200 million four-lane tollroad, to be named the "GreeneWay," will connect Sanford with Orange County. Planners are already designing the final link of the road between U.S. Highway 17-92 and Interstate 4.

Witness who fingered cartel bomber, Noriega, fears for life

By ROBERT COLE, Associated Press Writer

MIAMI — A witness who revealed a plan by Colombian drug barons to bomb U.S. courts and drug agency headquarters, and also helped convict Manuel Noriega, has told his sentencing judge he fears for his life.

Roberto Striedinger, 44, a Medellin drug cartel pilot indicted with the ousted Panamanian leader, was sentenced to five years in prison Thursday.

He pleaded for mercy from U.S. District Judge William Hoever, saying that after he cooperated with U.S. authorities, three of his friends and relatives were murdered in Colombia, his uncle was beaten and his mother's apartment destroyed.

"I know that my future is bleak and uncertain," he said. "I know that I will be hunted and chased."

The judge took note of "the courage Mr. Striedinger has exhibited in assisting the government," and handed down a relatively light five-year sentence.

-Roberto Striedinger

Munoz planned "to organize a group to bomb critical government installations across the country (e.g., the Drug Enforcement Administration in San Diego and the United States courthouse in Miami) and kill an anticipated witness in the Noriega prosecution," the documents said.

Striedinger also aided drug agents by identifying Medellin cartel Pablo Escobar's top representative in Miami, a man known previously only as "Mr. Blue Jeans."

Striedinger told the DEA that the man was really Carlos Maya, now in a Miami federal prison. The one-time drug pilot also provided the names of witnesses in a Miami judicial corruption probe dubbed "Operation Court Broom."

And he gave information on a DEA supervisor who was selling sentence reduction recommendations to convicted criminals, apparently in California, the report said.

Striedinger in addition has helped German Secret Service agents conducting a drug investigation, said the documents.

New zoning ends land use hassle

By J. MARK SANFORD
Herald Staff Writer

SANFORD — A Sanford zoning change has cleared Viola Kastner from land use hassles from Property Appraiser Bill Suber this year.

Last year, Suber sought to deny the tax-saving agricultural classification on portions of two development sites owned by Kastner in west Sanford, saying they didn't meet the state requirements of a "bona fide" agricultural use.

Portions of Kastner's property in the two sites were the subject of a lawsuit brought last year against the county Property Appraisal Adjustment Board for allowing the classification on them. A Seminole County circuit judge dismissed the lawsuit, saying it was filed too late. Suber appealed the decision.

But the county's agricultural appraiser said Wednesday the Sanford rezoning forced them to accept the classification. The tax impact has not been calculated. The Kastner property, approved for homes and businesses, has been classified as a cattle business.

"When Sanford passed the special ordinance, we felt we couldn't fight it any more," said Ross Wontenay.

In December 1991, a split city commission approved agricultural uses on the two sites. One, named Southridge, is located at the northeast corner of Interstate 4 and County Road 46-A. The city approved development plan calls for 275 hotel rooms, 80,000 square feet of commercial space, 20,000 square feet of offices and includes a 12.7-acre residential site.

Northgate, located at the southeast corner of State Road 46 and I-4, includes 29 acres for commercial construction, about seven acres for offices and about 20 acres for residential uses.

Wontenay said 98 applications for new agricultural ventures were received this year and 42 were denied. None of the landowners identified in the lawsuit were denied agricultural classifications this year, said Wontenay.

Among the denials was county commission candidate Ari Davis. Davis had filed for the agricultural classification on a portion of his Lake Markham Road property for an ornamental palm business. Wontenay said he has requested additional information about the business and the classification may yet be allowed. Davis said he would comply.

Lawyer runs for new House seat

Associated Press

DAYTONA BEACH — Lawyer Dan Webster announced Tuesday he will run for the U.S. House of Representatives in a newly drawn district that is home to two incumbents.

Neither U.S. Reps. Bill McCollum nor Craig James is seeking the District 7 seat, which includes most of Seminole and Volusia counties.

Webster, 33, is the only announced candidate for the race. The Democrat and political newcomer has a $100,000 campaign fund.

Webster announced his candidacy Tuesday, one day after McCollum, R-Longwood, said he will leave District 7 and run in a predominantly Orange County district. James, who represents District 4, announced last month he wouldn't seek re-election.

New zoning ends land use hassle

By J. MARK SANFORD
Herald Staff Writer

SANFORD — A Sanford zoning change has cleared Viola Kastner from land use hassles from Property Appraiser Bill Suber this year.

Last year, Suber sought to deny the tax-saving agricultural classification on portions of two development sites owned by Kastner in west Sanford, saying they didn't meet the state requirements of a "bona fide" agricultural use.

Portions of Kastner's property in the two sites were the subject of a lawsuit brought last year against the county Property Appraisal Adjustment Board for allowing the classification on them. A Seminole County circuit judge dismissed the lawsuit, saying it was filed too late. Suber appealed the decision.

But the county's agricultural appraiser said Wednesday the Sanford rezoning forced them to accept the classification. The tax impact has not been calculated. The Kastner property, approved for homes and businesses, has been classified as a cattle business.

"When Sanford passed the special ordinance, we felt we couldn't fight it any more," said Ross Wontenay.

In December 1991, a split city commission approved agricultural uses on the two sites. One, named Southridge, is located at the northeast corner of Interstate 4 and County Road 46-A. The city approved development plan calls for 275 hotel rooms, 80,000 square feet of commercial space, 20,000 square feet of offices and includes a 12.7-acre residential site.

Northgate, located at the southeast corner of State Road 46 and I-4, includes 29 acres for commercial construction, about seven acres for offices and about 20 acres for residential uses.

Wontenay said 98 applications for new agricultural ventures were received this year and 42 were denied. None of the landowners identified in the lawsuit were denied agricultural classifications this year, said Wontenay.

Among the denials was county commission candidate Ari Davis. Davis had filed for the agricultural classification on a portion of his Lake Markham Road property for an ornamental palm business. Wontenay said he has requested additional information about the business and the classification may yet be allowed. Davis said he would comply.

Lawyer runs for new House seat

Associated Press

DAYTONA BEACH — Lawyer Dan Webster announced Tuesday he will run for the U.S. House of Representatives in a newly drawn district that is home to two incumbents.

Neither U.S. Reps. Bill McCollum nor Craig James is seeking the District 7 seat, which includes most of Seminole and Volusia counties.

Webster, 33, is the only announced candidate for the race. The Democrat and political newcomer has a $100,000 campaign fund.

Webster announced his candidacy Tuesday, one day after McCollum, R-Longwood, said he will leave District 7 and run in a predominantly Orange County district. James, who represents District 4, announced last month he wouldn't seek re-election.

A success

An endangered species is about to become extinct, and few people will be sorry. It is the smallpox virus. And good riddance to it. Smallpox has been one of the more destructive infections in human history. From the 15th to the 18th centuries, it had a catastrophic effect on the lives of people, changing the political and economic history of nations. Epidemics killed hundreds of thousands of people. Records indicate that in Europe in the 18th century, smallpox was so widespread that nearly everyone caught it at some point during his or her lifetime. It was also prevalent in Asian countries.

Shortly after Columbus' historic voyages to the New World, Spaniards introduced the disease to the Americas. The native Indian population had no natural immunity built up over years of exposure. Within a few years, more than half the native people of the Western Hemisphere are estimated to have died. Some tribes, such as the Mandans and the Assiniboina of the upper Missouri Valley, were wiped out by smallpox epidemics.

Luckily, an English medical student named Ward Jenner was broad-minded enough to consider whether an old rural folk tale was true. A belief common among English farmers was that a bout of cowpox, a minor bovine disease that could also infect human beings, conferred immunity from smallpox. Jenner developed a vaccination that gave people a mild attack of cowpox. That was it — the beginning of the end had come for smallpox.

The disease still raged in undeveloped nations. In the mid-1900s, for instance, medical researchers estimated between 10 million and 15 million people had the disease. About 2 million died.

But in the industrialized countries, smallpox was not longer much of a threat. No American has died of smallpox since 1949.

Most Americans over age 21 might remember when smallpox vaccinations were routine. Some might still bear the scar, often a small, circular indentation in the upper arm or thigh, but smallpox became so rare that routine vaccinations were stopped in 1971, because the vaccination was more dangerous than the disease. Then, in 1977, the last case of naturally occurring smallpox among the general population was found and treated in Somalia. Now, scientists want to kill off all samples of the virus that exist in storage.

A team of American biologists and a similar group of Russian researchers are working to record the complete genetic code of the virus. When that is done, the last remaining live strains of smallpox will be eliminated.

Scientists believe that any future researchers will be able to use the genetic DNA sequence in their work. Technology as it exists today wouldn't allow replication of the virus using only genetic information. Nevertheless, scientists agree that even if the virus could never be reproduced, destroying the last known samples is the right thing to do.

It certainly is. While any viable virus remains alive, the potential for disaster still exists. Because vaccination only confers a 10-year immunity, most people now alive are vulnerable to smallpox. The day can't come soon enough when the world is finally and irrevocably free of that terrible disease.

On death penalties and polygraphs

I wasn't on death row — as Robert Keith Coleman was — when I took my lie detector test. But after it was over, I walked away mistakenly convinced I had flunked. It is a debilitating, dehumanizing experience, even though you know you are telling the truth.

A friend of Coleman's said the convicted Virginia murderer was "devastated" when told he had failed the polygraph on May 30, because it meant inevitable execution within hours.

Coleman strode stoically to his death later that day, insisting with a quiet passion that he was innocent of raping his sister-in-law and stabbing her to death in a tiny rural Virginia community.

Seven years ago, I had insisted on taking a polygraph after charging a Delaware state law-enforcement officer with abusive treatment, which he denied.

Obviously, one of us was lying. He refused to take a polygraph. I took it and was relieved when a state official said I had "passed with flying colors." The officer was suspended for three days.

If I had flunked the polygraph, though, it would have come down to his word against mine, even though my wife had witnessed the state trooper's abusive treatment. The criminal justice system almost never takes the word of an adversary to a law enforcement officer, especially if the adversary is black and the officer is white, as the Simi Valley, Calif., jury proved.

But most suspects don't get the kid-glove treatment that accused police officers routinely receive from juries. Of the 738,763 inmates in federal and state prisons, a minimum of 5 percent — 36,000 — are innocent, according to estimates of several nationally prominent legal experts whom I have interviewed.

Now, 95 percent accuracy is eminently respectable. But when policemen, prosecutors, judges and juries systematically make errors 5 percent of the time — and authorities refuse to budge when new evidence indicates a miscarriage of justice — the cumulative effect makes a mockery of fair trials.

In 1973, for example, Edward Martin Ryder of Philadelphia never got a fair trial. Two years later, a prosecution witness, Jeffrey Hunter, admitted to me on a TV show that he had lied at a trial that convicted Ryder of a conspiracy to murder a fellow inmate.

Beginning in 1978, I began a long odyssey to prove Ryder's innocence. In the following 13 years, I wrote 14 columns, uncovering two recanting witnesses and an ex-inmate's deathbed confession. A CBS-TV news report and a Philadelphia Inquirer reporter subsequently found two additional witnesses who exonerated Ryder.

Two years ago, Rev. James McCloskey, a close friend who is responsible for having dug up evidence that has freed eight falsely convicted inmates all over America, took up Ryder's case at my request.

McCloskey uncovered two more witnesses and some brilliant logical evidence that completely exonerated Ryder. Under McCloskey's direction, Ryder took a polygraph test and also passed "with flying colors."

But Ryder, who has been a model prisoner, is still serving a life sentence. Why? Because of a sleazebag district attorney, Ed Rendell, overran the Ryder trial and doesn't want the case reopened.

Rendell almost had another innocent man, Neil Ferber, executed for murder. Ferber was later exonerated — although with less exculpatory evidence than has been gathered in the Ryder case.

Media moguls and politicians socialize

WASHINGTON — At Bohemian Grove, the annual site of the world's most exclusive frat party, even the fourth estate sometimes gets star-struck.

Mingling among the high-level government officials and prominent heads of industry who come together each summer at the Grove is an exclusive coterie of top members of the national media. But even though they are in the business of selling information, don't expect them to ever break the Grove's golden rule: "Do not reproduce or publish scripts, pictures, music or accounts of the Grove."

The Grove earns much of its reputation from its star-studded membership roster: George Bush, Henry Kissinger, Ronald Reagan, Bob Dole, Chairman Dan Quayle have all been shown on TV for the two booze-drenched weeks of outdoor camaraderie. But the membership also includes prominent media figures like William F. Buckley Jr., the late Malcolm Forbes and executives of The Los Angeles Times.

The Grove earns much of its reputation from its star-studded membership.

Some of these media magnates apparently feel more loyalty to the Grove than to their trade. Over the years, at least a dozen stories exposing some of the relationships and rituals of the Grove, written by gumshoe reporters in the employ of Grove members, have been spiked or altered before publication.

The most recent case involves a former bureau chief of People magazine, Dirk Mathison, who got permission from one boss to write a story about the Grove if he could infiltrate last summer's encampment. On three different days, Mathison managed to evade the tight security around the camp and observe some of the happenings. But the third time proved to be unlucky.

Mathison was spotted by a Time-Warner executive, who immediately fingered him and angrily booted him out of the camp. But that wasn't enough. Before he had finished it, Mathison's story was spiked through the efforts of at least one Time-Warner executive who is a longtime, faithful Grove member. Several months later, eyebrows were raised once again when Time-Warner suddenly decided to close down their San Francisco bureau, where Mathison was chief. Certainly the company was cutting other staff as well, but the San Francisco bureau was one of People's most productive. Today, Mathison is out of a job.

All this shows just how far the Grove has strayed from its infant stages. The Bohemian Club was founded in 1872 by a group of San Francisco newspapermen with artistic inclinations who banded together to share their literary efforts. Original members included Mark Twain, Bret Harte, Ambrose Bierce and Jack London. These men took pains to exclude the rich, especially their publishers. The modern-day character of the club did not take shape until the Great Depression, when only the wealthy could afford to keep it going.

Since then, the Grove has become the setting for Old Boy Club handshaking and deal-making on a prodigious scale. It was in the camaraderie of the Grove that three members — Edward Teller, Ernest Lawrence and Luis Alvarez talked University of California officials into secretly funding what became the Manhattan Project.

Grove spokesmen have denied repeatedly that the nuclear bomb had its origins at the Grove, but a hiking map written by a Grove historian and recently obtained by our associate Dale Van Atta tells a different story. The map boasts of a club house built in 1903 on the banks of the Russian River.

Perot disrupts the Bush camp

WASHINGTON — The increasing importance of Ross Perot in the presidential race has all but paralyzed George Bush's re-election efforts. It's leading to an explosive clash between the president's campaign team and his White House staff.

No one in the Bush camp seems to know how to deal with Perot. There are a number of conflicting opinions, but no consensus. While the Bush staff waits to come up with a strategy for dealing with Perot's independent effort, confusion has now set in as well on how to deal with Democrat Bill Clinton.

At the heart of the problem: No one is sure what the fall campaign will actually look like. Will it be a three-man race, with the president opposing both Clinton and Perot? Or will it become a referendum on the Bush presidency, with Clinton and Perot effectively becoming a "not-Bush" team? Or will Perot fall by the wayside sometime between now and October, turning the campaign into a traditional Republican vs. Democrat affair?

These scenarios all call for very different campaign strategies.

The Bush team's first choice would be to turn the election into a referendum on the Bush presidency. In this scenario, it would be Bush vs. Perot/Clinton. The hope would be that the two challengers would fight it out among themselves, ultimately splitting the anti-Bush vote. If this happens, even with the president's current low approval ratings, Bush would probably win because Perot and Clinton would largely cancel each other out.

What is giving the Bush team nightmares is the prospect that, between now and November, Perot will spend a more than a hundred million dollars savaging the president. Bush might emerge victorious from this battle, but he may be so bloodied that Clinton — who has managed to stay out of the fight, repair his image and consolidate his traditional Democratic support — will surge to victory.

While there is no consensus about the shape of the fall campaign, there is even less agreement on what the president should be doing currently. His campaign team — headed by former Commerce Secretary Robert Moebacher — is pushing hard for the president to start running now to counter Perot. Also, Moebacher especially wants the president to quickly and publicly respond to the troubles in Los Angeles by throwing his full support behind HUD Secretary Jack Kemp's long-dormant, inner-city revitalization plan.

However, that strategy is opposed by White House Chief of Staff Samuel Skinner. He reportedly wants the president to take it slow, not becoming too involved in purely political activity until after the GOP convention in August.

Meanwhile, Budget Director Richard Darman has put the brakes on supporting Kemp's urban package. Darman has been totally opposed to this plan since Kemp first suggested it three years ago.

Moebacher has enlisted the help of the president's eldest son, George W. Bush, who has become a kind of political trouble-shooter (read: hatchet man) for his father. It was George W. who told former White House Chief of Staff John Sununu to leave, and Moebacher reportedly wants the younger Bush to convince his father that Skinner must go and that Secretary of State James Baker must be brought in to save the day.

The problem is that Baker does not want to leave the State Department. Reportedly, Moebacher has come up with an alternative. Skinner would be allowed to keep his current title, but with a much diminished policy role. Robert Zoellick, undersecretary of state for economic affairs and the issues director for Bush's 1988 campaign, would be brought in to the White House as de facto political head and chief of staff.

Darman, meanwhile, would simply be fired, with a caretaker appointed budget chief, leaving OMB policy to be set by the White House and the campaign staff.

According to an outline for the campaign authored by Moebacher's staff, the president was to use a series of graduation speeches over the last few weeks as a platform to set his agenda for the campaign. However, since there is no consensus as to what Bush's agenda will be, the speeches have been routine and little noticed.

For the moment, Bush is operating on advice to "be presidential" and be seen doing presidential things. However, as he marks time, his place in the polls continues to drop, and Moebacher and Skinner continue at each other's throats, each blaming the other for the problems.

No one in the Bush camp seems to know how to deal with Perot.

U.S. rejects changes in treaty

By PAUL RABURN
AP Science Editor

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil — The U.S. government has rebuffed last-ditch efforts to win its approval for a treaty protecting endangered plants and animals, calling proposed changes in the document's language too superficial.

Signing of the biodiversity treaty, a centerpiece of the Earth Summit, was to begin today.

An administration official in Washington told The Associated Press late Thursday that the Brazilians had offered to make "cosmetic changes" to the treaty in order to win U.S. support.

"The U.S. stuck to its guns," because the Brazilian suggestions did not address fundamental U.S. concerns, said the official, who spoke on condition he remain anonymous.

In a gesture that could blunt some criticism of U.S. footdragging on summit agreements, chief U.S. delegate William K. Reilly announced Thursday that the U.S. Forest Service would end clear-cutting as standard policy in U.S. national forests.

Another centerpiece of the summit, the global warming treaty, was made available for signing Thursday in a ceremony led by U.N. Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali. President Bush plans to sign it when he arrives next week.

The biodiversity treaty provides for the protection of endangered and threatened animals and ecosystems. It also calls for industrialized countries to compensate developing nations for resources used to make commercial products.

The United States has come under heavy criticism for its refusal to support the accord. Washington argues that the United States would contribute much of the money while spending decisions would be left to developing nations, which have the greatest variety of species.

The administration official's comments put Reilly, head of the Environmental Protection Agency, in a difficult spot. Earlier Thursday, he had said the United States may support the treaty if minor changes were made in the document. He said that while he did not expect Bush to sign it during the summit, the United States might sign in the future if other countries reopened the treaty for amendment.

It was the latest rift between Reilly and White House officials, who have overturned a number of his positions, most recently involving air pollution and wetlands protection.

The New York Times, in today's editions, quoted a senior White House official as saying Reilly had offered the changes without the agreement of the White House. Reilly could not be immediately reached for comment on the dispute.

Sadaaki Mumata, spokesman for the Japanese delegation, said "a number of countries" are willing to discuss reopening talks on the biodiversity treaty, which was negotiated in May in Nairobi.

Mumata said the treaty is under "intensive consideration" by Tokyo. Japan, like the United States and Britain, has refused to sign, and for similar reasons.

Brazilian President Fernando Collor de Mello was first to sign the global warming treaty.

More than 120 heads of state are expected to add their signatures when they arrive later at the summit, which ends June 14. Nations have until June 19, 1993, to do so.

Earth Summit at a glance

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil Here is a look at the latest Earth Summit developments:

• The U.S. government rejected an offer by Brazil to modify a treaty on protecting endangered plants and animals in order to get President Bush to sign it when he arrives next week, a Bush administration official says. Bush has supported the treaty in part because Washington would contribute much of the funding but developing nations, which have the greatest variety of species, would decide how to spend it.

• Brazilian President Fernando Collor de Mello on Thursday became the first leader to sign an agreement to curb global warming. The agreement had been weakened because of U.S. opposition to placing caps on carbon dioxide emissions.

• The World Bank announced an increase of $4.5 billion in conservation loans to developing countries. Bank President Lewis Preston said nearly $30 billion over the next three years will support such projects as reforestation and water treatment.

• The Vatican defended its stand on birth control, saying it does not support procreation at any cost. The Roman Catholic Church had been blamed for keeping overpopulation off the summit agenda, a charge it denied.

• Gilberto Mestrinho, governor of Brazil's Amazonas state which includes the vast Amazon River rain forests, said ecology was a smokescreen for a plan by industrialized nations to keep the Amazon poor.

House wants ban on nuclear testing

WASHINGTON — The Democratic-controlled House wants President Bush to impose a post-Cold War ban on nuclear weapons testing as a signal of the United States' conviction to stop proliferation of atomic arms worldwide.

Working on a $274 billion military budget, the House on Thursday voted 237-167 to impose a one-year moratorium on nuclear testing, provided the former Soviet republics continue their current unilateral ban.

The House neared final approval today of the overall bill, which is $7 billion smaller than Bush has proposed for the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1. The administration opposes the bill based on the total amount, deep troop reductions and cuts in the anti-missile Strategic Defense Initiative.

Bush confident of support

WASHINGTON — President Bush says Ross Perot may be popular now, but once the Texas billionaire is pinned down on the issues "the guy in the neighborhood" will return to Bush on Election Day.

At a news conference Thursday night, Bush said he would not yet take on the independent presidential hopeful, who is favored by as much as a third of potential voters in nationwide public opinion polls.

But Bush gave his aides and supporters the green light to do so. He also signaled that his campaign would highlight Perot's opposition to the Persian Gulf War and lobbying connections to Congress that belie Perot's claims to be a Washington outsider.

"I have the confidence that it won't be just the Republicans that will be supporting me, it will be the guy in the neighborhood" by the time election day arrives in November, Bush said.

Prisoners not getting AIDS education

ATLANTA — Prisons have the highest HIV rate of any public facility, and inmates, as a truly captive audience, are prime targets for AIDS education. Yet only a fraction are tested for or taught about the deadly virus, the CDC says.

"The correctional system provides excellent opportunities to reach persons at risk, or if they're already infected, prevent the spread to others," said Gary West, assistant deputy director of the federal Centers for Disease Control's HIV unit.

"There are some good efforts out there, but it's obvious there's a lot more that needs to be done," he said.

'Good Morning America' holds top spot

NEW YORK — ABC's "Good Morning America" won a narrow victory in the ratings race of network morning shows after a week in second place to NBC's "Today" show.

For the week ending May 29, ABC scored a 3.9 rating and an 18 share; NBC followed closely with a 3.7 rating and an 18 share, and "CBS This Morning" trailed with a 2.5 rating, 12 share, according to Nielsen Media Research.

One ratings point equals 921,000 TV homes; a share is the percentage of all TV sets in use that are tuned to a show in its time period.

Leno premieres week ratings top Carson

LOS ANGELES — Jay Leno's ratings his first week hosting "The Tonight Show" were 23 percent higher than the average rating for Johnny Carson's final season.

Leno's debut last week as host of America's favorite late-night talk show earned a 6.6 average rating, figures released Thursday show. The 1991-92 season average for Carson, who retired May 22, was 5.4. Each ratings point represents 921,000 households.

Leno's first-week ratings also were 53 percent higher than those from the same period last year. For the week beginning May 27, 1991, during which Leno was guest host one night, the average rating was a 4.3.

Jobless rate hits 7.5%, 8-year high

By MARTIN CRUTCHER
AP Economics Writer

WASHINGTON — The nation's unemployment rate surged to 7.5 percent in May, the highest level in nearly eight years, as the weak labor market was unable to accommodate a huge influx of job seekers, the government said today.

The Labor Department said that the May unemployment rate was 0.3 percentage-points higher than the April level of 7.2 percent.

The big deterioration caught economists by surprise. Many of them had been expecting the jobless rate to hold steady at the April level. However, the number of people looking for work shot up by $30,000. This big increase in job seekers coupled with a slight decline in the number of jobs, sent the number of unemployed up by 349,000 to 9.5 million.

That was the highest level of Americans out of work since October 1983. The jobless rate of 7.5 percent was the highest unemployment rate since August 1984.

Michael Evans, head of a Washington forecasting firm, said that today's unexpectedly bad jobs report along with other signs of a weak economy had prompted him to reduce his forecast for economic growth in the second half of the year.

Instead of an economy, as measured by the gross domestic product, rising at an annual rate of 3 percent, he said he now expected GDP would rise at a much more anemic 2 percent rate.

"The economy just isn't going anywhere," he said. "In May you had as many firms laying off people as you had hiring them. We are in a no-man's land with the economy growing but at such a sluggish rate that unemployment is rising as well."

The big jump in the jobless rate during a presidential election year was certain to be used by President Bush's political opponents.

The president, who would have had access to today's unemployment figure before its release, said at his Thursday night news conference that his political problems stemmed from "this sluggish, anemic economy."

The president insisted that the economy was beginning to improve, but he conceded that the weak economy was hurting his approval ratings.

"I think my fortunes have been related to that and I think ... I'll take the blame," Bush said, adding that he hoped to get "credit when there's recovery."

The 7.5 percent jobless rate was up by more than 2 percentage points from the 5.2 percent unemployment rate in June 1990, the month before the country slipped into recession.

While some economists believe a recovery began a full year ago, the continued rise in the unemployment rate served to underscore just how anemic the rebound has been.

When overall output has been expanding, the growth has not been enough to accommodate new workers entering the labor market. That is what occurred in May.

Ironically, analysts said even though the economy is expanding, the jobless rate may worsen for awhile as Americans who had given up looking for work re-enter the labor market.

The jobless rate is based on a survey of American households. A separate survey of businesses showed that payrolls increased by 68,000 in May. That advance also was a disappointment to many economists who had been looking for a stronger figure, above the 100,000 level.

The payroll survey showed that the overwhelming bulk of the hiring in May occurred in service industries, where jobs increased by 76,000 during the month.

Study: 10 million workers have problems in literacy

By TAMARA HENRY
AP Education Writer

WASHINGTON — Small businesses employ more than 10 million workers who have trouble reading, writing, doing math and handling other basic skills, says a private research group that calls the problem "a serious barrier to economic gains."

The 10 million workers represent up to 40 percent of small-business workers, the Southport Institute for Policy Analysis said Thursday. Half of the nation's 5 million small businesses report skills problems that merit corrective programs, but only up to 5 percent have them, the study said.

Some examples of the problems that result:

- Workers improperly read instructions on an assembly line.
- They give customers the wrong change.
- Verbal directions are misinterpreted.

"Because small firms employ 57 percent of the American work force, this is clearly a serious national problem that demands national attention," said Institute President Forrest P. Chisman, author of the report.

"Problems with basic skills are a serious barrier to improving the productivity of these firms and the nation's economic competitiveness," he said. "But despite the severity of the problem, no public or private programs currently provide significant help."

The institute called for a $100 million federal program to bring workplace education to small firms.

The plan calls for a national network of work force specialists who would bring federal, state and local efforts together, help employers understand the skills problem and help them customize workplace education programs.

Chisman said the report, based on an 18-month study of formal, on-the-job basic skills courses in small and medium-sized firms, is the first comprehensive study of the skills of small-business employees. Small businesses are those with fewer than 50 employees; medium-sized companies have 50 workers to 500 workers.

U.S. companies spend $30 billion annually on employee training, said the National Center on Education and the Economy. But a 1991 survey by The Olaten Corp. found that the majority of those dollars are used for management, leadership and computer training and not for basic skills.

Olaten is a leading provider of temporary personnel and one of its clients, the manager of an urban bank, reported that 70 percent of his correspondence had to be redone because of spelling and grammatical errors.

At a Midwestern college, one of the kitchen's cooks memorized recipes with the help of a colleague. When the colleague was transferred, the cook was not able to read a new cake recipe and mistook the word "sugar" for "salt," an Olaten official said.

Bill Dudek of Wm. Dudek Manufacturing Co. in Chicago described a "long period of frustration and even anger over unperformed tasks before recognizing that the culprit was the workers' inability to read and do math well."

Dudek said the company implemented what was thought to be a "well-planned program for involving employees in the quality improvement process." But the results, he said, were limited at best and, "in some cases, workers seemed to be ignoring written instructions altogether."

Boredom is the No. 1 gripe kids have about school. Poor grades and homework also ranked high on the complaint list, as did unfair teachers and tests.

Study says more students are dropping out, falling behind

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — More than a third of all American youngsters between the ages of 15 and 17 have either dropped out of school or are at least one grade level behind, according to reports published today.

The Los Angeles Times and USA Today both quoted a Census Bureau report, "School Enrollment — Social and Economic Characteristics of Students."

The report noted that the gap between white students and black and Hispanic students begins in middle schools and widens as the youngsters grow older.

By 1990, the newspapers said, 34.8 percent of all students between 15 and 17 had dropped out or been placed in classes at least one year below their age group — up from 29.1 percent in 1980. About 32 percent of white students fell into that category, the report said, while the proportions for blacks and Hispanics were 48 percent and 48.6 percent respectively.

The report did provide a glimmer of hope, noting that the annual dropout rate declined from 6 percent in 1980 to 4 percent in 1990.

The report also found: • The dramatic differences in grade levels among races began appearing with the 9- to 11-year-olds and continued throughout high school.

• Only 49 percent of Hispanic children ages 3 to 5 were enrolled in preschool or kindergarten, compared with 57.8 percent of black children and 60 percent of whites.

• The high school dropout rate between fall 1989 and fall 1990 was 3.8 percent for whites, 5.1 percent for blacks and 8 percent for Hispanics.

Will aspirin really help prevent heart attacks?

DEAR DR. GOTT: I just read that if healthy men are taking aspirin to prevent heart attacks for several years and stop, many of these men will suffer heart attacks. Is this true?

DEAR READER: The daily use of aspirin retards blood clotting. Therefore, this therapy is inexpensive and relatively safe for both men and women who have blood-clot related diseases, such as heart attacks and transient ischemic attacks (TIAs or mini-strokes). Statistically, the use of low-dose aspirin has been shown to protect against future events - a second heart attack, for instance.

Experts have not recommended aspirin therapy for healthy men and women with no evidence of heart disease.

Given the scenario you describe, the men who stopped taking aspirin would be at greater risk for heart attack. That is, each man who stopped aspirin would have the same chance of a heart attack as he would if he had never taken aspirin.

Also, you must remember that heart attacks are age-related. Thus, a man who stops aspirin after 10 years will not experience the same risk he had when he started; being 10 years older increases the risk proportionally, whether or not he used aspirin.

There are factors that are more important than aspirin in lessening the chance of heart attack: stop smoking, treat high blood pressure, lose excess weight, exercise regularly, and lower serum cholesterol. To give you more information about this last factor, I am sending you free copies of my Health Reports "Understanding Cholesterol" and "Eating Right For A Healthy Heart."

DEAR DR. GOTT: When my wife wakes up in the morning an argument can erupt over anything for about two hours. Then her personality changes drastically and she acts as if nothing has happened. She calls it her "foggy time" but won't admit there is a major problem. What is your opinion?

DEAR READER: I don't know what this represents. Some people are a bit slow in getting started early in the day, but your wife's reaction takes the cake. I suggest that you shove, dress, grab a cup of coffee, and take the dog for a long walk; in this way, you won't have to put up with her grouchiness.

I think your wife should check with her doctor to make sure that some physical problem,

WHAT BRIDGE

By Phillip Alder
 Bridge can be a frustrating game for everyone, but especially for a beginner. He can lose to a beginner - something that doesn't often happen in other games.

As an example, look at today's deal from a club duplicate in New York. Cover the East-West cards and plan the play in six spades against a heart lead.

The auction was unscientific but effective, six spades being the ideal contract.

Assuming the spades are breaking 3-2, you have 12 laydown tricks: five spades, four hearts, one diamond and two clubs. After winning trick one, you should draw two rounds of trumps with the queen and king. If the suit divides favorably, cash the spade ace and take a club finesse, guaranteeing your contract.

If the spades are 4-1, take an immediate club finesse. When it wins (as it must), play off the hearts, discarding diamonds from hand. If an opponent ruffs in, win his probable diamond switch, draw the last trump and repeat the club finesse. If no one ruffs in, play a spade to your ace and take a second club finesse. Your last diamond loser disappears on the clubace.

Now watch how the actual declarer played the hand. At trick two, he led a diamond to the jack and queen. West switched to a club. Declarer put up dummy's ace, discarded his second club on a top heart, played a diamond to his ace and ruffed a diamond with dummy's spade five. Finally he drew trumps and claimed. The approximately 45-percent line had worked as well as the 100-percent line.

Lake Mary sending 18 on to compete at college level

By ROBERT STOKK
 Herald Correspondent

LAKE MARY — For Lake Mary High School, one more pass, a goal, another hit or just a stroke of luck would have made 1991-92 the best year in athletic competition in the school's history.

In a year of unprecedented success for Seminole County athletics, Lake Mary was competitive in just about every sport. The Rams were led by the Class 4A state champion boys tennis team and the District 5 champion boys' swim team.

For their efforts, 16 Ram athletes received athletic scholarships to colleges next year.

From the boys' tennis team, Jason White will try to make an impact at Florida State University.

Six football players from the Rams' squad which won the Rotary Bowl will suit up next season. Running back Anush Collins will burst through holes at the Naval Academy while two of the mammoth offensive tackles Collins ran behind — Rich Ditucci and John Laird — will attend Central Methodist College and Southern Arkansas State, respectively.

Another lineman, guard Ken Hoover, will play for Greenville State in South Carolina. Defensive back Troy Todd and linebacker Chris Jones will try to stuff offenses for Mars Hill College in North Carolina, where they'll join Lyman's Chad Fisher and Kane Kettles.

Four players from the boys' soccer team that was ranked No. 2 in the state before being upset by Lyman in the District 4A-9 finale were awarded scholarships. Matt Buckmaster and Justin Walker will head to the University of South Florida while David Yurick will go north and play for the University of Massachusetts. Bruce Lenin will join several other Seminole County players at Anderson College in South Carolina.

From the girls' soccer team, Leanne Bazile and Heather Cohen are going to Florida Atlantic University while Corey Tanser will play for George Washington University.

Baseball standout T.J. Hamilton is headed to Central Florida Community College in Ocala.

From the girls' volleyball team, which won its first 4A-9 title in more than five years, Melissa Mau will compete for North Carolina State. Lake Mary athletic director Bob Wagner said Mau becomes the first volleyball player from Lake Mary to receive a full scholarship.

College players top county's draft picks

By TONY BOGDANSKI
 Herald Sports Editor

SANFORD — Four college players who began or continued their baseball careers in Seminole County top this year's list of players selected in Major League Baseball's recently completed amateur draft.

Stanley Evans, a graduate of New Smyrna Beach High School who played for Seminole Community College the last two years, was drafted in the 10th round by the Philadelphia Phillies. According to SCC assistant coach Lefty Renaud, Evans has already signed a contract with the Phillies.

Lake Mary High School graduate Wes Weger, who has spent the last four years rewriting the career record book at Stetson University, was taken in the ninth round by the Milwaukee Brewers, said Lake Mary coach Allen Tuttle.

Lyman High School coach Bob McCullough announced on Wednesday that 1988 graduate Chris Brock, who has played for Florida State the last four years, was picked by the Atlanta Braves in the 12th round.

From Lake Howell High School and Valencia Community College, Brian Scutera was selected in the 19th round by the Baltimore Orioles.

As of Thursday night, the only high school players it was confirmed had been drafted were both from Oviedo High School. Rick Werner was

Stanley Evans, a graduate of New Smyrna Beach High School who played for Seminole Community College the last two years, was picked in the 10th round of Major League Baseball's amateur draft by the Philadelphia Phillies. It was reported that Evans has already signed with the Phillies.

For six innings, Ed Bussard's Pro Base Guide couldn't get any offense generated against Stenstrom/Stump Construction. In the second inning, Jerry Dick (standing) was tagged out by third baseman Eric Johnson on the back end of a 6-3-6 double play. But in the bottom of the seventh, Bussard's rallied to pull out a 4-3 win.

Co-leaders boosted by forfeit wins

From Staff Reports

SANFORD — Was there a full moon last night?

A normal type forfeit, a two-out, four-run rally in the bottom of the seventh inning and a forfeit in the sixth-inning by a team with a 9-4 lead in the Sanford Recreation Department Men's Thursday Night Spring Softball League at Pinehurst Park had to have the players wondering if the supernatural had control of the events.

First Baptist of Sanford again failed to have enough players show up, handing a 7-0 win to Florida Sportswear/Church of God. Ed Bussard's Pro Base Guide then rallied from a 3-0 deficit to win 4-3 before Gators picked up a 7-0 win when DeLand Nissan had a player ejected with one out in the sixth inning to drop below the nine-player limit.

Gators and Florida Sportswear/Church of God remained tied for the league lead with 5-1 records, while Ed Bussard's moves into third with a 4-2 mark. Completing the standings are DeLand Nissan (3-3), Stenstrom/Stump (1-5) and First Baptist (0-6).

Next week, Ed Bussard's squares off with DeLand Nissan at 6:30 p.m., Gators battles First Baptist at 7:30 p.m. and Stenstrom/Stump challenges Florida Sportswear/Church of God at 8:30 p.m.

Stenstrom/Stump scored two runs in the second inning and one run in the fifth inning and had held Ed Bussard's to only six hits to lead 3-0 entering the bottom of the seventh inning. But, with one out, Jeff Burgman walked and Jerry Dick and Calvin Bryant singled to load the bases.

Danny Spivey lofted a sacrifice fly to right field to score Burgman, but now there were two out. Mike Dick singled to load the bases, Jim Williams singled in a run, Duane Goembi walked to score a run and

Considering steroids? Weigh facts

DEAR MARY: I'm 17 years old and even though I'm almost 6 ft. tall, I only weigh 140 lbs. I really hate being so thin but no matter what I eat, I seem to stay about the same. I've heard that steroids cause you to gain weight and develop bigger muscles. I have a friend who says he can get me some, and I'm thinking of trying them.

Please don't go into the standard lecture about how kids shouldn't take drugs of any kind. Just tell me if steroids do help you gain weight and what I should look out for if I do try them.

JASON: DEAR JASON: I'll give you the facts as we know them. Since lecturing never changes anybody's mind on a topic, I hope information and good judgment will guide you.

There is scientific evidence that steroids do contribute to muscle growth and weight gain in healthy males. However, this presumed increase is due to the body retaining salt and water, giving the user a puffy look around the face, neck, and lower body. The use of steroids does not improve respiratory functioning or athletic performance and leads to increased risk for injury because while muscle size increases, tendon and ligaments are not strengthened.

DRUG COUNSELOR

Some studies indicate that steroid use in adolescence can result in stunted natural growth. Acne becomes worse when steroids are used and male hormone production is altered causing problems with fertility and sexual functioning in future years.

When a person first begins using steroids, (she) may have a feeling of euphoria, but as use continues, increased irritability and inappropriate outbursts of anger and hostility called "roid rages" are common.

Steroid use also increases the possibility of prostate cancer as you get older. The Federal Anti-Drug Act of 1988 includes penalties for distribution of steroids. These penalties are stricter for distribution to young people than to adults because of the long-term and often irreversible damage done when steroids are used during adolescence.

(Mary Balk holds a master's degree in counseling and is a certified Addiction Prevention professional and counselor with the Drug Prevention Office of the Seminole County School District. Write to her in care of the Herald at 388 N. French Ave., Sanford, 32771.)

Grandparents could prevent poisoning

DEAR ABBY: Your response to the poison-wary mom from Peotium motivated me to provide the most recent poisoning statistics compiled by the American Association of Poison Control Centers. In 1991, there were 44 deaths of children under 5 years of age. However, more than 1.8 million poisonings were reported, including nearly 1.1 million accidental poisonings in children under 5-years of age.

Of course, these numbers represent only those poisonings that were reported to poison control centers participating in this surveillance system. Many additional unreported poisonings actually occurred.

A recent study showed that more than a third of pediatric poisonings from toxic prescription drugs involved the ingestion of a grandparent's medication. I cannot imagine any grandparent wanting to be responsible for a life-threatening illness in a grandchild. Imagine your grandchild, comatose in an intensive care unit, with a tube in the stomach, IVs in the arm and a respirator hissing in the background. Yet, grandparents are regularly implicated in childhood poisonings.

ADVISE

Perhaps it would help to focus attention on those household products that are extraordinarily dangerous, and limit our expectations of grandparents to keeping these extreme hazards out of the child's reach. For example, iron supplements caused 11 needless deaths in toddlers in 1991. Other causes of pediatric poisoning deaths were prescription medications, acid toilet bowl cleaners, alkaline cleaning substances (such as drain cleaners), gasoline, kerosene, lamp oil, fabric protector, charcoal lighter fluid, gun bluing and oil of wintergreen. Pesticides, windshield washing solutions and antifreeze also merit special vigilance.

Grandparents can make a difference!

TOBY LITOVITS, M.D.

DEAR DR. LITOVITS: Thank you for your attention-getting letter, and for informing me of the correct 1988 statistics from the American Association of Poison Control Centers —

1,581,540 poison exposures reported to your association. Approximately 935,000 of those were accidental poisonings in children under 5 years of age, and 1,072,292 were accidental poisonings in children under the age of 18. Of special interest was the comment, "Extrapolating from reported cases to actual poisonings allows us to estimate that 2.75 million children under 5 years, and 3.16 million children under 18, were actually poisoned accidentally in 1988."

Proper care preserves garment's life

June seems to be the time when there are many weddings in the Sanford, Lake Mary and Geneva area. By now families have all of their plans complete and normal jitters seem all that are left. No so! The day will seem like a dream and life will move on as quickly as before. Most brides like to store their wedding gowns. There are basically three types of storage — short term, long term, and seasonal. Hopefully storing your wedding gown will be long term storage!

Long term storage

Long Term refers to special item clothing such as a wedding dress, maternity wear, or baby clothes. They are stored until there is a need to use them again. Usually they are stored in boxes with white tissue paper or old white sheets. These garments should be checked at least once a year. Be sure to launder fabric coverings and use new tissue paper each year so that any problem can be corrected.

Preparing garments

Garments must be clean before they are stored. If stored "dirty," many stains can become permanent, and food stains which attract insects, or other substances (such as perfumes, deodorants), can cause fiber deterioration over time. Even if the garments were worn only once and have no visible soil, there probably will be invisible body oils.

Be sure garments are dry and stored in such a way as to maintain their shape. Store garments free of starch and fabric finish, since they attract insects and may turn white cotton, linen and ramie, yellow.

Never store garments in plastic since it prevents air circulation, encourage mildew growth, or in hot temperatures, adhere to fabric. Use cloth garment bags or cover with an old white sheet. Clean boxes and cedar chests can also be used. Also, suitcases make a good storage area.

Preparing storage area

Now that your garments are ready to be stored it is equally important that the storage area be clean, dry, dark, and cool. It should be free of dust to protect garments. Having a dry and cool area prevents rapid mildew growth. A dark area will prevent color fading. The best place to store is storage in use, so you can monitor dampness.

Keep your closet "fresh" with

CONSUMER FOCUS

good ventilation so air can circulate freely. Avoid crowding your clothing. Drawers also need to be free of dust, lint, and dirt.

If storing clothing in drawers or on a shelf, fold so the "lines" won't show when being worn. Folding in white tissue paper will help reduce this line. If rolling, do not roll too tightly or too loosely; using tissue paper can help.

What about storing in cedar? Cedar will not kill the eggs of moths or silverfish if they are already in clothing. Cedar is effective if tightly constructed and at least three-fourths inch thick. It is the oil from cedar heartwood that kills moth larvae. If storing in a cedar chest, remember to line it with an old clean sheet to protect from resin and wood acid. Be sure to periodically launder the sheet.

Hints

Here are some hints for you to consider as you are planning how to store your clothing and accessories.

Air clothing after wearing, at least overnight, so some wrinkles can hang out and some odors and moisture can evaporate.

Brush lightly napped and wool garments to remove lint and dust.

Wrap fine, delicate garments in white tissue paper so they can't be snagged.

Stuff wet shoes with paper and let them dry naturally. Be sure garments are dry before storing them.

Before storing garments remove jewelry and empty the pockets.

Carefully check for spots, stains, and any needed repairs. Correct before storing.

When you remove clothing, hang it up, smooth it out on the bed or drape it on a chair until it has aired.

Steam (in a shower or with a steamer) wool and silk to deodorize the garment and remove wrinkles.

Stuff handbags with tissue paper to maintain shape. Wrap them with tissue paper or slip them into an old pillowcase to protect them from dust.

Storage problems

Too often proper storage is not important until a major problem has occurred. Some problems that may occur are:

Odors can develop if garments were not aired sufficiently, were stored soiled, were improperly laundered or dry-cleaned, stored while damp, or were placed in an inappropriate storage area.

Wrinkles may be difficult to remove because of storing too tightly, improper hanging, improper folding, or rolling.

Discoloration may develop due to improper use of laundry or dry cleaning products, inappropriate care, improper storage, damage to storage area, soiled garments, storing in a plastic bag or containers, fume fading, or sunlight.

Spots and stains may appear on garments because of soiled garments or a storage area touching a moisture absorber or moth balls.

Out-of-shape garments can develop if the wrong hanger or an inappropriate method of storing is used.

Holes or fabric damage may occur due to mice or rodents, moth or insect damage, mildew or a rough storage area. Remember that insects do not readily attack clean clothes. If using moth balls you must use enough, have them in a storage area without holes (air tight) — and remember that vapors release downward.

Mild/mildew can form when warm, humid conditions exist. It can be caused by storing damp garments or placing garments in a damp storage area. It weakens and destroys natural fibers and discolors synthetics. In a humid climate mildew can form in only one day. To prevent: Be sure clothing is clean and dry with no added starch or sizing. Never store clothing in plastic since it traps moisture.

Summary

Clothes last longer if they are properly stored. Make the best use of the space you have. Remember: how you store your clothing will determine the condition of your clothing when you want to wear it again.

The Cooperation Extension Service is open to all regardless of race, color, creed or national origin.

FAITH AND ADVERSITY

A liquid pool of glistening gold floats in benign tranquility in the calm of a clear and sunlit day, developing an unexpected rush of strength only when forced to weather jagged rocks and harrowing heights while falling from the precipice which gives birth to the mighty power of the waterfall.

Faith and adversity, when coupled into the perfect pair, is one of the greatest tools which we may access in the building of the spirit of courage in our earthly experience.

In the words of Eccl.7:14, "In the day of prosperity be joyful, but in the day of adversity consider."

Prepare for the challenge of adversity. Strengthen your faith as you worship God each Sabbath. Your faith will sustain you and give you peace.

How like the nature of humankind, who may temporarily exist from year to year, realizing strength only when resources are invigorated by adversity.

Bishop to confirm, preach on Pentecost

LAKE MARY — The Right Rev. Herbert D. Edmondson, Ph.D., will confirm, celebrate Holy Communion and preach at St. Peter's Episcopal Church, 700 Rinehart Rd., on Sunday at 9 a.m.

Bishop Edmondson is the assisting bishop of the Diocese of Central Florida.

Pentecost is celebrated by many Christian churches and is sometimes called the church's birthday as it is remembered as the day and apostles received the gift of the Holy Spirit and began their public proclamation of Jesus as the Christ.

Since Easter a group of members have been studying the Episcopal church and its teachings. Those who are ready to make a public affirmation of their faith and commitment to the responsibilities of their baptism will receive the laying on of hands by Bishop Edmondson.

St. Peter's also begins its traditional summer schedule which is one service each Sunday at 9 a.m. and one service on Wednesday at 7 p.m. During the Sunday service, nursery care for infants and Children's Church will be provided. Christian education will resume on Sept. 13.
