There had been two Democratic candidates expected to compete in the April primary Saturday, but only one, Jim Halloway, filed Halloway's name will be facing the winner of this Saturday's Republican primary at the April 27th election for this seat.

House panel narrowly OKs welfare reform

By BILL KACZOR
Associated Press Writer

FALLABASSEE — A nearly straight party line vote pushed the limited welfare reform through a House committee after Democrats added a safety net for children of parents whose benefits run out.

Rep. Robert Casey of Gainesville was the only Republican who voted for the bill (HR 927) in the Aging and Human Services Committee as it was approved 9-6 Wednesday. No Democrats voted against it.

Other Republicans argued the bill would be too costly and objected to a provision the committee added on an 8-7 vote. It would let all municipalities continue benefits for children whose parents lose their aid to pay for them from going into foster care or emergency shelters.

The measure would fund the money through a protective payor, such as a grandparent instead of the disqualified parent.

Boggy Creek Gang Camp landscaped

CASSIA — Nearly 2,000 people attending a conference became volunteer laborers at actor Paul Newman's Boggy Creek Gang Camp by planting 400,000 square feet of sod and thousands of trees and shrubs.

Newman and TV's Captain Kangaroo were on hand for moral support Wednesday as employees of the Pharmacia & Upjohn pharmaceutical company landscaped the grounds of the camp for children with cancer, AIDS and other serious diseases.

"They spent half a day in hard work, but they enjoyed it," said Joe Giorfield, executive director of the 232-acre camp now nearing completion near this community between Orlando and Daytona Beach.

Newman, Gen. Norman Schwarzkopf and Bob Keeshan, who is television's Captain Kangaroo, are among the founders of the Florida version of the camp that provides a week's free camping for afflicted children.

Similar camps operate in Connecticut and New York. The kids attending the camps are referred by physicians, hospitals or health care organizations.

The Florida camp, which will become the only one to operate year-round, is scheduled for completion by the end of May. It also will be the only one to provide fulltime, on-site medical attention for the children at a medical center provided by Pharmacia & Upjohn.

Boggy Creek will begin taking in the young campers June 23 and serve more than 3,000 children and their families a year.

Hospital, USF face class action suit

TAMPA — A federal court ruling will allow all pregnant women who took part in medical experiments at Tampa General Hospital since November 1986 to join a class-action lawsuit against the hospital and the University of South Florida.

The ruling Wednesday by U.S. District Judge Henry Lee Adams Jr. gives class-action status to a 1990 lawsuit filed by three women who claim they weren't properly informed of the risks when they took part in a research study done by two former USF doctors.

The study by Walter J. Morales and Jeffrey L. Angel was intended to show whether steroids improved the lung development of premature babies.

The drugs worked. The published study showed the experimental treatment significantly reduced the time premature babies must spend on a respirator.

But the three women claim they weren't properly informed by the researchers and did not understand the experiment or the risks.

As part of the research, each woman had an amniocentesis, a surgical drawing of fluid from the uterus that was needed to show how far the fetuses' lungs had matured. The procedure carries a risk of spontaneous abortion, stillbirth or premature delivery.

The women didn't claim they or their babies were injured in the 1987 study. The suit seeks unspecified damages.

One woman who was 16-years-old when she took part in the study said she was pressured.

Flora Diaz testified in depositions that she had gone into premature labor when doctors told her they wanted to perform amniocentesis and gave her mother a consent form to sign. Diaz' mother couldn't read the English version and a Spanish version wasn't provided, she said.

Diaz said when she balked, doctors said, "If we don't do it the baby's going to die" and "It's going to stay in your conscience."

The three women's attorney had originally asked the court to allow up to 421 women who took part in the study to join the lawsuit.

Wiping up in court

FORT LAUDERDALE — It was serious business for jail inmate Robert Attwood, but a legal motion he filed on toilet paper generated quite a few chuckles at the courthouse.

Attwood couldn't find any note paper for his writ when he was confined at the Pompano Beach jail annex, so he took black felt-tip pen to jail-issue toilet paper and sent it off in a homemade envelope.

"They told me even if a case comes in on toilet paper, we file it," said Liz Cunningham, who opened the mail. "I'll admit I was surprised to actually see a case come in here on toilet paper but, once I read it, I knew it was for real."

She took the squeezably soft motion straight to her supervisor.

"She asked, 'How do we handle this?' I told her, 'Delicately,'" joked JoAnn Kimmel. "We get cases filed on scraps of paper from inmates all the time. But this? This is a first."

The toilet paper may be new to the court staff, but Attwood's name isn't. He has filed more than 95 lawsuits challenging his incarceration.

As it turns out, no judge needed to act. He was released from jail March 20, two days after writing his motion.

NEWS FROM THE REGION AND ACROSS THE STATE

Florida rejoins other states with electronic welfare benefits plan

By ADAM YEMANS
Associated Press Writer

TALLAHASSEE — Florida has restarted a contested plan to dispense food stamps and cash electronically to welfare recipients using electronic debit cards.

The state will rejoin a group of states and the federal government and sign a contract with Citibank to develop the high-tech system.

"We hope to be able to go forward with this very quickly," Ed Feaver, secretary of the Department of Health and Rehabilitative Services, said Wednesday.

The electronic benefits transfer system, or EBT, would require 700,000 recipients of food stamps and Aid to Families with Dependent Children to use automated teller machines and point-of-sale terminals in grocery stores to buy food and obtain cash each month.

It was an abrupt turnaround for Feaver, who in January had suspended Florida's role in the consortium. He said then that the state would instead move independently with its own bidding process to operate the system.

At the time, a number of lawmakers were uneasy about how swiftly HRS was moving to establish the system. They said they were concerned about its costs, why non-financial institutions were excluded from bidding for the contract and other issues.

Feaver said he changed his mind after HRS received legal clearance from Florida Attorney General Bob Butterworth for the proposed contract with Citibank, and a cost analysis showed the contract with Citibank was "a very favorable bid."

Lawmakers said they wanted to make sure it was done right.

They didn't want another FLORIDA computer system that processes welfare payments and cost millions more than estimated. The computer broke down repeatedly and overpaid some recipients when it began operating in 1991.

HRS is seeking $1.5 million next year to proceed with the project. It will cost an estimated $66 million over seven years, compared with $100 million for the current paper-based system. "I guess we'll see them in the budgetary process," said Senate HRS Chairman Bill Bankhead, R-Ponte Vedra Beach.

Florida is among eight states developing the system in conjunction with the feds, who had barred non-financial institutions from receiving the contract. Citibank won the contract.

The other states are Arkansas, Alabama, Georgia, Tennessee, North Carolina, Kentucky and Missouri.

Transactive Corp., a company headed by former HRS secretary Greg Coler, who served under former Republican Gov. Bob Martinez, has opposed the Citibank contract. It wanted to compete for the contract if the state bid it independently.

Authorities had wrong man

By The Associated Press

BRISTOL — For Lula Colon, the bizarre case of mistaken identity that cost him his job, friends and $14,000 in legal fees, is over.

Charges against Colon, of Hartford, have been dismissed after authorities determined that he was not the fugitive sought by Florida police on child molestation charges. On Wednesday a Bristol Superior Court judge ordered the arrest expunged from court records.

"He is relieved and happy it's over," said Colon's lawyer, Robert F. Pickering.

While investigating a complaint in February, Bristol police ran Colon's name and Social Security number through a databank of wanted people, and turned up three outstanding felony warrants accusing him of sexual battery of a child under 12, two counts of performing lewd or lascivious acts on a child, and one of performing a lewd act in the presence of a child.

Colon, 48, has the same name, date of birth and physical characteristics as the wanted man.

As a result, he was arrested and held on $100,000. Florida authorities acknowledged two weeks ago that Colon was the wrong man.

Report blasts chief

By The Associated Press

TALLAHASSEE — The chief enforcer of Florida's alcoholic beverage laws has undercut the work of beverage agents who uncover liquor law violations, says an investigative report.

John Harris has been "extremely lenient," drastically reducing fines against offenders, said the report by the governor's chief inspector general, Harold Lewis.

Harris declined to comment Wednesday. "He's studying it," said Bruce Dudley, spokesman for the Department of Business and Professional Regulation.

Harris, 48, a 28-year veteran of the department, has headed its Alcoholic Beverage and Tobacco Division since 1993.

Lewis did not recommend firing Harris but said the rift between him and his 170-member enforcement staff appeared irreparable. Harris believes the division's goal is educating the industry about the law and that punishing them isn't the best way to get compliance.

The agents want stronger sanctions to protect the public, Lewis reported.

"There is nothing in the report that gives me any confidence that the breach can be healed," Lewis wrote in a report Tuesday.

The investigation was launched after agents reported to legislators that laws intended to stop alcohol sales to minors were not being enforced.

Harris denied accusations by some agents that he had taken gifts from alcohol vendors, and investigators found no evidence to support that allegation.

But Lewis did say Harris had been more concerned with keeping clubs and liquor stores open than in putting a stop to sales to minors.

Eliminating frivolous suits by prisoners

By ADAM YONANS
Associated Press Writer

TALLAHASSEE — Prisoners will find it tough to sue Florida over bad food and other conditions they don't like under a bill headed to Gov. Lawton Chiles.

The legislation is designed to reduce the number of frivolous lawsuits filed by inmates. Chiles is expected to either sign the bill or let it become law without his signature.

"That will go a long way to help us eventually save money, save a lot of court time, a lot of my lawyers' time and a lot of correctional officers' time," said Attorney General Bob Butterworth, who supported the law.

The Senate voted 37-0 on Wednesday for the bill (CS-HB 37). The House earlier had passed the measure 118-0.

Butterworth estimated the state spends about $5 million on inmates' lawsuits and about 2,000 are pending at any one time.

The number of inmate lawsuits nationwide has soared from 2,000 in 1970 to 33,000 in 1990, according to the National Association of Attorneys General. Most of the suits are brought by inmates representing themselves, and taxpayers foot the bill.

In Florida, examples include prisoners who have sued over the lack of raincoats, the use of reconstituted milk rather than fresh milk, the presence of gristle in a turkey leg and meals of two pancakes instead of three.

"These kind of things have gotten out of hand," said Sen. Charlie Crist, R-St. Petersburg, himself the target of a suit by an inmate in Polk County upset about the state's chain gang law that Crist helped pass last year.

The bill makes it easier for judges to dismiss petty lawsuits. It also makes it difficult for prisoners to sue and to prove they are indigent before they can get court costs waived.

Prisoners who proceed with frivolous suits can lose gain-time.

The legislation requires court approval before inmates can submit any item that is not in the form of paper documents. Prisoners have filed or attempted to file sandwiches, soiled toilet paper and bloody underwear as part of their lawsuits.

Sen. Rick Dantzler, D-Winter Haven, the sponsor of the Senate bill, said the measure wasn't designed to completely eliminate inmates' access to courts.

"I didn't want to do anything that unfairly or wrongly denied access," he said. "Inmates are entitled to that just like anyone else." The effective date of the bill is July 1.

Perot touts third party to 'fix what's wrong' with nation

By ERIC SMITH
Associated Press Writer

PHILADELPHIA — Ross Perot spoke for neighborhood schools, neighborly self-help and a flexible approach to affirmative action during the latest stop in his campaign for a third party.

Perot, speaking to a crowd of 500 Rotarians on Wednesday, warned of a nation headed for trouble because of rising taxes, bad schools, an unbalanced budget and a shrinking middle class.

After a week of appearing on broadcast programs to promote himself and his new Reform Party, the Dallas billionaire is on the road for a speaking tour aides say will eventually take him to nearly every state.

Supporters said they launched petition drives Wednesday to get the party on the ballot in Pennsylvania and New Jersey. It is already on the ballot in seven states: California, North Dakota, Utah, South Carolina, Montana, Minnesota and Virginia.

Also at the luncheon were members of the Patriot Party, which traces itself back to Perot's 1992 presidential bid. Nicholas Sabatine, the party's national chairman, said he met with Perot and urged him to work with his old organization, too.

Asked whether he would run for president and urged by some questioners to do so, Perot refrained from declaring himself a candidate, focusing instead on his warning that the nation is headed for trouble and a third political party is needed to save it.

"Sixty-two percent of the American people want a new party," Perot said, saying he wanted to found a party "that belongs to the people, not the special interests."

Perot inveighed against big government, deficit spending and a shallow political system. He decried U.S. trade policies and the decline of American manufacturing.

Asked about affirmative action, Perot said he favored a hard look at where problems remain to be addressed, and then appointing a blue-ribbon committee to monitor its progress.

"Let's keep it dynamic through changing times, to try to get through this phase in our country's history. I do not want to keep it frozen, because everything in our country is changing," he said.

But when he was urged to name a black woman as a running mate, Perot had had enough.

"Everybody that's a U.S. citizen is welcome (in a new party)," Perot said. "But once we come in, we'll be the dumbest group in the world if we concentrate on Group A here and Group B here, and we all stake out our turf, and say 'We all want something for us.' 'Us' is the American people."

What poor children in cities need, Perot said, is neighborhood schools.

"If I could wish for one thing for all the children in the disadvantaged community, it would be tiny, little neighborhood schools that their parents could be involved in, where learning is stressed, and you'd tap each child's full potential," he said.

Perot, who was confronted Tuesday night by a Texas A&M student who said her generation didn't trust politicians' promises, urged the Rotarians to remain involved.

"Please, if you don't remember anything else I say today: You cannot as a voter in this country become cynical, disillusioned, turned off and walk away from the election process. All of us have got to become more and more and more informed and involved," he said.

Get out and vote Saturday

An issue concerning several areas in Deltona which seek to be de-annexed from the recently approved city limits, has and will be discussed in the Florida House of Representatives now in session in Tallahassee.

Citizens who wished to voice their opinions on these matters were told to write to their district representative. Unfortunately, a portion of the area is in District 33, and there is presently no district 33 representation in the house since the resignation of Rep. Marvin Couch after his arrest for cavorting with a prostitute.

While the problems of certain individuals in Deltona don't necessarily affect the people of Sanford or portions of Seminole County, the lack of adequate representation certainly does. The people, regardless of where they live, deserve adequate legislative representation at all times.

This Saturday, registered Republicans in District 33, will have their opportunity to select their candidate. Then, later in April, it will be another election with the winner of this Saturday's Republican race facing the sole Democratic contender.

The choice is up to the voters in the 32 Seminole County precincts plus 13 precincts in Orange County and six in Volusia County.

People are often crying out for better government. This Saturday will be one of many opportunities coming up this year to do something toward bringing this to fruition.

Vote for your choice, but we urge all Republicans in District 33 to help determine their candidate during this Saturday's election.

The polls will be open from 7 a.m. until 7 p.m. There should be no excuse for not having time to vote.

Helping stop crime

We wanted to tell you that you did a good job with the article that appeared on the front of your paper on March 13, 1996. The article was in the Today - Briefs section. Our wonderful neighbor down the street was attacked. While trying to back out of her own driveway, two young men stopped her and one of them grabbed her causing an injury. She drove to Little Champ, where an employee called the police. The police caught the two young men as they walked toward Little Champ.

We were very happy to see this sad story on the front page. When people do these kinds of crimes, they need to know that they are going to be nabbed and that the Herald will report it. Everyone needs to be involved in this. Our neighbor got help from Little Champ, the Sanford Police Department and the Sanford Herald. Thank you very much. Attacks like this should not happen, but they do. You did a great job covering this story and alerting the public.

Charles and Lenore Hammack

Don't print it

I would like to take this opportunity to cancel the paper. The newspaper in a small town should reflect on the people and since you only focus on the worst aspects of the community in printing the arrest reports of drug abusers and prostitutes you make anyone from outside the area assume that the whole town is made up of this kind of people.

For the young people of our town I would like to see some changes in the paper.

Golden state in a golden age

LOS ANGELES -- Many political scientists now believe that "coattails don't count." Not so, says California Gov. Pete Wilson, who expects to show this year that coattails do indeed count, and, in fact, so do tall coats. To prove his point, he's prepared to threaten a shutdown of California's "auto-teller," the fabled drive-in window where national candidates load up on "soft money" from the Golden State.

Wilson is worth listening to: He has done well in California as an applied political scientist, serving as a state legislator, mayor, senator, and governor, while never losing a general election. Moreover, his argument has national relevance, ranging from who will become president to term limits for politicians, and age limits for them and the rest of us.

In 1992 President Bush wrote off California early on, spending neither time nor money campaigning there. He was swamped by Bill Clinton (Results: Clinton 46 percent, Bush 33 percent, Perot 21 percent.) Wilson believes that Bush's abandonment of California was a disaster not only for Bush, but for the state GOP down-ticket.

The Republicans bounced back in 1994, ultimately capturing (very narrow) control of the State Assembly from the legendary Democratic

Speaker, Willie Brown. (The speaker makes appointments to approximately 400 state governmental boards.)

This year the GOP wants to hold the Assembly, capture control of the state Senate, and gain congressional seats.

Wilson says he has Dole's commitment that he will campaign in the state. But among Dole's strategists are those who disagree. They ask: Why fight in California, where Clinton now leads Dole by 15-20 percentage points, when their campaign could spend their time and money in the battleground Midwestern swing states where Dole can win the election, even if he loses California?

Wilson is worth listening to.

Wilson gives little credence to the current poll numbers. He says Clinton looks good now, but will be much weaker as the election plays out. (He recalls that in 1994 he trailed Kathleen Brown for the governorship by 24 percent -- and won by 15 percent.)

Clinton has visited California 23 times since he became president (more often than Ronald Reagan did -- and Reagan lived there). Many of Clinton's trips were accompanied by announcements of grants to flood-, quake- and fire-ridden California.

Wilson will explain all that as Clinton "coming to California to give us back our own money."

Wilson is telling California's GOP money men to use their wallets strategically, to guarantee that the Dole campaign really does spend quality time in California. In an earlier day, Wilson might have been expected to run for a third term as governor in 1996, at age 65, or retire. But California's term-limit law won't permit a re-election bid, and a Dole election would do wonders for the spirit and occupational longevity of senior citizens, including politicians. If Dole does not seek re-election in the year 2000, Wilson could run for president, when he would be 67. He could also run in the year 2004.

Former investigator lights into the FDA

WASHINGTON -- The Food and Drug Administration is giving its critics a dose of some familiar medicine.

Like the beleaguered tobacco executives with whom they are at war, FDA officials are trying hard to silence a former colleague who's now speaking out against the agency. But so far they've only managed to add fire to a controversy that both sides would like to end.

Just two years ago, Jim Phillips was one of the government's most feared gumshoes. As chief investigator at the FDA, Phillips was a key player in agency probes of breast implants and blood safety. Phillips came to FDA at the insistence of his old colleague, Commissioner David Keasler, with whom he had worked on the staff of Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah.

The Food and Drug Administration is giving its critics a dose of some familiar medicine.

Keasler has been one of Washington's most celebrated -- and criticized -- bureaucrats since taking over the FDA in 1991. Appointed during the Bush administration, Keasler quickly angered conservatives by taking an aggressive stand on several high-profile regulatory issues. Phillips became one of his top lieutenants -- a trouble-shooter whose years of experience as a congressional investigator helped the agency cut through red tape.

A picture from 1993 shows Keasler and Phillips standing arm in arm. "Jim, thanks for all you've done -- David," reads the inscription.

That relationship has now gone up in smoke, as Phillips has become one of the FDA's most vocal critics. Since leaving the agency for a job on Capitol Hill, Phillips contends that several important issues have been neglected in favor of Keasler's crusade against tobacco. These days, Phillips refers to Keasler as the "soundbite man" and speaks derisively of the agency's "cigarette police."

Phillips says his frustrations began when Keasler rejected his advice to focus the agency's resources on traditional concerns -- rather than taking on an all-consuming crusade like tobacco regulation, which has drained FDA resources. By mid-1994, Phillips says, any discussion that didn't deal with cigarettes fell on deaf ears with Keasler. He began to fear that the emphasis on tobacco could compromise the agency in other vital public health priorities.

Frustrated, Phillips left the agency in July 1994. Not long afterward, the sparks started to fly. A Sept. 3 letter from Phillips to Keasler sums up his concerns:

"David, the scenario that frankly worries me is this: A contaminated shipment of a bulk drug ingredient comes in from China. A pharmacy with a drug compounding marketing component (really a small or medium-sized illegal drug company) buys this shipment and people die."

When his concerns continued to go unanswered, Phillips escalated his criticism. Several angry letters were sent to Keasler and other agency officials complaining of "unfinished business" and misplaced priorities. He has left dozens of heated voice mail messages for his former colleagues, criticizing them for failing to stand up to Keasler. He's also volunteered his expertise to the House Commerce Committee, which has spent months investigating the FDA on several fronts. Phillips works for the House Banking Committee, which has no jurisdiction over the FDA.

Under increasing criticism from Phillips and others on Capitol Hill, the FDA made Phillips a persona non grata. His calls weren't returned, and his letters went unanswered.

Making marriage a big deal again

WASHINGTON--Some statistics contain their own dissertations, providing enough ammunition to support virtually any theory that comes to mind.

Try this: "In 1975, nearly 77 percent of black women in their late 20s had been married at some time in their lives. By 1990, the corresponding figure was 45 percent--a drop of over 30 points in 15 years."

What can't you make of numbers like those? Or these: The percentage of at-least-once-married black women in their early 30s declined from 87 percent in 1975 to 61 percent in 1990--26 percentage points.

The statistics (from Nicholas Eberstadt, writing in the January/February issue of Society magazine) can be used as grist for virtually any social-policy mill: welfare reform, gender equity, criminal justice, job creation, profound--and not necessarily negative--changes in America's economics and culture.

For me, the numbers represent a disaster--no, a series of disasters.

To get one matter out of the way: The statistics on black women merely foreshadow a trend involving white women as well. As is so often the case, if you want to see how black problems would look wearing a white face, just wait a generation.

But as to the problem now at hand, why do I insist on seeing it in terms of disaster? To begin with, I doubt that the majority of these never-married women are single entirely by choice. I can't give you statistics here, but I can tell you from personal experience that an enormous number of eminently eligible black women are single because they can't find comparably eligible black men.

And where are the men? In a depressing number of cases they are unemployed, undereducated, in the clutches of the criminal justice system, involved in criminal activity, or dead--of violence or of disease, notably AIDS. Moreover, one need only look at the makeup of college enrollments to see that the proportion of men that might reasonably be considered "eligible" for professional women continues to shrink.

It is possible to argue, of course, that nonmarriage, however socially awkward it may be for a time, is simply the result of a trend that has seen women become less economically dependent on men. Women no longer have to marry their financial security. (And at the other end of the income scale, women who have no financial security don't help themselves by marrying financially insecure men.) The role of the husband as protector and breadwinner has been on the decline for a long time, and we shouldn't be surprised to see the decline in marriage rates and stability.

All true, though not necessarily benign.

Besides, we are not talking only about free-choosing adults. As Eberstadt notes:

"High rates of nonmarriage, of course, can no longer be interpreted as signifying high rates of childlessness. Paralleling the breakup of two-parent families is the rise of families that never formed. Over the past four decades, our country has experienced a veritable explosion of out-of-wedlock births."

In 1960, for example, only about one birth in 20 was to an unmarried mother. By 1992, it was three in 10, and climbing. That's for all births, not just black births.

"As these large fractions should indicate," Eberstadt says, "out-of-wedlock birth is not only, or even predominantly, a black phenomenon. ... In 1992, 37 percent of the country's illegitimate births were black; 63 percent were not."

Moreover, black teen-agers accounted for fewer than one-eighth of the out-of-wedlock births of 1992. We've learned to stop calling these children "illegitimate," but terminology is the least of their problems. They are extremely likely to be poor--significantly poorer even than the children of divorce. They are more likely to spend some time as welfare dependents, with all the negative implications that involves. They (especially the boys) are far more likely than their two-parent counterparts to become involved in crime.

And even that isn't the end of the disasters. Nonmarriage doesn't mean just the absence of men from families; it means the transformation of men, and of boys. When men become unnecessary to their families, they are stripped of the socially acceptable purpose for their in-built aggressiveness. They don't stop being aggressive; they merely turn it to anti-social activity. Barbara DeFoe Whitehead has written that if you control for family makeup, you eliminate the relationship between race and crime and even of low income and crime.

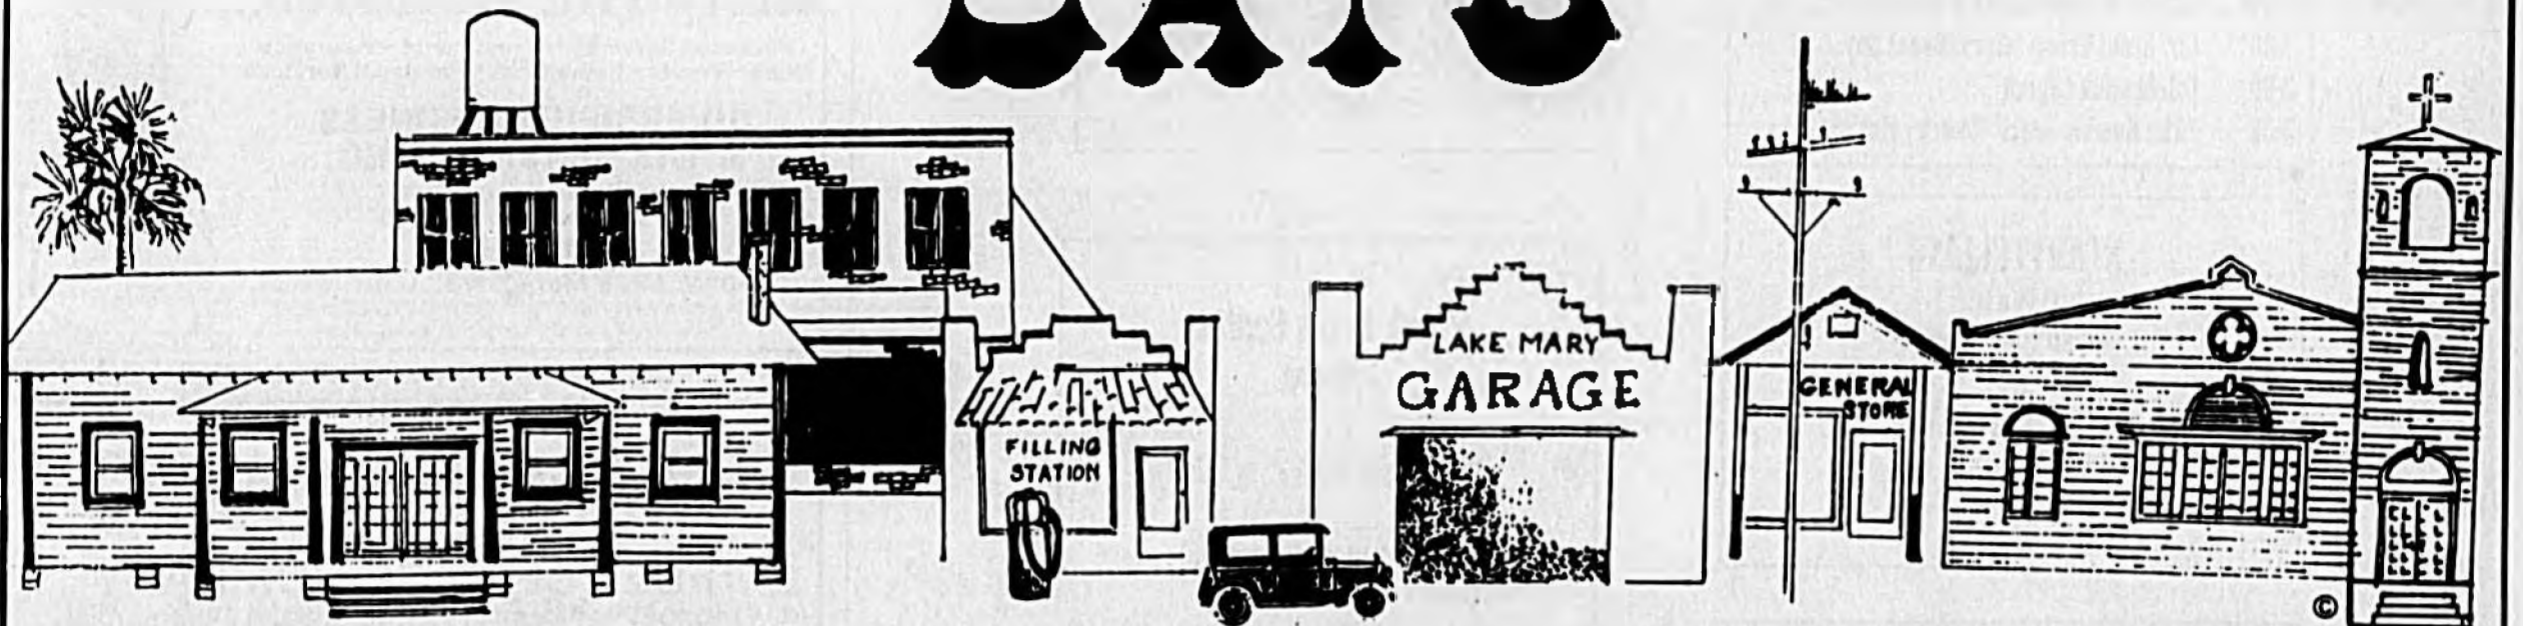

One more thing: Children of never-married parents are more likely to become unwed parents themselves, continuing the disaster yet another generation.

I look at Eberstadt's statistics and ask myself: How can we start to make marriage a big deal again?

For me, the numbers represent a disaster--no, a series of disasters.

NATIONAL BRIEFS

A world of their own

HELENA, Mont. — The "freemen" live in a world of their own. They formed their own shadow government, refuse to pay taxes and believe they are the chosen people, independent of any established authority. As their standoff with federal agents moved into a fifth day at a sprawling wheat and sheep farm outside Jordan, those familiar with the militant anti-government group say it is rooted in racism and money woes. "It was the Jews who brought the blacks into this country to destroy it. And it has, to this point, almost destroyed it unless we wake up," one member preached in a videotape of a group meeting broadcast Wednesday on ABC's Prime Time Live.

Banning late-term abortions

WASHINGTON — Legislation to ban certain late-term abortions is headed for the White House and a threatened veto as congressional Republicans present President Clinton with a difficult election-year choice. The measure gained final approval Wednesday night on a House vote of 286-129, a lopsided majority that testified to bipartisan opposition to a procedure dubbed "partial-birth abortion" by its foes. At the same time, abortion rights supporters made clear they want the veto the White House has previously threatened. "We urge President Clinton to veto this legislation and preserve the ability of women and their physicians to make sound medical judgments free of political interference," said Jane Johnson, interim president of Planned Parenthood. Final passage of the measure came after two hours of debate that was charged both politically and emotionally.

Dole to travel light

WASHINGTON (AP) — Now that Bob Dole's wrapped up the Republican nomination, how does his cash-strapped campaign compete with President Clinton until the party conventions at the end of the summer? Travel light and rely on help from the GOP, say the experts, even though Dole is up against the primary-campaign spending limit and Clinton has more than $20 million to spend. "I think there are ways for the Dole campaign to go about the country and get its message out without spending a lot of money," said Trevor Potter, a former Federal Elections Commission chairman who now specializes in campaign-finance law. For starters, the Dole campaign is already planning to put its custom-painted 727 jet, "Leader's Ship," into mothballs, and will opt for some cheaper form of air transportation in the coming months.

Deacons vote: Dig her up

THOMASVILLE, Ga. — The mother is white. The father is black. Just days after their newborn daughter died and was buried in the cemetery of an all-white Baptist church, the deacons took a vote: Dig her up. The policy of Barnett's Creek Baptist Church, dating back to its founding before the Civil War, barred minorities from being buried in its cemetery. "I couldn't understand or believe somebody could do this to a child," said the baby's mother Jamie Wireman. "It shouldn't matter what color she is. She is a child of God." Whitney Elaine Johnson lived for just 19 hours after she was born without a completely formed skull. On Friday, she was buried in a tiny plot next to her great-grandfather, two days before the deacons took their unanimous vote.

WORLD BRIEFS

Commission of Inquiry

JERUSALEM — Israel's security service failed to properly protect former Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, exposing him to "serious risks" and ignoring warnings about plots to kill him, an investigative panel found today. The commission of inquiry recommended that a senior Shin Bet official resign, and said it agreed with the decision of the agency chief, Carmi Gilon, to resign in response to Rabin's Nov. 4 assassination by a Jewish extremist. The findings came a day after Rabin's assassin, 25-year-old Yigal Amir, was convicted of murder and sentenced to life in prison. Rabin's assassination shook up the Shin Bet, the agency responsible for protecting the prime minister and uncovering assassination plots by Jewish or Palestinian extremists.

Mad cow scare

LONDON — The mad cow scare has left huge stockpiles of frozen hamburgers at McDonald's and Wimpy, patties that face an uncertain future after the fast-food giants banned British beef. "It is more than likely everything will be destroyed," said Katherine Young, a spokeswoman for Wimpy International Ltd. "You're going to be looking at millions of burgers." McDonald's is not sure what to do with its unwanted Mcmeat as Britain's biggest fast-food restaurants wrestle with the logistical difficulties of switching to non-British beef. "They're still in the freezer," said McDonald's spokeswoman Veronica Foster. "Our first concern is to get the beef back in the restaurants."

Long journey for guerrilla leaders

CARACAS, Venezuela — February 1967: Three Communist guerrilla leaders crawl through a hand-dug tunnel beneath the San Carlos military prison. No one has ever escaped from the maximum security jail. But the men reach the end of the 230-foot tunnel, climb up into a store jammed with their delighted Marxist comrades, and flee amid the chaos of Carnival. March 1996: President Rafael Caldera gathers his Cabinet to address Venezuela's worst economic crisis in years. Two of those advisers are the same men who made the spectacular prison escape. It's been a long journey for Teodoro Petkoff and Pompeyo Marquez from their days leading one of the most powerful guerrilla movements in Latin America in the 1960s.

Whose land is it?

TOKYO — For Shoichi Chibana, the problem is simple: it's his land, and he wants it back. And when the U.S. military's lease on his family's patch of land expires Sunday, he intends to try to reclaim what is his. The Japanese government doesn't see it that way. It is mobilizing hundreds of riot police to keep Chibana or any overzealous supporters off the property, which houses a U.S. Navy communications center. The efforts by Chibana and dozens of other landlords to reclaim their property have become the latest anti-U.S. military rallying point on Okinawa.

bill, takes the teeth out of the concept that we are going to end, once and for all, the dependency after a time certain," said Rep. Carlos Lacasa, R-Miami.

Democrats said the measure would keep families together and save money for the state.

Lacasa, however, said he would favor sending the children to "Boystowns" or "Giristowns" if their parents cannot support them.

"You have to look at ... the long-term benefits to this," reported Rep. Shirley Brown, D-Sarasota. "Sometimes helping them out another month or two might be a lot more cost-effective to the state."

Committee chairwoman Mary Brennan, D-Pinellas Park, said children should not be penalized for what their parents do.

The House bill, which next goes to the Appropriations Committee, would cut off Aid to Families with Dependent Children to recipients after two years or three years for those who meet certain requirements. After three years off welfare, however, they could return for two more years.

Those are the same limits in the experimental Family Transition Program now operating in eight counties and in Gov. Lawton Chiles' statewide welfare reform proposal dubbed Work First.

The Republican-controlled Senate has passed welfare reform legislation with a two-year lifetime limit. Republicans on the House committee praised the Senate version, saying it would save the state $50 million.

A committee staffer reported the House version would cost no more than $52 million if implemented all at once. However, a phased-in implementation is anticipated, which could result in cost savings of up to $30 million the first year.

Space crews spend final hours together

By MIKE DRAGO

SPACE CENTER, Houston — Atlantis astronauts spent a few final hours with colleagues aboard Russia's Mir space station today as they prepared to leave American Shannon Lucid behind for a five-month stay.

The third Atlantis-Mir linkup was to end tonight after five days of docked operations. Lucid, a 53-year-old biochemist, will remain on the station until Atlantis returns in August to pick her up.

"I guess you'd normally get in trouble for coming back one person short," shuttle commander Kevin Chilton joked today in a space-to-ground interview with CBS News. "This time I think we'll get a pal on the back." In addition to delivering Lucid, the shuttle dropped off more than 5,000 pounds of supplies, including experiment equipment and water, and will tote some Russian equipment back home.

Lucid's five-month stay will make her the U.S. space endurance champion, surpassing former Mir resident Norman Thagard, who lived there nearly four months last year.

Her arrival also begins two years of continuous American presence on Mir and — if the planned international space station is launched on schedule in 1998 — continuous U.S. presence in space well into the next century.

"Of course, our Russian friends have been keeping people up here in space for extended duration for a long time, so we're the new kids on the block," Chilton said.

The other flight highlight came Wednesday, when astronaut Linda Godwin and Michael "Rich" Clifford ventured outside the joint outpost to install several experiments on Mir. It was the first American spacewalk outside a station in 22 years.

Among items which he feels are important are the environmentally sensitive areas around Lake Jesup, the Geneva Bubble and the St. Johns River. He also lists concerns over traffic miasmas, the need to continue improvements in educational opportunities for children, safer schools and streets, and maintaining private property rights.

The Sanford Herald is today publishing a copy of the sample ballot, with a list of voter precincts in which persons registered as Republicans can make their selection.

The polls will be open Saturday from 7 a.m. until 7 p.m.

Sales

Manager Bill Simmons responded that there was perhaps not enough time for the promoter to get a short term conditional use permit as required, and that the person would have had to request such a permit from the Planning and Zoning Commission which required time.

Howell however, said he believed the promoter may have found it less expensive to pay the $600 fine rather than go through the costly process of obtaining the necessary permits.

Howell urged the commission and city staff to investigate possible methods of avoiding such activities in the future, and establishing fines and punishment for violators.

Since that time, there have been several commission discussions. Questions have been raised over how to handle such events, including whether or not proposed rules should restrict out-of-town businesses from holding similar sales.

During this past Monday's work session, Simmons presented a proposal which he said is aimed at resolving the matter. On a positive note, the proposal was said to have as its objective, "To stimulate and expand existing city of Sanford business."

In the proposal, Simmons has suggested rules be established to restrict events to not more than four consecutive days; that they may only take place in certain commercially zoned areas; and may only take place once during each two-month period, with no more than six per year.

For events of two days or less, he is suggesting a permit application fee of $500. For three to four day events, the permit would cost $800.

There are many other criteria included in the proposal.

If an event occurs without first obtaining the necessary permit, Simmons has also proposed punishment, including not allowing any further events at a particular site for four months, code enforcement fines, daily citations, and other legal remedies.

Although Howell was unable to attend the work session during this latest discussion, Simmons received a consensus from the other commissioners to continue pursuing development of these proposals.

He said he plans to begin staff study of the matters, obtain a legal review, then prepare an ordinance which would add the new rules to the original conditional use ordinance.

The matter is expected to be brought back for further discussion and a possible vote during a subsequent commission meeting.

Giuliani cancels contracts to social service agency

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Mayor Rudolph Giuliani backed off on his initial effort to privatize the city's monitoring of welfare recipients, acknowledging that his administration's $43 million deal with a little-known private agency had raised too many questions.

Shortly after the mayor announced the cancellation, federal agents served a subpoena on the agency's main office, seeking records on all city contracts granted over the last four years. The Manhattan District attorney also has begun an investigation. The New York Times reported Thursday.

The contracts were given last year to the Hellenic American Neighborhood Action Committee, or Hanac, to monitor welfare recipients and make sure they continue drug and alcohol treatment.

The nonprofit social service agency was chosen even though it submitted the most expensive bid for the work and wasn't the top-rated competitor.

Also, the chairman of the board that runs the private agency said the bid had been made by a renegade employee who had overstepped his authority and had little experience in managing such a program.

"I'm very unhappy with the whole process and I canceled the contract," Giuliani said. "It may very well be that there were just technical rules that were not followed, but technical rules are important."

The city's Human Resources Administration said it chose Hanac because it was the only bidder that showed a real commitment to monitor welfare recipients aggressively.

Hanac's board members reportedly have made sizable contributions to both Republican and Democratic politicians in New York. But that had nothing to do with the contracts, said deputy mayor Peter Powers.

The agency also had hired the son of one of Giuliani's lifelong friends. The New York Times reported Thursday. Mayor Giuliani said he disapproved of that because it created an appearance of impropriety.

Hanac's board chairman, John Catalmatidis, also alleged that an employee, George Sarani, had improperly set up a separate corporation to run the welfare programs.

Hanac attorney James Armenakis said the corporation that got the contracts was a Hanac corporation and that there was no internal problem. "Just differences in philosophy" as members of any board might have.

Armenakis said he was "amazed the mayor has taken this precipitous action" and that there was "an element of unfairness to it since nobody's been able to point out any wrongdoing."

Powers said Tuesday that the low bidder, the East Harlem Council for Community Improvement, was passed over because it had failed a computer check which showed that three of its employees had been involved in a $1.1 million fraud case in 1991.

City Comptroller Alan Hevesi had questioned the selection of Hanac, after being unable to find out for months to find out why the contracts went to the agency. Giuliani said Hevesi should have been aware of the fraud case involving East Harlem Council and that the organization owed back taxes.

Three killed, nine hurt when blast rocks mill

By NANCY ARMOUR Associated Press Writer

PORTAGE, Ind. — A high-pressure tank exploded at a steel mill Wednesday, killing three workers and hurling metal siding and other debris a quarter-mile away. Nine workers were injured.

The cause of the blast at the Beta Steel Corp. plant wasn't clear. Workers said a supervisor had been warned Monday that the tank had been leaking. The company also had a history of safety violations, according to state records.

"All of a sudden there was a huge explosion, like a time bomb," said Lee Spitka, a supervisor at Beta Steel 30 miles southeast of Chicago. "People were just running all over the place. They were scattering because they didn't know what was going to fall next."

Kevin Myers, who was killed, had complained about the tank in a written report to a supervisor Monday, said a worker who asked not to be identified. Someone welded the tank Monday to keep it from leaking, workers said.

"We were worried about it, but they assured us it was safe," one man said.

About 50 to 60 employees were in the mill at the time. But because of a shift change, most were not on the production floor.

The explosion ripped through a corner of the building, tore gaping holes in a three-story wall and hurled 10-by-15-foot sheets of metal siding into the parking lot.

Spitka said the explosion was in a basement tank that contained either water or hydraulic fluid under high pressure. The company would not say what blew up, only that it happened in or near the descaling accumulation tank, where water to clean hot-rolled steel is kept under high pressure.

Beta Vice President Grant Rutzler said he had not heard of a complaint from Myers. He said the only complaints from Indiana's Occupational Safety and Health Administration that he was aware of had been "very minor."

However, Indiana OSHA records show 16 serious violations over the past three years and $18,400 in fines. In almost every case the fines were cut in half when the company took corrective action.

State investigators were on the scene, as were agents of the federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms.

"We're looking at several different things. We just don't know right now," police Sgt.

John Rogers said.

Myers, 36, Mario Ortiz, 25, and Dennis Janisczewski, 37, were killed. The men, known as oil basement attendants, worked with the high pressure tank suspected in the explosion.

Two other employees were in fair condition with broken bones and internal injuries.

Beta Steel takes steel produced elsewhere and shapes it into coils and other products for manufacturers.

The mill, with about 250 employees, opened four years ago in an industrial park on Lake Michigan about five miles east of Gary.

"It was dark and scary when the explosion happened. It was terrifying," said employee David Varney, who escaped injury.

Employees met anxious family members at the main gate.

"I'm OK, I'm fine," Varney said to his ex-wife, Pam James. She nodded with relief. "I feel much better knowing my kids are going to be OK and he's going to be OK," she said.

Roscoe Myers, the father of Kevin Myers, said he heard about the explosion while driving Wednesday morning.

"I got an eerie feeling," he said. "I just knew it was my son."

Truck driver was a real animal

UHRICHSVILLE — Patrolman James Myers said he thought he had a drunk driver on his hands when he spotted a pickup pulling out of a shopping center parking lot without any lights.

The truck turned onto a city street, ran over a median and went onto a private lawn, where it narrowly missed a house and a parked truck. It went through a ditch and into a muddy cornfield, police said.

Myers said he thought the driver might be evading him, so he drove his cruiser out into the field — and promptly got stuck.

When the truck turned back toward the cruiser, Myers realized the driver was a medium-sized black-and-white collie mix that did not appear to be drunk or intentionally evading the police.

The pickup kept going into a second field, where it stopped after hitting a utility pole. The dog was unhurt.

Harvard alums fight renovations

By JON MARCUS Associated Press Writer

CAMBRIDGE — At first, Harvard alumni turned up their noses at changes proposed for a landmark turn-of-the-century dining hall. And as construction went forward, they got angry.

Now they have won a temporary court order halting the multimillion-dollar project, saying the renovations ridicule tradition.

"You just don't go around ripping down the monuments of your forefathers," said Matthew Cohen, an architect and Harvard alumnus.

The room, which admirers call the Great Hall and university officials disparage as an old cafeteria, was built in 1901. Plans call for it to be divided into three stories with a connecting atrium.

The 35-foot-high ornamented ceiling and wood paneling already were removed before a judge this week ordered construction to stop until a hearing can be held to see if Harvard violated state historic preservation laws.

Meantime, more than 130 architects from around the country have signed a petition opposing the project. And the entire faculty of the university's own Graduate School of Design also has weighed in against it.

"This isn't about clinging to some old-boy vision of cigars and leather armchairs," said H.A. Crosby Forbes, a founding member of the Harvard Alumni Architectural Review Committee. "It's about understanding that Harvard has stewardship of some great treasures of American architecture."

LAKELAND — Felipe Lira, who will pitch Detroit's opener April 1 at Minnesota, worked six innings in his final spring start as the Tigers defeated the Florida Marlins 5-4 Wednesday.

Lira gave up three runs on 11 hits, with two walks and four strikeouts. Matt Mantel, the second of six Marlins pitchers, took the loss.

Brian Williams, who has been designated the Tigers' new closer, earned the save despite yielding a solo homer to Andre Dawson with two outs in the ninth.

Terry Pendleton had an RBI double in the Marlins' three-run third. Joe Orsulak finished the rally with a two-run single.

The Tigers took the lead with two runs in the fifth. Mark Parent doubled and scored on Alan Trammell's triple. Robitaille finished off the Panthers with his second goal and 22nd of the season at 17:05 of the third, stuffing in a shot during a scramble.

LAKE MARY — Sophomore Ben Knapp was four-for-four with two RBI and combined with junior Kenny Birch on an eight-hitter to lead Oviedo to a 6-4 victory over Lake Mary in Seminole Athletic Conference and Class 6A, District 4 baseball action at Lake Mary high school.

"This is a good win for us," said Oviedo coach Kenne Brown. "We were coming off of a few one-run losses, and we overcame a big hurdle by closing out the seventh inning. This gives us a good mental boost."

Carey Hobbs gave Lake Mary the first boost of the game with a two out single, took second on a wild pitch, and scored on an error to make the score 1-0.

Oviedo responded in the fourth inning as David Devito led-off with a double, reached third on a sacrifice

Don't squander your earnings

Put your income tax refund back to work

If you've already filed your federal income tax return, you're probably checking your mailbox every day, looking for that special envelope from the Internal Revenue Service with the government check inside. Every day, you fantasize about what you're going to do with all that money, because you've worked hard all year and you deserve a new stereo, or a big-screen TV, or a new car, right?

Wrong!
The worst mistake you can make when you get a refund from the IRS is to perceive it as "found" money. Many people tend to forget that their refund is, in fact, "earned" money. It's money that was held from your earnings throughout the year to pay your income tax and the only reason you're due a refund is because your employer withheld more than necessary.

In fact, if you find that you receive a large tax refund every year, you should consider reducing the amount of your withholdings. For example, if your refund this year is $1,000, that means you could have increased your take-home paycheck by more than $83 a month, and still not owed anything to the IRS on April 15.

In effect, by having so much money withheld from your earnings, you are establishing a savings program that earns absolutely no interest for you. More to the point, you are extending an interest-free loan to the federal government. So if you're getting a big refund, and would rather have that money in your paycheck, talk to your employer about reducing your withholding amount.

BARBARA MORTON

Personal finance

If, however, you do receive a significant refund, you still have to decide what to do with the money. Too often, people take their check and use it to buy something they really don't need — a luxury item that's more of a toy than a necessity. They'll take a cruise to the islands or buy a new wardrobe. Unfortunately, that's not the best way to put your refund to work. The best way to use those funds is to eliminate or reduce your debts.

Make a priority list for repaying your debts, starting with the highest-interest loan first and working your way down, then put your refund toward the top item on the list. If you have any money left over, put it toward the second item on the list. If your refund is high enough, and your debts low enough, you might be able to wipe the slate clean.

And by all means, don't use that refund as a down payment on a major purchase unless it's something you absolutely need. Using that extra money as a down payment on a new car only increases your debt and adds a new payment to your monthly bills.

If you don't have any debts, use the money to invest in yourself. In other words, put the money in a savings account as an emergency fund, just in case you ever lose your job, or need a new roof, or have a medical emergency. Another option for your refund is to consider a safe investment program — such as a mutual fund or CD — for your future. Check with a reputable investment adviser for more information.

Letters from old flame give woman confidence

DEAR ABBY: "Irritated in Ojai, Calif." was bothered by the fact that her husband has kept love letters from a previous girlfriend for more than 12 years and through three moves.

I've kept a previous boyfriend's love letters for 23 years and through seven moves. My husband has never asked me to dispose of them, and I wouldn't toss them even if he asked me to. These letters, along with other assorted keepsakes, help me define who I am now, based in part on who I've been in the past. The letters are nothing more than a record of a girl who was able to love and be loved — an important concept to someone who felt unloved by her family.

In my mind, they affirm my ability to have a loving relationship with my husband. Please encourage "Irritated" not to stop at simply telling her husband how she feels about the letters (and then waiting for him to "toss them out"). Tell her to take the time to explore with him the reason he has kept those letters. It may be an eye-opening, soul-searching experience for them both!

DARLENE IN REDONDO BEACH, CALIF.

DEAR DARLENE: While it may be a "soul-searching experience" for some, it could be something else for others.

People keep love letters for a variety of reasons, but it's a pretty good bet that there is an underlying sentimental reason. This is the private business of the keeper — why must it be "explained"?

DEAR ABBY: My live-in boyfriend of eight years has recently begun a pen pal correspondence (via computer and actual mail) with three young females in various parts of the country. He says this shouldn't upset me because he just wants to be "friends" with these women, but I notice he writes only to women and tries to make his letters as charming and witty as possible. (He has never mentioned me.) There is also the possibility that he could secretly meet with one of these women who happens to live fairly close.

ADVICE

I call it "selling" himself, but he denies it. Nevertheless, these sound very much like the letters he used to send me during our courtship.

I am angry because I think this is inappropriate for someone who has a commitment to someone else. It is starting to hurt our relationship. What do you think?

CONFUSED IN CINCINNATI

DEAR CONFUSED: If, after eight years of living together, your boyfriend is seeking female pen pals to charm, I would question his degree of commitment, as well as his level of honesty. Trust your instincts. I suspect they are correct.

(Problems? Write to Dear Abby For a personal, unpublished reply, send a self-addressed, stamped envelope to Dear Abby, P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, Calif. 90069. All correspondence is confidential.)

Is dizziness linked to menopause?

DEAR DR. GOTT: Ever since I began experiencing menopausal changes, I've suffered from intermittent dizziness. I sought medical attention six years ago because of the vertigo and no one has found a cause. I've seen an ENT specialist, a GYN specialist, have had many tests and cannot resolve this. Yet, when speaking with other menopausal women, they have also experienced the same symptoms. Is there any direct correlation between menopause and intermittent dizziness?

DEAR READER: I am unaware of any customary correlation between vertigo and menopause. In many cases, the cause of vertigo is unknown; in others, it may result from edema (swelling) of the inner ear or from deficient circulation.

Because fluid balance is frequently upset by menopause leading to water retention and edema — and older women may experience poor circulation, too — I suppose that in a general way, the conditions could theoretically be related. However, this is not the rule.

I recommend a consultation with another ear specialist, who may choose to obtain an MRI scan. This special test permits doctors to see parts of the body's interior, much as X-rays do, but in more detail. In this way, my theory of edema/poor circulation, which could be treated, can be confirmed or rejected.

DEAR DR. GOTT: My wife, 42, had a seizure in 1994 that her doctor attributed to alcohol withdrawal. She was placed on Dilantin, and the Department of Motor Vehicles revoked her driver's license. She continues to test "sub-therapeutic," and the DMV will not return her license until her doctor says it's OK for her to drive. She's had no more seizures and is alcohol-free. She doesn't want to remain on medication for the rest of her life. What's the alternative?

DEAR READER: Your wife, who has engaged in alcohol abuse, suffered a seizure that may have been caused by alcohol withdrawal. So far, so good. This is a fairly standard situation.

Sudden cessation of heavy drinking can cause seizures; this is the reason that alcohol is considered addictive. The body becomes dependent on it. When the alcoholic stops drinking without medical supervision (and prescription drugs to assist detoxification), seizures can result.

At that point, the doctor placed her on anti-convulsant medication. Subsequent blood tests have shown a sub-optimal level of Dilantin in her system. You do not indicate that she has had additional seizures.

Therefore, I conclude that she did, indeed, experience a single convulsive episode, probably related to alcohol. If she doesn't drink, she won't have any more seizures.

This is where the picture becomes less clear. Most doctors would have stopped the medication after a few months, obtained a brain wave test (to check for epilepsy, an inherited seizure disorder) and monitored your wife's health. If she remained seizure-free for a year, the majority of Motor Vehicle Departments would re-issue her license, providing that she remained abstinent and the doctor confirmed that she was no longer a threat on the road.

I'm confused why she is still on medication. Conversely, I do not understand why, while taking therapy, her Dilantin blood levels were not taken more seriously. It would be customary to increase the dose of the drug until a therapeutic level were obtained. The doctor can't have it both ways; either he would discontinue treatment or make sure that she receives an appropriate amount. If she doesn't need the Dilantin (and I doubt that she does), she shouldn't have to take it the rest of her life.

WIN AT BRIDGE

Now or later?

By Phillip Alder

Knowledge of Latin has to increase one's English vocabulary. Maybe you know what "cunctator" means. The word was given as a nickname to Quintus Fabius Maximus Verrucosus, so if you know about him, you will have no trouble with today's deal.

West leads the heart king against six spades. How would you plan the play?

The auction is difficult, with South effectively bidding six spades all on his own. Yet the final contract is reasonable.

Most players would win the first trick in the dummy, discarding the club seven from hand, and take the club finesse. They would get home if either the club finesse worked or the (trumps broke 2-2. Reasonable, but unsuccessful with this layout. Strange as it seems at first glance, it is right to win the first trick by ruffing in hand. If the trumps are 2-2, you are laydown. Yet when the trumps split 3-1, you have another chance. Just unblock the diamond ace before exiting in trumps.

At the worst, East has the three trumps and exits with a club. But then you take the finesse, retaining the same chance as you had by winning the first trick in the dummy. Here, though, West wins the spade trick and is employed. If he leads a red-suit card, you discard your club losers on dummy's heart ace and diamond king. And if he leads a club, he takes the finesse for you.

A cunctator is someone who procrastinates. Quintus Fabius became known as the Cunctator for his successful delaying tactics in the Second Punic War against Hannibal.
