Male Animal' Scheduled By Theatre Group

Auditions for "The Male Animal," first play by the Roundaliers, newly formed Seminole County theater group, will be held Thursday at 7:30 p.m. at the old Capri Club in Sanford. The James Thurber-Elliott Nugent comedy has 13 roles, and men and women of all ages are needed. Rehearsals are scheduled to begin March 15, with performance the end In "The Male Animal." admirably pointed high comedy wit and satire are combine cleverly with pure and simple farce to accentuate a basic theme having serious domestic and academic overtones. Midwestern university English professor Tommy Turner (Thurber's typically quiet, inoffensive little man) is married to his college sweetheart,

When her ex-beau arrives for the annual Homecoming football game, the battle o the sexes begins. Further complicating things is a trustee-faculty controversy over Tommy's academic freedom to read the allegedly anarchistic Vanzetti letter to his English class.

His dismissal imminent, Tommy rejects Ellen's attempt to dissuade him, literally forces her to run off with the ex-beau, then garners enough courage to win her back through fisticuffs.

Impressed with this new side of her male animal, Ellen is won over completely when Tommy refuses to deny publicly that he will read the letter, thereby standing firmly on his principle of academic freedom. Throughout, Thurber's hand s evident, not only in his

It seems to be a fundamental law of human nature that the frequency of arguments about a particular ubject is inversely proportional to the quantity of facts in possession of the disputants. If this could be called the First Law of Verbal Dynamics, a Second Law would be that the violence of an argument varies with the degree of personal commitment to one side or the other.

In other words, the fewer facts two opponents are armed with and the more devoted they are to their own beliefs, the louder and more often they are going to argue.

Scientists, for example, may ar-gue, but they seldom do it with a passion because they abide by cer-tain agreed-upon methods for findng out the facts. They also know that what isn't known today will be discovered tomorrow, so there isn't my use in getting emotional about At the other extreme, when it comes to things like politics or re-ligion, where one man's "facts" are as good as another's, people have been known to kill each other-en masse-to prove a point.

Both of these "laws" seem to be in full operation in this country over the Vietnam issue. They were certainly in full force when the Senate began debate on the President's request for several more billions in an emergency military appropriation bill to pursue the war.

The elusive facts missing from what some are beginning to call the Great Debate can be boiled down to a few simple questions: Is this war necessary? If it is, can will take to win it? And if the war is not necessary, why are we in it and how can we get out of it? For the majority of Americans, the answer to the first question is apparently "yes." They are convinc-ed that it is vital to the future security of this nation, and of all free peoples, that a Communist takeover in South Vietnam be prevented. For them the issue is, are we handling the war in the way best calculated to bring it to an honorable close, or are we caught willy-nilly in a rising spiral of death and destruction? In short, do we know exactly what we are doing? But a lot of other people, including a lot of senators, believe fervently that the answer to the first question is "no." They demand that this answer be honestly faced and that this country begin thinking immediately of ways and means of withdrawing from a dishonorable and dangerous involvement.

Presumably, the administration is in the best position to know the essential facts about Vietnam. If it is, it has not done the best job of pre-senting them to the people over the past few years. Some would charge that it has deliberately distorted on hidden them.

In any crisis, of course, there are always some facts which cannot be disclosed for reasons of national security. What is beginning to dis-turb many people, however, is not that the government has suppress-ed or falsified the facts about Vietnam but that it may still be groping for them like the rest of us. If so, and if the "Laws of Verbal Dynamics" are valid, the Great Dewe win it and are we doing what it bate has only begun to heat up.

novel and improved method of making salt. Since then nearly 3,250,000 patents have been grantedalmost all of them under the patent system provided for by the United States constitu-

The Patent Office here frequently is cited as the greatest storehouse of applied scientific and technical knowledge in the world.

In fact, the industrial history of the United States can be studied in a fascinating way by glancing through patents granted to such figures as Heary Ford, Alexander Graham Bell, Guglielmo Marconi, Samuel Morse, Elias Howe and thousands of others. But Thomas A. Edison still is the all-time champ.
