Fletcher's Candidacy

Of all the public officials in Florida, there is none who receives a greater share of public confidence than Senator Duncan U. Fletcher, and his recent announcement that he is enjoying the best health of his life and very certainly will be a candidate to succeed himself in the elections of next year, will be accepted with considerable satisfaction by a vast majority of the people of this state.

For some months rumors have been flying thick and fast to the effect that the Senator was not in good health, that he would not run for re-election, that this one or that one would run against him. Senator Fletcher speaks these rumors in the following statement recently given to the press:

"I have heard of these rumors and have traced them down and have found they are all wild and have no foundation in fact."
"For instance, the rumor that this one or that one was considering running against me, I found to be wholly untrue."
"The rumor that I might not run on account of my age or health was likewise manufactured and imaginary."
"The rumor that I might announce and later withdraw for some purpose was, of course, absurd."
"It is strange how rumors start and spread. Generally they are wholly unreliable and it is so easy to learn the truth by a simple inquiry."

"Yesterday a letter came from a friend in Jacksonville, saying: 'I heard you were in Jacksonville last week and am sorry I did not see you.' The fact is, I have been in Washington continuously, attending daily to the numerous public matters which have pressed upon me here."
"I have no hesitation in saying that I intend to be a candidate to succeed myself in the primaries next June."
"Advices have come from all portions of the State that the people wish me to continue and they contain the very gratifying assurance that I will have no opposition."
"That would be a great relief."
"The facts are, my health was never better and I do not remember a time when I felt quite so well. My experience here, position on important committees, relations with my colleagues, knowledge of the departments and acquaintance with the various officials, the general know-how, make it possible for me to render more valuable service to the State and country than ever before."

"I know the people of Florida, the needs of the State, what the people require and have a right to expect of those they choose for public office. I value their confidence and support and will give them all my strength and energy, as in the past."
Senator Fletcher has served Florida long and well. He is one of the commanding figures of the United States Senate, regardless of party affiliations; and throughout a period of many years which have seen Republicans very largely in control of things at the national capital, Senator Fletcher has gone merrily along working for Florida, realizing most of his objectives, and ably holding down important positions on many Senate committees.

We are glad to learn for a certainty that he will again be a candidate next year, and feel sure that his candidacy will receive the united support of the people.

Hurting The South

The effect of the Russian policy of "dumping" commodities in competition with those produced in this country, is clearly shown in an editorial recently appearing in the Manufacturers Record, which points out that many of the staples and other exports released upon world markets at prices far below the actual costs necessary in this country, is having a serious effect upon business, particularly in the South.

Among the principal products of the South are lumber, cotton, coal and oil. As a matter of fact, the South furnishes forty-seven percent of this country's lumber; forty percent of the coal; sixty-three percent of the oil, and ninety-five percent of the cotton, which latter is fifty-four percent of the entire world's supply. The principal exports of Soviet Russia are wheat, cotton, lumber, oil, coal and manganese.

"Through cotton exports," the Record explains, "the South has always contributed vitally to the maintenance of this nation's favorable foreign trade balance. Russia's exports of cheap cotton, while amounting to only 150,000 bales, have tended to further the depression of world cotton prices. In the meantime, the Soviet has increased its cotton area this year to more than 8,000,000 acres, or a gain of 60 per cent over 1930. Such a supply offered at any price that can be obtained, is a constant threat to American growers."

Cheap Russian manganese imported into this country has been a factor in stopping the development of the manganese industry in the South. The dumping of Russian wheat on American markets has been detrimental to the whole country and particularly to the Southwest which produces a large part of our total crop. Likewise Soviet lumber and coal imports have an adverse influence on Southern business.

Such unreasonable competition affects the market for American goods both at home and abroad and cannot help but hinder our business recovery. It is estimated that the vicious methods employed in carrying out the Soviet purpose has deprived world industry of $60,000,000 buyers in China, India and other markets. It is unbelievable that such a condition can continue indefinitely, but as long as it does exist we must protect our own industries as far as we are able. It is impossible to prevent unfair competition against our foreign trade, but we can prevent the invasion of our domestic markets by an embargo on Russian products."

CANDLE LIGHT

By Nina Oliver Pease

The influx of Nordic immigrants has brought to the attention of late not only the blond-haired beauty of La Dietrich but her handsome gentleman whose face bears the unmistakable features of the German student. While America is being criticized for the brutality of its football and football associated for the blood-thirstiness of its bull ring, it might be of interest to give a passing glimpse to the gentle old Heidelberg custom of student dueling.

Not long ago in Munich a boy died from infection of a wound received in a student duel, and naturally enough, many controversies, both in the courts and in the press, followed this tragedy. Although the members of the fraternities at the University of Heidelberg who usually furnish the dueling, maintain staunchly that the fatalities caused in these affairs are no more frequent than the football deaths in our country, it seems to me that such events are rather dangerous weapons to be used by friendly enemies.

The duels, called "mannen," are supposed to be banned by the law but in most localities, they are not only tolerated but also considered good sport. In the province of Baden, however, where the University of Heidelberg is located, laws against dueling are enforced and the students fight their battles in the neighboring village of Neckarsteinach, where the representatives of the various fraternities regularly meet to defend the honor of the organization to which they belong. The blunt weapons of the class room are abandoned in favor of real swords, and the body of each combatant is protected, but his face is exposed except for goggles over the eyes.

Each fighter has three assistants, his skunkant, or second, his schlepper, or supporter, and his testant, or tester. The second is a familiar figure, of course, both in European novels of other days and in Mississippi River fiction. A time not so long ago when gentlemen arose early and rode to some deserted field to settle an affair of honor, but the schlepper, whose name savors of German food, and the testant have not been so well celebrated. The schlepper's function is to support the sword and sword arm of his principal during periods between fighting in order that the sword might not be allowed to touch any thing. The testant is present to keep the sword sterile by wiping it with gauze-soaked in antiseptic. The duel can only be stopped during its twenty minutes of duration by the surgeon if he believes a dueler to be in actual danger, or by the seconds if they detect any finishing or wincing on the part of the combatants. This is considered a heinous offense and merely every modern penological study would come individual treatment for the convict and a realization that the true function of a penal system is educational, in a broad sense, rather than merely repressive. From this would flow a development of the parole system—the best means yet devised for releasing prisoners from confinement—and of the probation system, which makes it possible to avoid confinement for those individuals who would be better treated without it. All this is in line with the best thought of present-day experts. Unfortunately, the whole problem of reformation is still in an experimental stage and the effectiveness of the various methods proposed, including the prison farm, remains to be established.

It is obvious that any state attempting such a program will encounter a serious difficulty: the first of them being financial. Here the report points out that the cost of such things as parole and probationary systems, segregation and individualization might be met by the savings on the expensive fortresses which present methods require. It can be added that a penal system, really new in spirit in method and in objective, might in the long run effect huge direct savings in the prevention of crime, not far more, perhaps, than the financial difficulty is the difficulty of securing the personnel necessary to establish and govern such a system. The best of human control of the present conditions in New York at the moment would be to have the necessary personnel to carry out the program. The

I suppose it's just a prejudice of mine from being brought up on chicken and waffles instead of wiener schnitzels and sauerkraut, but a rough and tumble scramble on a football field with a broken collar bone at the bottom of the waving pile of arms and legs seems decidedly less gruesome than two men with unprotected faces skewering each other's cheeks while the testant stands by with antiseptic gauze to wipe

CHANNEL MARKERS

IN THE earlier days this country, spending the family budget used to be a hazardous business. It was only by hard experience that a householder learned to steer clear of bad bargains and come into port with his money's worth.

There were snags and shoals aplenty. Inferior goods and unscrupulous merchandising methods made the channel dangerous. "Let the buyer beware" was an accepted slogan of trade.

Fortunately for millions of consumers, this condition has wholly changed in more recent years. The channel has been charted. Fairly advertised, trade-marked goods of known value are for sale in every city and hamlet. The buyer knows he can trust such products. He reads the advertisements in his paper, chooses the commodities he needs and makes his purchases with the knowledge that he will get full value for his outlay.

The advertising columns of this newspaper point the way to satisfaction. If you make it a habit to read these daily you will save money and save time.
