City's two big decisions

Bank nixed as cop station

By NICK PFEIFAU

SANFORD — A proposal which would have moved the Sanford police department to the First Federal Building on W. First Street in downtown Sanford, was nixed yesterday afternoon. The matter was strongly discussed during the city commission work session, but the commissioners gave a consensus vote to reject the plan.

Both Donald T. Carrigan, presently leasing the 33,750 square foot building, and Keith Reeves, president of Architects Design Group, met with the commission to discuss their findings.

Carrigan offered the city the opportunity to lease the building on an annual rate of approximately $343,000 per year for a 15 year See Police, Page 5A

Airport lease nixed, bonds OK'd

By NICK PFEIFAU

SANFORD — A lease agreement turning full control over the Orlando Sanford Airport from the city to the Sanford Airport Authority was denied Monday night. Instead, Sanford commissioners narrowly voted to pass two resolutions concerning airport control.

The request for more control over the airport had been made several months ago when the authority said the obtaining of long-term leases for major construction and other developments at the airport was hindered by the lack of assurance that the city would not interfere.

After a series of meetings and discussions between the city, airport officials and their respective attorneys, a final draft of a lease was drawn up. The Airport Authority See Airport, Page 5A

CASSELBERRY — Area Masonic Lodge members learned this past weekend that it is better to give than to receive.

That old saying was brought into focus in a very real way for the volunteers who helped coordinate the annual Children's Christmas Party at the Casselberry Masonic Lodge this past Saturday morning.

Over 80 needy children between the ages of one and 13 from across Seminole County were treated to a party featuring clowns, gills, snacks and a visit from Santa Claus and Mrs. Claus.

Organizers said when they heard the voices of 80 youngsters singing carols and laughing, saw the smiling faces and received that heart-felt "thank you" as each child left the party, they forgot about the time and effort it took to put on the party. They knew inside that they had been repaid many times over.

A trio of clowns kept the children entertained with magic tricks and by making balloon animals for each child. Clowns led the group in Christmas carols until the arrival of the jolly old elf and Mrs.

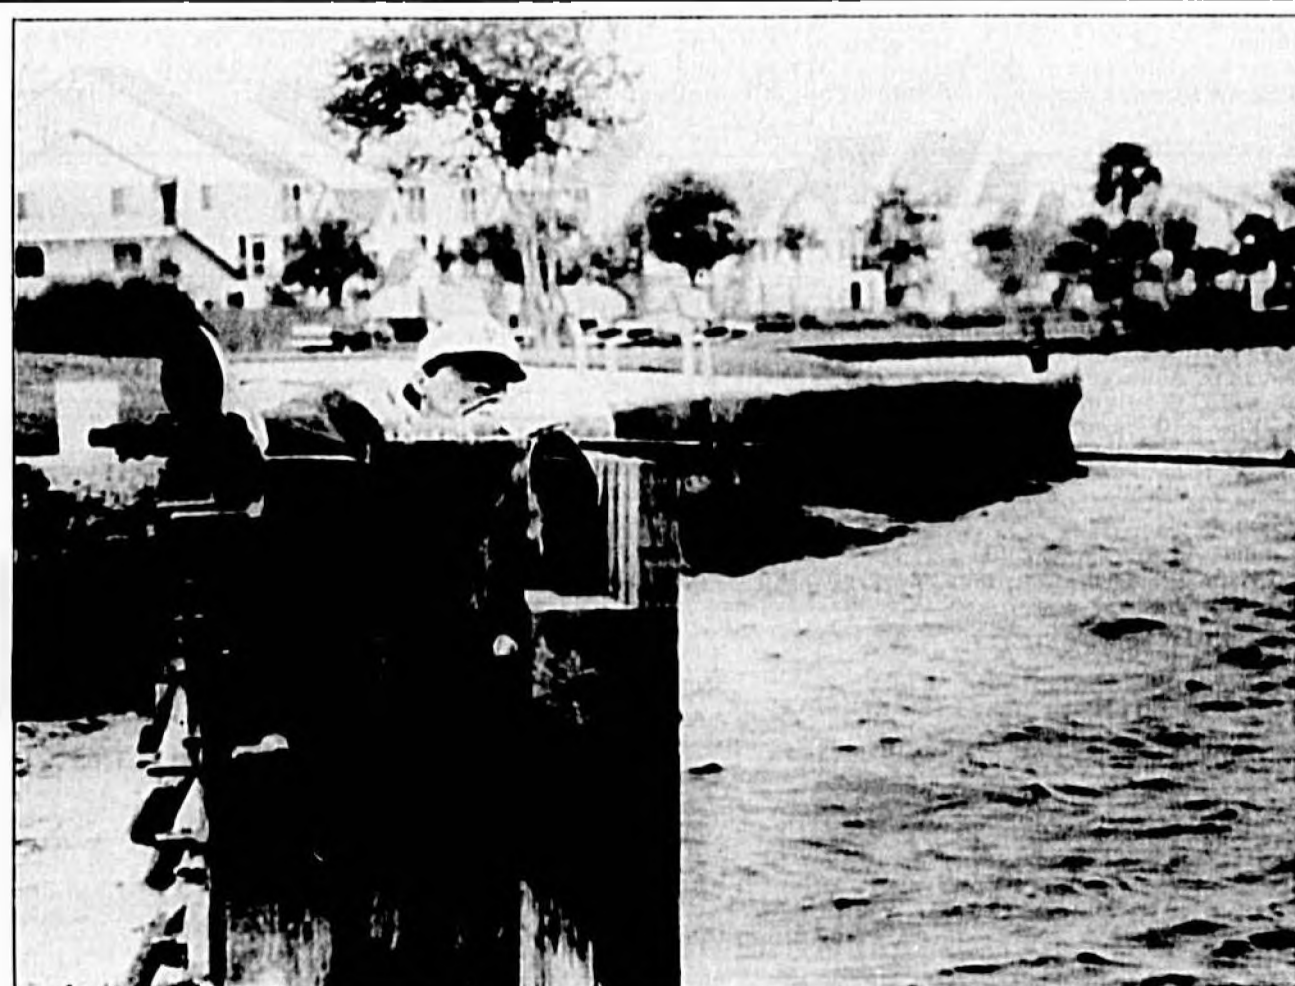

Claus, at which time each child received a gift and got to visit personally with Santa Claus.

Afterward the children and their parents were treated to cookies and juice and good fellowship was enjoyed by all.

The event has been put on the last eight years by Seminole Lodge No. 364 F&AM (Free & Accepted Masons) of Casselberry with help from Seminole Court, Order of the Amaranth and Rachel Chapter, Order of the Eastern Star. The children were recommended by the South

Lazy, hazy days of winter

While the rest of the world is pushing their way through the circuit of shopping, shipping and parties, one man found a more laid back way of spending an afternoon this past weekend. Robert Cowan headed out to Lake Monroe to catch a tasty fish and a few winks. Though he probably got more of the latter than the former, Cowan had a relaxing reprieve from the hustle and bustle of the holiday season.

SANFORD — Nothing brings Christmas home like a beautifully decorated tree.

To some in Sanford, such a luxury is only possible in dreams.

The Sanford Main Street organization is trying to make the holidays a little brighter for several local families by giving away fully-decorated trees to those in need of such a festive arbor in their homes.

"I've got seven or eight of them sitting here in my office," said Bess Simons of Sanford Main Street. "It's beautiful in here, but these trees really belong in someone's home."

Trees can range in price from $15 to more than $90 and decorations can run to more than $100 if you put the lights, and a fair amount of trinkets and treasures on the tree.

A family of modest means, starting from scratch would have a difficult time being able to afford a bright and beautiful tree the first time out.

Simons said those who want the trees won't be required to offer any proof of income or to describe their particular situation.

"I would hope that anyone who See Trees, Page 5A

FLORIDA BRIEFS

Money laundering spanned 20 years

MIAMI — A former discount store executive who laundered millions of dollars was sentenced to 41 months in prison and got a $15,000 fine.

U.S. District Judge Federico Moreno on Monday also sentenced Gary Kaminsky, 55, to three years probation.

Kaminsky pleaded guilty Sept. 21 and agreed to cooperate with prosecutors against his former money laundering partners.

Kaminsky was arrested in November 1984. He was chief financial officer of Dollar Time Group, a chain of discount stores based in Hollywood. He lived in Fort Lauderdale at the time.

Prosecutors said his money laundering spanned 20 years and was done through offshore corporations and Swiss bank accounts.

Volusia's economy beefs up

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. — Midsize manufacturers, increased tourism and hikes in residential construction have beefed up Volusia County's economy following the loss of a 1,000-job industry.

The closing of a Martin Marietta Corp. plant last year was supposed to cripple the economy for years, not just months. Martin Marietta has since merged with Lockheed.

"We thought the Martin Marietta closure was the end of the world for us," said Drew Page, president of the Volusia County Business Development Corp.

"The realization that we have lived through it has created an attitude change in the region. Businesses are more willing to invest here," Page said last week.

Midsize manufacturers such as Boston Whaler Inc. of Edgewater snapped up many of the skilled workers who did not transfer to Orlando's Lockheed Martin plants.

Special events such as Bike Week and NASCAR racing have boosted tourism. And residential construction is up in the eastern suburbs of the Orlando metropolitan area, which includes part of Volusia County.

Boaters still missing

OSKEECHOBEE, Fla. — A daylong search for two boaters missing on Lake Okechobee since Sunday night turned up debris but no sign of the airboat or its occupants.

Roger Drawdy, 36, and Jody Georges, 38, both of Arcadia, were among a group of boaters who spent late Sunday afternoon at an airboat camp near Turtle Cove.

They were last seen when the group left the airboat camp about 8:30 p.m. to return. The missing craft is a red metal flake airboat.

Okechobee County Sheriff's Department Major Edd Flynn said an Igloo cooler and some cups believed to have been on the craft were found during Monday's search.

Flynn said the search would resume today.

Home invader killed

PUTNAM HALL, Fla. — A man who was watching television with his wife when two men smashed through the front door killed the intruders with one of their own guns. The Putnam County Sheriff's Department said.

Angel Valenzuela, 39, and his wife, Debra, 40, were bound with tape when the two men broke into their home Sunday night. The intruders had a handgun and a shotgun.

One burglar was armed with a pistol and one with a shotgun. The one with the shotgun laid it down in the kitchen. Angel Valenzuela managed to free himself, grab the gun and shoot one of the burglars, Stout said Monday.

Miss Sanford contestants sought

By VICKI DeSOMMER
Herald Senior Staff Writer

SANFORD — Rod Layer said he was a little concerned when only two potential contestants showed up at the orientation for next month's Miss Sanford contest.

But executive directors from other pageants have assured him there's nothing to worry about. Contestants, many of them veterans of the pageant circuit, don't bother with orientations since they know the ropes of the contest game.

"I'm not worried," Layer said. "I expect there'll be about 15 girls in the pageant."

The Miss Sanford competition will take place at the Sanford Civic Center on Jan. 20. The deadline for entering the pageant is Jan. 2.

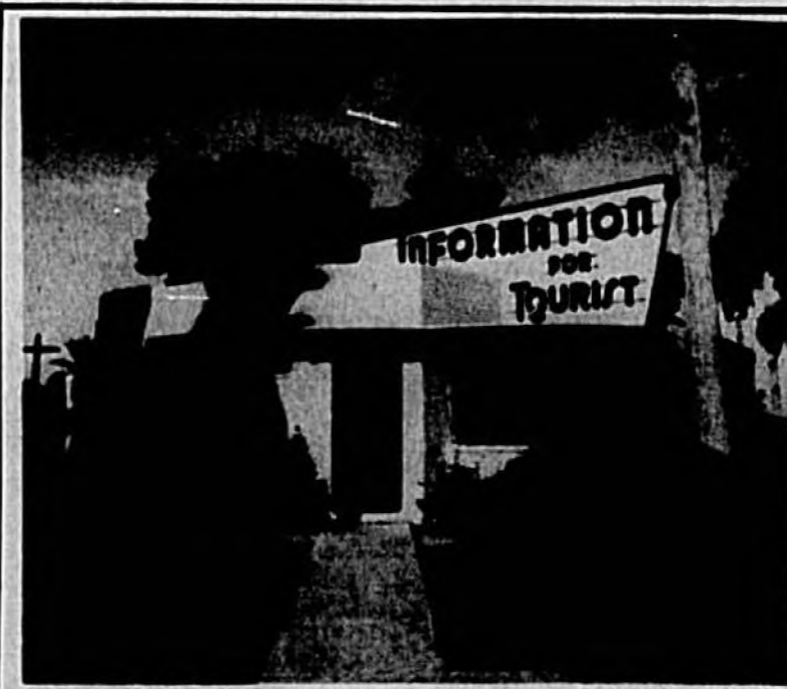

"I've had calls from girls who said they were interested, but they just couldn't make it this weekend," he said. "One girl is down at the University of Tampa and couldn't make it because of the distance. Some others said they had finals to study for. I think we'll be fine for the pageant."

The 1988 Miss Sanford pageant is the second annual event. In some cities the event is far more established and contestants are just starting to hear about the event.

Contestants Laura Templeton and Summer Robbins, regional director of Miss Florida Pageant, Candy Lewis and Rod Layer.

Young ladies from as far as 75 miles away can enter the contest to represent Sanford in the Miss Florida Pageant, Page 5A

The small tourist information building was located at the corner of Park Avenue and Seminole Boulevard for many years. The Sanford Zoo was right behind it. On the left you can see the house on Monkey Island and on the left is the large bird cage. Leo the lion would have been in a cage farther west on Seminole Blvd. near the bird cage. And, of course, there was Jerry the Baboon, Peggy the Bear, etc. This picture is from the Henry Mameon Collection and was probably taken about 1960.

Homeless shelters fill up as mercury plummets

By BOB WOOD
Associated Press Writer

JACKSONVILLE — A blast of cold air sent hundreds of homeless Floridians into shelters from Jacksonville to St. Petersburg, but forecasters were predicting warmer temperatures for tonight.

The weekend's cold blast caused a brisk business at homeless shelters, giving them the first busy nights of what could be a long winter season.

"We can't turn anybody away," said Derrick Hill, who works at the Trinity Rescue Mission in Jacksonville.

About 70 people flocked to shelter overnight Sunday, which has a capacity of about 60. Temperatures dropped to 27 degrees early Monday, but the National Weather Service predicts lows in the upper 30s to 40s for the area tonight.

Across Florida tonight, it won't be as cool as the weekend, said Bill Locke, a meteorologist at the Weather Service's Miami office.

North Florida should see lows in the 30s and 40s, Central Florida should experience lows from 30s to the high 50s, Locke said. South Florida and the Florida Keys will see lows ranging from near 60 to the mid-60s.

A high pressure ridge that was stationary over Florida for much of Monday had moved south to Cuba by early today.

"We will mainly get mostly clear weather ... and a little wind," Locke said. "It's going to warm up." Homeless shelters across Florida are preparing for a long winter, nevertheless.

"We're ready for anything that happens this winter," Hill said, adding that the mission will need more coats and blankets before the winter ends.

The number of homeless in shelters increases when the weather gets really cold because the day labor pools have little work and so can't pay for lodging.

Which is what happens across Florida over the weekend and Monday.

"It's best to be inside under something," said Beverly Gallagher, 47, who found relief from freezing temperatures at a temporary cold night shelter overnight Sunday at the Cathedral Church of St. Peter in downtown St. Petersburg.

In Miami, where temperatures dipped into the lower 30s, about 200 people sought shelter in the Salvation Army Center, which has a capacity of 250.

"Once you reach your peak ... all we can do is to provide them with a blanket or give them a referral. That may sound disheartening, but that's all we can do," said Jose Fuentes, director of fundraising.

Another problem encountered by the Miami center is clothing, Fuentes said.

"Sometimes these people come in barefoot, with shorts, we provide them with shoes and socks," he said. "How many times in Dade County are you required to wear long pants?"

Ag secretary, Sen. Graham seek help for growers

By STE FLORES
Associated Press Writer

ORLANDO — U.S. Sen. Bob Graham and the Clinton administration are trying to close loopholes in NAFTA and federal trade laws to protect Florida's $600 million tomato industry from Mexican imports.

Florida growers, claiming the Mexicans are devastating their domestic winter markets for tomatoes and other vegetables, say they have lost more than $50 million and slashed thousands of jobs.

U.S. Agriculture Secretary Dan Glickman joined Graham in Orlando on Monday to inform growers and industry leaders of their efforts.

"They're killing us," produce grower Paul DiMare told Glickman.

"(Mexican growers) are absolutely murdering the state of Florida," said DiMare, whose Homestead-based company is one of the state's largest vegetable producers. "We need quotas and tariff increases."

Florida is the leading domestic producer of tomatoes, with about 50 percent of the market. California is second with 30 percent. During the winter, however, Florida produces 96 percent of the nation's tomatoes.

Loopholes in the North American Free Trade Agreement, plus sharp devaluations in the Mexican peso, have led to heavy imports, Graham said. Florida agriculture officials accuse Mexico of "dumping" or flooding American markets at below-production costs.

The state's tomato shipments have been down 45 percent so far this year compared with the last, while Mexican sales in this country are up 147 percent, according to figures from the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

Mexico has "found a way to get around what we thought was the (NAFTA) protection that was going to be afforded to Florida winter vegetable producers," said Graham.

A major problem, Graham said, is that Florida's winter growing season is not considered a separate industry under NAFTA. Florida winter-vegetable growers cannot obtain relief under trade laws designed to assist domestic growers harmed by trade liberalization.

Graham is introducing legislation to recognize a limited seasonal industry. This would allow the International Trade Commission, which implements NAFTA, to monitor imports on a more-frequent basis and impose sanctions or quotas quicker.

Graham and the industry also are seeking changes requiring that imports meet the same standards as Florida growers on produce size, quality, maturity, packing and labeling.

Other vegetables besides tomatoes are being affected, said Mike Stuart, executive vice president of the Florida Fruit & Vegetable Association.

"It's affecting squash, corn, cucumbers, just about everything," Stuart said.

Glickman said the Graham proposals were supported by the Clinton administration and U.S.

Trade Ambassador Mickey Kantor.

Glickman told DiMare, "I'll take your message right back, I can assure you of that." The agriculture secretary said he was meeting with his Mexican counterpart next week at a conference in Mexico, and he intended to press the issue then.

Tis the season to be generous

Tis the season to be generous. Statistics show that one half of all donations to charities occur during the period between Thanksgiving and Christmas.

It's logical. During this time of year people start obtaining items to be given as gifts to others. In doing so, they begin to think about those who have little, and may receive nothing during the holiday season. Without a doubt, this is the time for giving.

Unfortunately, we have seen more and more people who want us to give, only to fill their own horns of plenty. There are a few who believe, as long as the people are willing to give, they may as well give to them.

It's a sad state of affairs, but for the third consecutive year, Florida Agriculture Commissioner Bob Crawford has deemed it necessary to publish a pamphlet called "Gift Giver's Guide." The document shows how much money organizations spent during previous years on program services, administration costs and fund-raising expenses.

Over 4,000 organizations, which are required to register with the state in order to conduct their fund-raising efforts, are listed in this booklet.

Locally, we have many worthwhile agencies who are sincerely doing everything in their power to help the less fortunate. Some even operate entirely through volunteers and donations. They don't hold some of the money aside for expenses or salaries.

Thankfully, most of us know who these organizations are. In many cases, we may know the people running the fund-raiser, or even be involved ourselves.

There are a few people however, mostly through telephone solicitations, who are portraying themselves as having local connections, when they do not. The solicitors call on the telephone and ask for financial donations, often with the guise of helping certain organizations. They may indicate the name of the organization in such a way as to lead people to believe they know of which the caller speaks. Such however, is often not the case.

One such call may concern some police officers' fund-raising. The caller may indicate that this drive would help our local officers and their families, but they only explain it in vague terms.

(Some time, ask the caller where "local" is, and often they cannot even tell you the name of the organization in your city).

For such cases, we suggest making a few phone calls yourself, before committing yourself to any donation. Only if you have proof that the money you give will indeed go toward its intended purpose, should you donate.

If a caller solicitation proves not to be what the caller claims, report it immediately to the state by phoning 1-800-HELPFLLA.

If you want the Gift Givers Guide, call this phone number. It's a free call. But unless you are absolutely certain that a solicitation is on the up-and-up, and will be of benefit, even if you truly want to be generous, don't give one red cent.

Swallowing school lunch reform

Republicans had planned a public relations offensive designed to show they've become kind as well as tough on welfare reform, but they've been flummoxed by one of their own, Sen. Richard Lugar of Indiana.

Lugar, whose conservative credentials aren't open to question, refuses to permit passage of a House-Senate conference report on welfare, and his reasons will help President Clinton challenge the entire GOP block-grant strategy on welfare reform.

The chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee and a member of the welfare conference committee, Lugar contends that removing automatic entitlement status from the school lunch program would damage the social safety net, especially when another recession hits and states find themselves unable to feed children whose families have lost jobs.

Lugar's arguments apply just as forcefully to block grants that will replace Aid to Families with Dependent Children, Medicaid and food stamps. In each case, the GOP plans to cut the rate of growth in federal assistance, making states responsible for meeting growing needs with reduced resources during hard times.

Refusing to sign off on the welfare conference report, Lugar and liberal Republican Sen. Jim Jeffords of Vermont upset the GOP welfare schedule, which called for final congressional passage by next week and a high-pressure publicity campaign to force President Clinton into signing it.

It's conceivable that the GOP deadlock could be broken if House Republican leaders can persuade Rep. Bill Goodling, R-Pa., the chairman of the House Economic and Educational Opportunities Committee, to back off from his insistence that the conference report include block-granting of school nutrition programs.

Once the report is passed, though, it faces a certain Clinton veto. The GOP publicly campaign is designed to portray Clinton as reneging on his oft-repeated promise to "reform welfare as we know it."

In one briefing this week, House Ways and Means Chairman Bill Archer, R-Texas, charged that a Clinton veto will show he now wants to "perpetuate welfare as we know it."

Republicans think welfare reform is a winning issue for them. Their new "megapoll" of 7,000 voters nationwide shows that when voters are informed that the GOP wants to make states responsible for welfare and limit the time that any recipient can receive benefits, 71 percent approve and only 13 percent disapprove. An ABC/Washington Post poll shows that voters trust the GOP to reform welfare more than they do Clinton, 49 percent to 42 percent.

In September, President Clinton said he would sign the Senate version of welfare reform, which included increased funding for child care and bonus grants for states that excel in placing welfare recipients in jobs.

Both Republicans and Clinton want to pass welfare reform before the 1996 elections. If they do, Clinton will be able to say that he kept GOP "extremists" from doing their worst.

They've been flummoxed by one of their own.

Federal workers have delightfully snapped up the Sunday crumbs.

Bureaucrats milk work loophole

WASHINGTON—Don't shed too many tears for the government bureaucrats who got caught in the middle of the recent government train wreck. Some of those same federal employees have kept their finances on track by turning an obscure court ruling into a fiscal bonanza.

A 1993 decision by the United States Court of Appeals declared that federal employees who took vacation or sick leave on a Sunday for which they were scheduled to work were still entitled to Sunday premium pay even though they stayed home. Sunday premium pay gives employees 125 percent of their basic pay.

Federal workers, who will be fully reimbursed for any days they were furloughed during the recent government shutdown, have delightfully snapped up the Sunday crumbs. As a result of the lenient new rules, leave usage on Sundays has mysteriously increased by up to 3 percent at several federal agencies, according to government auditors.

Critics say the new regulations are filled with lucrative loopholes. Besides sick and annual leave absences, the new rules also cover: home and shore leave, leave for jury or witness service (how many jury trials are conducted on Sunday?), military leave, funeral leave and other "excused absences approved by agencies"—a vaguely worded phrase that opens a virtual Pandora's box.

The General Accounting Office recently reviewed the records of five government agencies that dispense the most Sunday premium pay: the Federal Aviation Administration, U.S. Customs Service, and the Departments of Defense, Justice and Veterans Affairs. Collectively, these agencies paid $148 million in Sunday premium pay in fiscal year 1994.

GAO found that $16 million—or about 12 percent—of that total was shelled out to employees on leave. The federal government also pays price amounts annually for night differential ($760 million), overtime ($5.9 billion) and holiday pay ($419 million).

Transportation Department officials privately grumbled last year that they would need $6 million to pay Sunday premium pay to FAA employees on leave. Meanwhile, the rest of the department's budget was being slashed so much that air safety could have been jeopardized.

At the time, a House Appropriations Committee report said "the committee finds it incredible that the FAA should be forced to pay a premium for time not actually worked, while budget constraints required a hiring freeze on critical positions and the release of frontline air traffic control supervisors and key maintenance technicians."

So Congress passed legislation that nullifies the court's decision with respect to FAA employees. The savings from the restriction on Sunday premium pay enabled the committee to pony up more money for air traffic staffing.

But why in the world has Congress not extended this premium prohibition to all federal agencies? It would save taxpayers tens of millions of dollars per year.

Officials at the Veterans Health Administration complained to GAO that employees will not be willing to work if changes are made to Sunday pay. That's ridiculous since bureaucrats would still receive premium pay, with one condition: They would have to work for the money instead of sitting at home.

Tiny regret over courtroom ban

BOSTON—If I have a tiny regret about the decision of the judge to ban cameras from his courtroom, it's that the rap star's fans won't get a chance to see Snoop Doggy Dogg in his civvies.

There are no bandannas, no baggy pants, no tough guy looks on the man being tried along with his bodyguard for murder. This is a good Doggy, transformed from pit bull to domestic pet.

In the hallways of the L.A. courthouse he is seen, in conservative jacket and slacks, buying a statue of Jesus and Mary. His supporters tell reporters that the Doggy they know visits hospitals to sit and stay with sick children.

The P.R. man for his record company, Death Row Records, insists he's as different from the hype as his real name, Calvin Broadus, is different from his stage name. And his dad says, "I know he's not capable of violence."

Some of this may be due to the courtroom conversation experienced by many a defendant instructed to shape up and dress up for the jury. You don't come to court looking like the cover pup on the "Doggystyle" album, if you're pleading self-defense.

Then again, even serial killers have had a neighbor who swore that "he was such a quiet boy." And thugs of all sorts insist that they're misunderstood. Consider gangsta rap's Tupac Shakur. He has "thug life" tattooed across his stomach and has been accused of holding down a female fan while someone raped her. But he loves Shakespeare and his mother, and says: "I am not a gangster and never have been. ... I've got a job. I'm an artist."

But what if that is true? Or partially true? What if Shakur isn't a gangster—despite his criminal record—and Calvin Broadus is as polite and gentle as some say?

What if folks glorifying gangbanging and violence put on their hard-core tough image to go to work selling it to others? What if there is a reverse, upside-down sort of split between image and reality?

Last year, there was a Wall Street Journal story about a gangsta rapper, Lichelle "Bone" Laws, who swore she spent time in jail when she hadn't. The middle-class parents who had sent her to private school and paid for piano and ballet lessons were appalled to hear her say that she'd lived on the streets. "Lichelle could have stayed at the Embassy Suites with all of the money we were sending her," said mom.

Ask anyone in the business why Lichelle would brag about badness, why Snoop and the other dogs would cultivate their most menacing image, and they'll tell you the same thing. It sells.

It's fascinating to think about what's happened in a generation. Hypocrisy has flipped.

This is a good Doggy, transformed from pit bull to domestic pet.

In the '80s, stars and their songs all covered up vices. In the '90s, they cover up virtue. We've gone from "How Much is That Doggie in the Window?" through "You Ain't Nothin' But a Hound Dog" to "Doggystyle."

The sitcom families of my childhood were too good to be true. Ozzie and Harriet weren't what they seemed to be and the baby-boom generation has spent midlife and endless reruns debunking the fantasies. Cynicism is the mark of the boomer generation.

But the sitcom families of the 1990s are often too bad to be true. Maybe Roseanne's real family looks like the one on TV, but what family could match a combo of "Cybill" and "Grace" and "John Larroquette."

As for the families on "trash TV" shows? They would be humiliated if anyone uncovered the sensational fact that they weren't dysfunctional. It doesn't sell.

I hate to sound like Bob Dole, who has the misfortune of reminding every baby boomer of Dad when he wouldn't lend you the Buick. But today, a whole lot of folks think that what's worst is what's real. We gradually live down to the image.

The gangsta rappers are paid best for being baddest. They earn a softer life with a harder persona.

It's easy to imagine the tension for 22-year-old Broadus escaping violence by glorifying it. A young man earning $48 million on an album by acting as a menace to society. A man caught between the old neighborhood and a new world.

Whatever happened with Snoop Doggy Dogg—murder or self-defense—came out of that conflict. It came from the rewards reserved for the toughest.

In the end, the worst rap on gangsta rap is its inherent cynicism. It trumpets a destructive message to and about the mean streets. For some, like Broadus, the way off those streets makes them even meaner.

Simons said the trees were

"I know we can find homes for these trees," she said.

Simons said anyone who would like a tree should call her at 322-5800 to arrange a time to pick it up. The Main Street office is located at 101 W. First St., Suite B in downtown Sanford.

voted unanimously to approve it on Dec. 5.

During work session discussion on the matter yesterday, City Manager Bill Simmons and City Attorney Bill Colbert explained that the matters facing the city were in the form of a lease agreement, or two resolutions which would, in effect, allow the bonds to be obtained and insure bond sellers that the city would not interfere with airport development and cause any difficulty in the bonding process.

Airport Authority attorney Steve Coover and vice chairman Lee P. Moore were both in attendance to respond to questions made by commission members.

When the matter was brought up for formal approval during the regular commission meeting however, it hit an immediate snag.

The first resolution, to authorize the issuance of bonds for airport development was the first matter to be brought up. When Mayor Bettye Smith called for the vote, Commissioners Lon Howell and Whitey Eckstein both voted no, which resulted in only a three to two vote for approval.

Commissioner Bob Thomas then moved to adopt the official lease agreement which had been approved by the Airport Authority. No one however, would second the motion and it died.

As a result, the commissioners brought up the second resolution, which had been suggested for passage if the lease agreement failed. The vote again was three to two, with Commissioners Eckstein and Howell voting against it.

Prior to the meeting, Eckstein said his negative vote would be because of concern he has over some individuals who might be involved in the bond process. He would not elaborate.

The second resolution provides security for bond holders, assuring them that the city would take no action to jeopardize or impair them.

Coover said he was disappointed at the narrow margin which allowed the bond issues to go forward, but he indicated the forward drive will now be able to continue.

He said the resolutions will now go to the Airport Authority for approval at a meeting next Tuesday, with the scheduled date for bond sales set for January 10.

The bonds are being sought by Central Florida Terminals, Inc., to finance a portion of the terminal construction project and be used for installation, construction and equipping the terminal additional plus other improvements to the airport facilities.

"The city has now approved the issuance of bonds not to exceed $35 million," he explained. "But as of right now, the total amount asked to be sold is $30.490 million." He added, "But that figure could go up or down slightly before the January 10th date."

lease, $377,000 for a 10 year lease, or $202,000 for a 20 year lease, after the cost of needed repairs was reimbursed.

He suggested the city would save considerable money through the lease arrangement, rather than the cost of building a new police department on city-owned land, which he estimated at over $4.5 million.

Reeves, who told the commissioners his firm was involved in working on a number of different police facilities across the state, said the building would serve better for offices than as a police facility. He cited a number of changes in the building which he believed would be necessary to bring the structure up to requirements of Florida statutes regarding law enforcement facilities.

The commissioners however, brought back a matter which was discussed over a year ago, the need for a major public safety complex, which would not only house the police department but the fire department as well.

Last year, the commission considered a proposal for such a facility on the city-owned land across French Avenue from Sanford Middle School. That proposal however, even though it was discussed at a number of meetings, was never brought to fruition.

Regarding the use of the old bank facility for a police station, various commissioners voiced their feelings. "It's a nice building," said Commissioner Lon Howell, but I would rather see it for offices than a public safety complex.

Commissioner Whitey Eckstein agreed. "We could go along with this proposal," he said, "but I don't think we would ever be completely happy with it unless we did it the right way."

Commissioner Kerry Lyons said he felt the entire matter needed more study rather than committing the city for this one facility.

Commissioner Bob Thomas agreed, adding that he didn't believe the bank building would really fill the city's needs in the future.

Police Chief Ralph Russell commented, saying he would go along with whatever the city decided, but he felt the fire department facilities were in a bad situation, and that the best move might be something other than just moving the police.

"I get from your comments," said Mayor Bettye Smith, "that you are showing a consensus not to proceed with this matter."

With no one objecting, the mayor concluded that the proposal would not be given further consideration at this time.

"The two young ladies who were here this weekend were from Orlando, but I'm sure we'll get some Sanford girls to come out for the pageant," Laver said.

He also expects the former Miss Orlando and the former Miss Apopka to be contestants in the Sanford contest.

Laver said the 1996 pageant should be a very upbeat and professional show. In addition to the talented young ladies in the contest, the audience at the show will be treated to lively numbers by the talented dancers from Miriam and Valerie's School of Dance Arts.

Miss Florida 1994 Megan Welch will be the master of ceremonies for the event and Kirenia Ludechs, the current Miss Florida, will also be in attendance.

"We're hoping to have 5,000 people at this year's pageant," Laver said. "It's going to be a heck of a show."

NATIONAL BRIEFS

Waldholtz to testify

SALT LAKE CITY — Now that Rep. Enid Greene Waldholtz's tearful explanation of her tangled personal and campaign finances is behind her, she must make another accounting — this time before a grand jury.

The freshman Republican's 4 1/2-hour news conference Monday could serve as a trial run to testimony she expects to give a federal grand jury in Washington on Thursday.

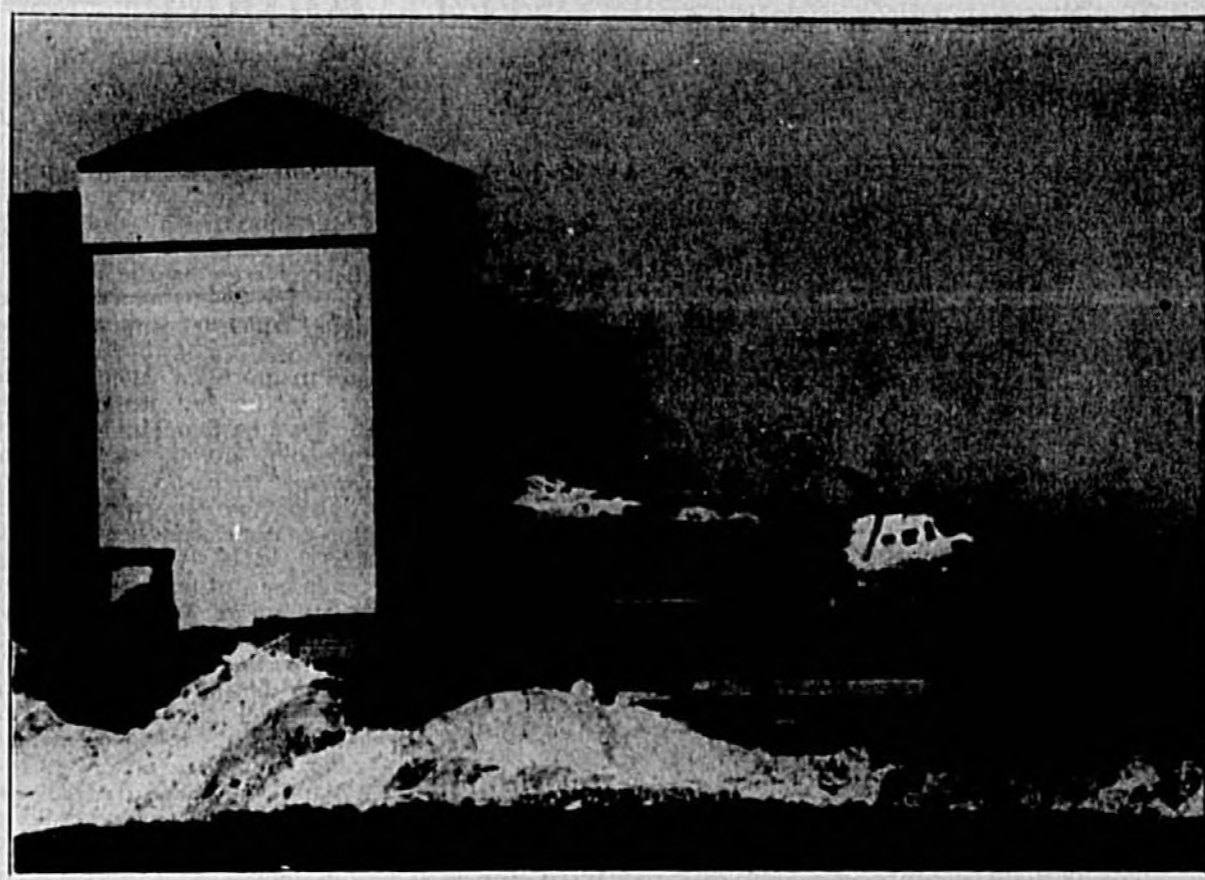

Assuming her account is the same, it will do her estranged husband, Joseph Waldholtz, no good. For Mrs. Waldholtz's story is one of love betrayed by a con-man husband with no scruples.

"We have been subpoenaed and we plan to testify," said Mrs. Waldholtz's lawyer, Charles Roitacher. "We are not a target."

The grand jury was assembled following a federal investigation into a $1.7 million check-killing scheme involving two of the couple's bank accounts.

The congresswoman maintains the husband she married in 1983 duped her with lies and forgeries, and may have embezzled tens of thousands of dollars from her 1992, 1994 and 1996 campaigns while working as her unpaid treasurer. She also claims he stole more than $4 million from her father.

Accident at airport

William Savage, 31, employed by Wington Fire Sprinklers, Inc., of Longwood, was injured yesterday as the result of an accidental fall at the Orlando Sanford Airport. A helicopter airlifted Savage to Orlando Regional Medical Center. He is believed to have suffered a fractured skull, but word this morning is that he is expected to recover. The fall took place during construction at the International Arrivals terminal being built for Central Florida Terminal, next to the main terminal facility at the airport in Sanford.

 launching its 20th annual Harry S. Benson Children's Christmas Fund. In the past, because of many donations from the residents of the city, many needy and less fortunate families have been reached in time for the holidays. The city's program is one of the most successful in the county, according to Lake Mary police officer Linda Belfiore, who serves as the Christmas Fund '95 coordinator.

The goal of the program is to provide food, toys, games and other Christmas items. "On the most important day of the year these families will realize that others really care," said Belfiore.

Monetary contributions, regardless of the amount, can be sent to the Harry S. Benson Children's Christmas Fund, P.O. Box 950700, Lake Mary, 32795-0700, or can be made in person to the Lake Mary Police Department Complex on Rinehart Road.

Pet celebrities

A new TV show is to debut on January 27 at 11 a.m. The show, entitled "Pet Celebrities," is to feature animals from the Seminole County and Orlando Humane Societies, as well as the Animal Shelter in Winter Garden.

The program plans to have the pets in various situations including stand-up comedy, "Ask the Doc," and other segments, which will be done by voice-overs by human entertainers.

WELL DONE

The Optimist Club Athlete of the Week is Seminole High School soccer player Tracy Hetrick. Tracy played sweeper against two tough Seminole Athletic Conference opponents last week and led a spirited effort. On Saturday, she was switched to midfield to provide the team with an offensive spark. She did just that, leading the Tribe to an 8-0 rout of Gateway, by scoring four goals. Tracy is shown receiving her award from Betty Vann of the Optimist Club of Sanford.

ST. CLOUD — C.C. Guillan scored three second half goals Monday to lead Seminole to a 3-2 win over St. Cloud in a Class 5A-District 6 girls' soccer match Monday night.

The Bulldogs had a 1-0 lead at halftime, then extended the lead to 2-0 to open the second half. Sara Glenn scored both goals for St. Cloud.

Seminole coach Tony Arena replaced goalie Laura Williams with Anna Higgins in an attempt to give the Tribe a lift. Guillan responded by scoring her first two goals in 38 seconds, and later added the game winner in the 68th minute of the match.

Mandee Ross, Laura Williams and Sabreana Sapp each provided an assist for Seminole.

Williams returned to the goal box after Guillan's third goal to preserve the win.

Arena credited Sapp, Joann Pilch, Tracy Hetrick and Stefany Groover with outstanding defense to help Seminole win.

The Tribe started a sweep of the action with a 2-1 win in the junior varsity match.

Volunteer of the Week

Carson wears many community hats

By SUSAN WENNER
Herald Staff Writer

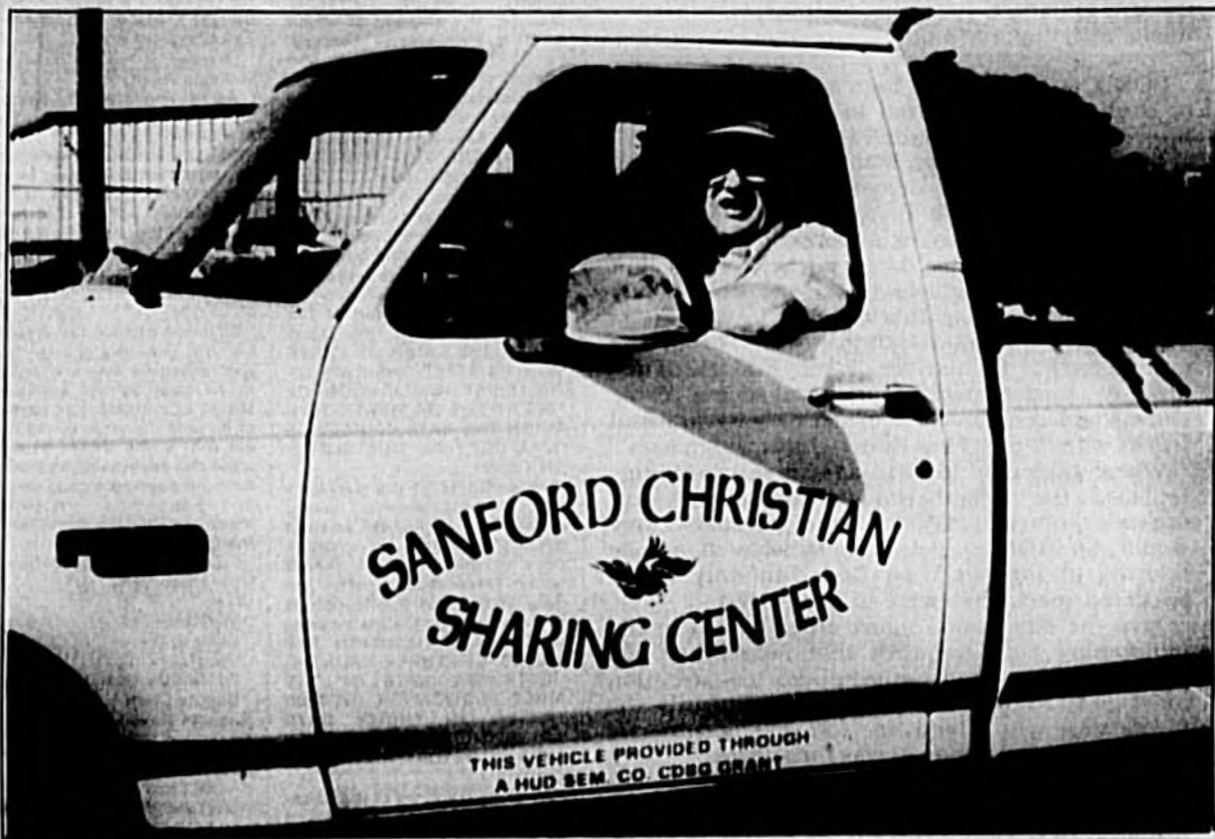

SANFORD — Kit Carson doesn't let anything slow him down. From the looks of his personal calendar everyday has been accounted for by one volunteer organization or another.

From visits to the Senior Center in town, the over 50 club, Senior Friends of the Hospital, Advisory Board member of the Agriculture Center, member of the lay witness team for the United Methodist organization, district representative for the lay witness group and a former Sunrize Kiwanis club member, vice-president of JOY (Just older youth) Carson leaves little space for eating and sleeping in his tiring schedule.

One can only take a deep breath and run to keep the pace this senior citizen keeps. He and his wife of 18 years, Faye, are also active with Grace United Methodist Church in Lake Mary.

Yet with all this activity Carson has discovered a block of time he sets aside for his volunteer and president duties with the Sanford Christian Sharing Center. "I started with the center 17 years ago," he said. "A fellow asked me to come down and help fill bags of groceries for the needy once a month."

Now after all these years Carson has been known to donate from 75 to 90 hours per month contributing mileage on the center's truck or working within the center. "I had to pick up the day old bread from Publix," he said. "I give that to the Rescue Mission, Good Samaritan Home and Joyce Shaw's mission. Sometimes we have deliveries at Teen Challenge too."

A resident since 1972 Carson, his wife and combined four children from previous marriages, Michael, Terry, Michael and Carmal and four grandchildren all enjoy his active lifestyle. Serving his fellow-man is what Carson has found to be the driving force to keep the wheels turning and the gas gauge tipping toward the empty mark. Yet, running on empty is not in his vocabulary. The only thing that frustrates Carson is an empty calendar with blocks of space unfilled. According to his philosophy that is time wasted that could help others.

Ask kids to sign for loan

DEAR ABBY: Please give me your opinion of adult children who borrow money from their parents but don't pay it back. The money was loaned to them with the understanding that it was to be repaid.

These are adult "kids" with steady jobs, but they have made no effort to repay us.

I have dropped many hints, but it has done no good whatsoever. Do these kids think that because they borrow money from their parents, they don't have to repay it?

MOM AND POP
DEAR MOM AND POP: If you've let them get away with it in the past, they probably do. And without an IOU, you have no recourse.

Parents should never lend money to adult children without asking them to sign an IOU. This protects the parents' interests and serves as an immediate reminder that the "kids" are obligated to repay the loan. It also instills a sense of financial responsibility for young adults that will serve them well.

However, a signed IOU may not be sufficient if the parents are a couple of "softies" — as I suspect you are.

ADVICE
ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: My 17-year-old daughter and my family are having a difference of opinion.

A girl in my high school — I'll call her Betsy — is 7 1/2 months pregnant. She's 17 years old and plans to keep the child. The father-to-be will accept no responsibility for the baby.

Betsy's mother is having a baby shower to which many of Betsy's high school friends are invited — myself included.

My grandmother believes it is improper to hold a baby shower for an unwed mother. My family disagrees.

What do you think? If you print this, sign me ...

QUESTIONING

DEAR QUESTIONING: I wholeheartedly disagree with your grandmother. A baby conceived out of wedlock has no need for clothing, blankets, diapers, bottles, etc., so why deprive the infant because the mother is not married?

DEAR ABBY: I have read your column for years and you are one of my favorite people, but I was very disappointed in your response to the mother whose daughter was insulted by a blind date who told the girl that he could never marry her because he didn't want to have ugly children — then he pointed to her long nose and weak chin.

In your response you said that nose and chin could be corrected. Abby, I'm not blaming you for going along with what is accepted as "beauty" in our society, but we all need to be a little more free-thinking.

Just because someone doesn't fit into the so-called standards of what we're told is "beauty" does not mean she or he is not beautiful.

The first time I saw Whoopi Goldberg, I saw beauty! And when Barbra Streisand sings, she is transformed into one of the most beautiful women in the universe!

The same can be said about Betty Midler.

One of my best friends described me as "a slightly homely Robert Redford." I considered that a great compliment.

I say, "Just be yourself and you will be beautiful."

FRANK M. GENTILE

DEAR FRANK: Frankly, you're right; Beauty is in the eye of the beholder.

(Problems? Write to Dear Abby. For a personal, unpublished reply, send a self-addressed, stamped envelope to Dear Abby, P.O. Box 69448, Los Angeles, Calif. 90069. All correspondence is confidential.)

Protect plants from cold temperatures

The best way to avoid cold injury to your landscape plants is to use only cold hardy plants native to this area. But if you have plants that are sensitive to cold weather, here are some tips to help you protect them/Healthy plants are more likely to resist damage due to low temperatures. Plants that were well fertilized in the fall will have a better chance to escape injury during cold weather.

Before low temperature periods, water the plants thoroughly, the moisture in the soil will help keep the plants warm by releasing the heat to the atmosphere around the plants. Water is necessary to keep the moisture content of the leaves and avoid scorching due to the loss of water caused by the wind which usually occurs with cold weather.

Avoid pruning your plants late in the fall, this often produces new growth and those tissues could be easily injured by the low temperatures. Pruning should be done in late winter or early spring to escape cold damage.

Covering your cold sensitive plants with both polyethylene plastic or cardboard from top to the ground will help in protecting plants from injury to low temperatures. Make sure that the coverings do not touch the leaves, otherwise they will burn just the same. To trap the heat close to the plants, make a frame or use stakes around the plants to keep the coverings from touching the leaves.

Remember to remove all coverings after the temperatures rise above the dangerous levels, heat can build up inside the covering and be as damaging to the plants as the freezing temperatures. If some plants were damaged by the freeze, do not prune immediately. Pruning cold damaged plants can do more damage than good. Many times, like in citrus, the extent of the damage may be difficult to determine. You may have to wait until the second flush to establish the total amount of damage to the foliage but severe damage to the trunk. With citrus and other grafted trees, freezing temperatures can kill the top below the graft union. This situation will induce the rootstock to produce new growth and many times the fruit quality of the tree will be affected. Especially in citrus with sour orange rootstock, the killing of the budded scion will promote the growth of the sour orange rootstock and therefore the fruits produced on such trees will be sour oranges. In azaleas, flower buds and stems are more likely to be injured by low temperatures. Flower bud damage will be seen during the blooming, when few or no flowers will be produced. Stem damage will be evident in late spring or early summer, when dead branches appear. Remember, some plants can be froze to the ground, many will come back if they have a good root system or specialized stems.

GARDENING

Area razed 37 years ago, residents want deal honored

By JON MARCUS
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON — In 1958, homes in the West End of Boston were bulldozed in an urban renewal project now widely regarded as a cruel mistake.

Nearly 40 years later, some of the people who were forced out are demanding first crack at public housing that is finally being built on the site of their demolished neighborhood.

"They thought we'd go away," said Jim Campano, who now lives in the suburbs. "They didn't realize we'd last this long."

Campano and thousands of former neighbors still consider themselves West Enders. They produce a newspaper and local-access cable show, hold reunions and plaster their cars and trucks with "I'm A West End" bumper stickers.

When high-rise luxury apartment buildings replaced the neighborhood's low-income immigrant homes, residents were promised they would be first to get any subsidized public housing in the old West End. But only a few scattered apartments were so designated.

Now the city says a court order issued in the intervening years requires that nearly half the 163 public housing units under construction must go to minorities — and not necessarily the minorities who lived in the extraordinarily diverse West End before it was torn down.

Of the 108 subsidized units, only 44 will be left for the estimated 400 original residents expected to apply.

"Betrayed — Again!" screamed the headline of The West End, the quarterly newspaper sent to more than 3,000 former residents who now live in 39 states and three countries.

The neighbors have reunited — this time to file a federal lawsuit, which has not yet been scheduled for trial.

The old West End was a community of about 7,000 Irish, Italian, Jewish, Greek, Polish, Albanian and Ukrainian immigrants and blacks squeezed into 2,800 apartments, tenements and boarding houses. Actor Leonard Nimoy, actress Ruth Roman and singers Jerry Colonna and Buddy Clark lived there.

City officials took advantage of the National Housing Act of 1949, which offered aid to redevelopment in certain kinds of neighborhoods, to seize and raze the West End.

"They got money for slum clearance, so they went looking for a slum to clear," Campano said. Many of the residents were elderly or non-English-speaking refugees who wound up crowded into poorer housing at higher rents.

"It took an amazing effort to ruin a communal situation where people enjoyed peace of mind," said Joseph LoPiccolo, a West End resident who as a youth tried to sabotage the bulldozers by putting sugar in the gas tanks and throwing bricks from rooftops.

"The uneducated and illiterate immigrants of the early part of this century did a better job in creating an American society than the eggheads who have turned heaven and earth to undo everything they accomplished."

Despite the efforts of LoPiccolo and his friends — who also cut the cables of the cranes that welded the wrecking balls — the red brick row houses lining narrow streets were leveled, gouging a 50-acre no man's land in the middle of the city.

It was gradually filled with monotonous concrete shopping centers, parking garages and apartment buildings with expensive views of the Charles River.

The city says most old West Enders aren't eligible for the apartments, since they don't now live in substandard housing.

Follow-up on lupus medication

DEAR DR. GOTT: For the past 12 years, I've taken Plaquenil for lupus on an intermittent schedule. After my most recent flare-up, my doctor indicated he plans to keep me on the medication permanently. What is your opinion of 400 mg daily for my lupus?

DEAR READER: Lupus is an autoimmune (self allergy) disease that affects many of the body's organs, in particular the kidneys. Untreated lupus can lead to arthritis, heart disorders and renal failure, among other complications.

There are several treatments for lupus, including Plaquenil, a drug that was originally marketed as therapy for malaria. No one knows precisely how the medicine works but, in many instances, it reduces the inflammation caused by lupus and leads to a remission. Ordinarily, the drug is used as needed.

Your doctor apparently believes that your flare-ups are too frequent or your disease is showing signs of progression, as judged by blood tests. Consequently, he has advised continuous therapy.

The usual recommended dose of Plaquenil is 200 milligrams a day. Higher doses may cause double vision, an indication of ocular toxicity. Before taking 400 mg. a day, ask your doctor why he has prescribed such a heavy dose, when 200 mg. would probably suffice. The lesser dose is more appropriate and would constitute standard therapy.

To give you more information, I am sending you a free copy of my Health Report "Lupus: The Great Imitator." Other readers who would like a copy should send $2 plus a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope to P.O. Box 2017, Murray Hill Station, New York, NY 10158. Be sure to mention the title.

DEAR DR. GOTT: Fortunately for me, I'm not a scientist. Therefore, I was able to try homeopathic remedies on faith, and found them to cure my sore throats, headaches and stomach upsets. I no longer have to engage physicians to prescribe allopathic drugs. Since you ARE a scientist and are bound by rules, you are the loser. But it's too bad that you're passing on that information to your audience.

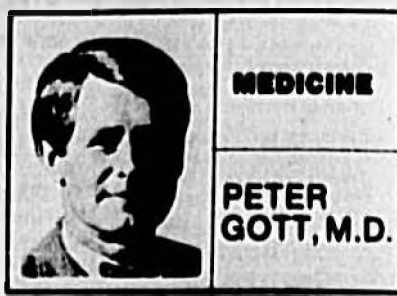

DEAR READER: Faith is undoubtedly a powerful healing force. And nowhere is it more evident than in homeopathic remedies, extremely dilute herbal compounds, which have been shown by scientific testing to be virtually harmless, totally ineffective and so watered-down as to have no influence whatsoever on the human body. They cost money, though, and this is what keeps homeopathy in business: pure marketing for profit.

All doctors are aware that most sore throats, headaches, stomach upsets, and other trivial ailments cure themselves — if given time. Therefore, by using homeopathic remedies, you are allowing your body to heal itself, something it will do anyway.

This is clearly more appropriate than engaging in the American pastime of scrambling to take a pill for every perceived ill, no matter how pedestrian.

DEAR DR. GOTT: I suffer from extreme pain on my left side, just below the rib area. My doctor ran numerous tests, including a CT scan and colonoscopy. He didn't find anything. I finally began eating only boiled rice, potatoes and noodles, since the medicine my doctor gave me did no good at all. The pain finally subsided. Now, however, I experience the pain about once a week and it's accompanied by about six bowel movements before stopping. What's causing this?

DEAR READER: Yours is indeed a puzzling symptom. You seem to be suffering from the pain caused by overactivity of the intestine, perhaps coupled with trapped pockets of air, leading to colic.

MEDICINE

PETER GOTT, M.D.

If your intestinal tract is normal, as judged by the tests your doctor performed, he should examine you further to check for gallbladder, liver or lung disorders. X-rays and blood tests are helpful in this regard.

It may well be that no significant pathology is present. Thus, by the process of elimination, your physician may conclude that you have irritable bowel syndrome.

WIN AT BRIDGE

Value and variety from Australia

By Phillip Alder

Australian Bridge magazine has been going more than a quarter of a century. The present incarnation, edited by Stephen Lester and published by Richard Brightling, is recommended. Every two months you will receive a large 84-page issue packed full of material for everyone, though the emphasis is on the tournament player. To subscribe, send a check for $34 to The Bridge World, 20 West 94th Street, New York, NY 10025-7124 (add $9 for air-mail).

In this deal from the April issue, how would you plan the play in three no-trump after West has led the heart queen? North guessed well not to use

Stayman as four spades would lose a trick in each suit. (Some authorities recommend never using Stayman when you have 4-3-3-3 or 3-4-3-3 distribution. However, they are not always right. The opener may have a doubleton and that suit prove to be a fatal weakness in no-trump.)

Since you need to bring in three spade tricks, the key point is not to lead the queen or jack from hand for a finesse. Starting with an honor is fatal if West has the singleton king or you run up against the given distribution.

You should lead a low spade to dummy's ace, followed by a spade back toward hand. When your queen wins the second trick in the suit and West discards, you return to dummy with, say, a club and play another spade toward your hand.

When a finesse is unproductive, lead up to honors. Phillip Alder's book, "Get Smarter at Bridge," is available, autographed upon request, for
