Georgetown Paving Is Slowed Down

Protesting increased property taxes, a group of Sanford's Georgetown area property owners have slowed-down the scheduled paying of that area's north-south streets by filing a lawsuit in Jacksonville's U.S. District Court. The court action, which asked for a temporary injunction to prevent the City of Sanford from going ahead with paving the streets was sought by members of the black community of which Georgetown is majority in

Sanford City Commissioners at last night's budget session lamented that people in the seen fit to take the action, that will delay if not eliminate the entire project, which was modeled after the so-called Winter Park plan, whereby persons living on both sides of the affected streets split the paving costs

This would amount to roughly $10.05 a running foot for each foot of property for the Georgetown property owners, with the funds being repaid along with regular property taxes over a five-year period.

Mayor Lee P. Moore at last night's meeting said the public should not be forced to pay the $5,000 or more needed in legal fees to fight the property-owner's action. "It's not fair for other city taxpayers to pay this legal fee to give something that the majority wants," Moore added.

The mayor said he had talked with one of the leaders of the black community about the action and said that person was also upset and was going to try to do something about to the increasing number of Uturns made on SR 436 at this though no fatalities have occurred here since Jan. 1, 1970, cidents producing injuries and property damage, Chairman Napier recommended that the city place "No U-turn" signs at this spot, or possibly a traffic light. Since this is a state road, such legislation would have to go through the State Road Department. But, according to Mayor Curtis Rlow, an extensive study of this situation is now being made by the county, and "the city would be prasumptuous asking the state to place signs, since the county is already studying this." In light of this, City Attorney Ken Me-Intosh was delegated to request a status report from the county. As the situation stands now, the city can do nothing
