TUBERCULOSIS SERUM SEEN SUCCESS TAKE HUNDREDS IN NARCOTIC RAIDS PARTED BEFORE HONEYMOON ENDED

"Human guinea pig" experiments made with Colorado convicts have led Denver medical experts to believe that a serum preventing tuberculosis is successful. A formal announcement of the success of the tuberculin preventive is expected soon. Two life-term convicts, Charles Erickson (standing, left) and Mike Schmidt (seated) who were first given shots of the serum last April and then received injections of millions of tuberculous bacilli, are expected to be granted pardons in April. Both men have shown no signs of contracting the disease. (Associated Press Photo)

Joining in a far-flung drive to smash the narcotics traffic, federal agents staged simultaneous raids in cities throughout the nation, arresting several hundred peddlers and addicts and seizing thousands of dollars worth of equipment and drugs. Lila Lee is shown explaining the display to a visitor. (Associated Press Photo)

Ben Cantwell Lists Requirements For Big League Service

Speaking before Sanford Kiwanians at the Montezuma Hotel yesterday noon, Ben Cantwell, winter resident and one of the ace pitchers with the Boston Braves baseball team, declared that success in the game depends upon four requirements which must be met.

He named them as: physical fitness, alertness in mind and body, congeniality and the ability to mix easily and make friends with players and fans alike, clean living with conscientious training.

In his talk, Mr. Cantwell predicted that attendance at games this year would be on the increase, and that night baseball probably will not prove a success, especially from the players' point of view.

ATLANTA, Dec. 27.—(A.P.)—President Roosevelt's new deal—control of crop production—put millions of cash in the pockets of Southern farmers in 1934. Agricultural commissioners in Florida, Georgia and Alabama commenting on the year's activity, yesterday reported conditions on the farm far better than many years with indications for an even better 1935.

Georgia's major crops have increased greatly in value during the past two years, said Commissioner G. C. Adams of Georgia and this is due largely, if not entirely, to operation of the National Administration's new deal.

He said the gross value of this year's crops more than doubled that of 1932. He looks for 1935 to be the "best farming year in 50 years," and expressed the opinion that before long "all of us will believe universally in a control program for all agriculture."

15 Miners Killed, 20 Badly Injured As Engine Explodes

MONTEGOMERY, W. Va., Dec. 27.—(A.P.)—Fifteen miners were killed and at least 20 injured today by the explosion of the locomotive of a train taking workmen to a mine of the Elkton (Pine) Coal company in the heart of the mountain country. The fireman and engineer were among those killed.

The blast, said to have been caused by the breaking of a fire box cover and the subsequent loosening of boiler tubes, echoed throughout the valley along which the little train daily hauled workmen to and from their homes.

Pieces of the locomotive and cars were blown 100 yards away and flying debris cut or bruised those of the workers who were liable to get free of the wreckage.

More than 100 men were riding on the three coach train. The three huddled dozens of passengers clutched the trucks, and the injured sped out as they lay exposed to the chilling cold.

Company officials rushing to the scene in autos, trucks, and buses, quickly gathered up the dead and injured and rushed them to a hospital here. At the hospital an attaché said, "We are afraid a number of the injured men will die."

Editors Anticipate Greater Earnings In Several Lines

NEW YORK, Dec. 27.—(A.P.)—Business volume in the first quarter of 1935 will be indicated by letters in most lines, the opinion of editors of leading industrial publications, it was revealed in a survey published yesterday by Associated Business Papers, Inc.

In some cases it was felt that it may not increase in proportion to the greater quantities of all increased operating costs through higher wages and materials, fuel, and power, installed, respectively.

The steel outlook is encouraging according to the book of publications in that industry. The steady small increase in production in many weeks is seen as likely to 100 per cent over last year in the spring and autumn.

Automotive trade papers expect a material pick-up in their industry in the first quarter, as compared with 1934, when production was hampered by the coal and workers strike. The outlook was regarded as uncertain, with most editors involving expectations of expansion.

Helping The Chinese

When silver senators, and others, who, like Father Coughlin, had invested heavily in silver futures, were urged the adoption last winter of a silver purchase program by the United States government, it was explained that this artificial boost in the price of silver would lift the depression. Most of these men, posing as humanitarians, further declared that raising the price of silver would be a great help to China where silver is the sole medium of exchange. Naturally, they argued, if silver is worth more, it will buy more, and the poor long suffering Chinese will be better off.

The silver purchase policy was adopted, and the United States government immediately began using good American money furnished by American taxpayers to buy silver all over the world. We bought silver in England, which in turn got it from India, and we bought it in Mexico and South American countries, but mostly we bought it in China where there was more of it than anywhere else. This silver which our government bought was carefully stored in the vaults of the U. S. Treasury where it now rests in peace, and the price of silver did rise giving the silver mine owners, and the silver speculators, a nice profit.

But what happened in China where raising the price of silver was supposed to increase the Chinese purchasing power and thus help these 400,000,000 impoverished people? First the Chinese government protested to our state department against the continuance of our silver purchase policy, but without avail. Then a 15 percent export tax was levied by the Chinese to prevent the sale of silver in China to foreign interests. But even this was not sufficient. China continued to be drained of the precious white metal. It is precious to them because they have no gold and nothing else to use for money.

Two banks failed recently in Shanghai within one week. One of them was a $500,000 institution, in China a very big bank, affecting many thousands of depositors. And within the space of a few short months there has been a drop of 25 percent in the weaving and spinning trades, a 30 percent decline in hat making, a 40 percent drop in the manufacture of dyestuffs, a 50 percent slump in ironwork and glassware, a 35 percent decline in the making of rubber goods. These are the principal trades and industries in China.

It is of small importance to most Americans that the depression in China has been immensely intensified by an American policy of doubtful value even to Americans. Except to American missionaries, who almost always take the trouble to look into the frightful conditions under which Chinese coolies exist, China and the Chinese are exceedingly remote, not likely to cause any more concern in this country than some disaster on the planet Mars. But the decline in Chinese trade should be of interest here because it was so loudly proclaimed that exactly the opposite would occur.

Raising the price of silver could hardly have had any other than serious consequences for China, as even the silver senators must have known. As the United States raised its bid for silver above the world price, above the value of silver in China, silver naturally gravitated to the United States. As China was thus drained of silver, Chinese money became scarcer and scarcer, since silver is the only money there is in China. The scarcity of money in China produced the same effect there, which a scarcity of money produces in this country, or in any country.

It could not have been otherwise.

American Wars

What makes nations go to war? What makes the United States ever so often become involved in foreign hostilities? Why did we get mixed up in the last war? Why is there any danger that we may take an active part in the next war? Captain L. M. Overstreet, U. S. N. (retired), in an article published in a New York paper, reviews briefly American wars and tells why this country entered them.

1. War of 1776—War of American Revolution. American colonists started this war to gain their independence.

2. War of 1797—Naval war with France. The French tried to use our seaports in their war with England. We created a navy and fought the French in order to maintain our neutrality.

3. War of 1801—War with Barbary Coast pirates. We sent our new fleet against these Barbary Coast pirates and established our doctrine, "the freedom of the seas."

4. War of 1812—We fought the British in order to maintain our new doctrine, "the freedom of the seas."

5. War of 1847—We fought Mexico and established our Southwestern frontier. We took Texas, Arizona, New Mexico and Southern California.

6. War of 1861—This dreadful American Civil War was fought to maintain the Union and to free the slaves. The ministers in our Northern pulpits did much to bring on this war by demanding the freedom of the slaves without compensation. The slaves were the property of their owners.

7. War of 1898—The Spanish-American War. We started this war in order to free the Cubans. The ministers in our pulpits brought great pressure to bear on Congress to begin hostilities.

8. War of 1917—The World War. This war was ordered by Congress. The Senate voted 82 yes, 6 no, with 8 not voting; the House voted 373 yes, 50 no, with 9 not voting.

In the years to come it is important for the people to remember that whether we have peace or war depends entirely upon them, unless war is forced upon us by some aggressive outside nation. Our government cannot deliberately declare war without the consent of the people. Big business, big bankers, munition makers cannot themselves declare war. They can only ballyhoo the public which in turn orders Congress to declare war.

As long as the public is against war, there will be no war.

WORK AND LEISURE

BY MARK SULLIVAN

The writer of these dispatches, as readers know, occasionally expresses inability to feel complete approval for divers projects, proposals and ideas now under way in the United States. These expressions of dissent provoke letters from readers. Of these waves of protesting letters, the largest was caused by a dispatch some weeks ago about the "Townsend plan," which expressed doubt whether that plan could be the panacea which its entranced advocates think it would be. I called the plan, indeed a "white rabbit," implying classifying it with the other magic remedies that were rife during the depth of the depression some two to four years ago.

The number and vigor of the reproaches I have received for my skepticism are a sign of the times. It suggests that the "Townsend plan" has taken hold of the minds of millions of Americans, in much the same way that, once in so often, smaller into expectation of the coming of Messiah on a fixed date. The Townsend plan is much more formidable than technology was when it had its vogue beginning two years ago this month. I am compelled to agree with Mr. C. G. Chase, "practical watchmaker and jeweler, North Wales, Pennsylvania," when he writes that the Townsend plan was going so fast when it passed him that he wasn't able to see its color, or even whether it was a rabbit, but that about "90 percent" of the voters are for it. Congress will be swamped with petitions.

If the Townsend plan is a white rabbit, it is up to those who think that way to explain just why the plan can't do what is expected of it by the good people, the elderly ones, for whom the plan purports to banish care. Many jeers and epithets have been thrown at Dr. Townsend and his plan; there has been little exposition of its fallacy.

Just what is the plan? It is officially cream-colored and bears the motto, "Youth for work, age for leisure," and adorned with an alluring woodcut of an elderly man and woman stepping into a smart automobile. The up-to-dateness of the cut is in inverse ratio to the age of the elderly couple who will be enabled by the Townsend plan to own the car "to go places and see things."

The plan as set forth on page 1 of the pamphlet reads, slightly condensed as follows: "Have the national government enact . . . that all citizens of

United States—man or woman—over the age of sixty, may retire on a pension of $200 a month on the following conditions:

"1. That they engage in no further labor, business or profession for gain.

"2. That their past life is free from habitual criminality.

"3. That they take oath to, and actually do, spend within the confines of the United States, the entire amount of their pension within thirty days after receiving same.

"Have the national government create the revolving fund by levying a general sales tax; have the rate high enough to produce the amount necessary . . . to pay the pensions."

The plan is recommended, not merely as a boon to persons over sixty. The claim for it is that by the rapid spending of the pension and by other effects of the plan the depression will be ended, there will be no more unemployment and America will achieve such economic security and social happiness as it never dreamed. Ten million persons over sixty will receive two billion dollars a month or twenty-four billion dollars a year. And this amount will be "turned over" in trade at least twelve times a year, probably oftener. From this flows the grandiose conclusion that business, employment, prosperity, will be greater than ever before.

Now what is the fallacy here? It lies, I suspect, in the words which tell where the money is to come from. . . . "A general sales tax; have the rate just high enough . . ."

But what is "just high enough"? And if a sales tax "high enough" were levied on the present business turnover of the country, what would happen? Some competent statistician ought to answer these questions, and answer them with sufficient simplicity to convince the persons who are centered fantastic hopes on the Townsend plan. The answer should be as convincing as the plan is alluring.

I think I know the answer, but I am in enough hot water with the older folks already. I prefer to let some statistical George do it. I think I will write for a while about the Christmas spirit and Santa Claus.

My secretary suggests one answer that is not in the world of statistics, but somewhat convincing as an argument from human nature. If father and mother combined get $400 a month from the government, sister and brother wouldn't work.

New Playwrights, Actors Steal Show On Broadway In '34

(Continued From Page One) The footlight arena. Lawrence Riley, a new author from Bradford, Pa., defied the superstition that another satire on Hollywood would not succeed, with his play, "Personal Appearance," which was a sell out from its first night. Also, it introduced the hitherto almost unknown Gladys George as one of the town's most fetching comedienne. The outstanding young leading man discovery of the season was Henry Fonda, who has the lead in "The Farmer Takes a Wife."

Towards The Historical Other young dramatists who won honors were Melvin Levy, with his lusty story of pioneer San Francisco, "Gold Eagle Guy"; Joseph Schrank, with his spoofing comedy, "Page Miss Glory."

He said the board has never assumed it had authority over non-member bank rates but said inclusion of the federal deposit insurance corporation action in the board's report was made only after he had been advised that directors of the FDIC had taken such action.

Eccles also replied to reports that the board's action was taken jointly, with the federal deposit insurance corporation, declaring that the similar actions taken by the two agencies were "separately, not jointly."

The board announced on Dec. 17 that the maximum interest that might be paid on member and savings deposits by time banks had been cut from 3 to 2 1/2 percent, effective on Feb. 1, 1935. The statement said that the federal deposit insurance corporation had made a corresponding reduction.

Eccles said that the board's first statement carried this reference because "there was abundant reason for believing that both member banks and their depositors would be vitally concerned by the rates of interest which might be paid by competing non-member banks."

which he wrote in collaboration with Philip Dunning, and Martha Madison, with her mystery melodrama, "The Night Remembered."

The general tone of plays veered towards the historical side, with the exploits of American pioneers winning unusual attention. Fred Stone made his serious dramatic debut in "Jayhawker," an episode of Civil War days. Lewis Maxwell Anderson, who has a penchant for dramatizing history, wrote the heroic story of George Washington and his gallant army in "Valley Forge." The rise and fall of the Erie canal was pictured in "The Farmer Takes a Wife," while "Gold Eagle Guy" told the story of early California shipping.

Many Foreign Imports The foreign imports, too, were numerous, the most important being the Abbey players of the Irish theater, and the D'Oyly Carte opera company with their Gilbert and Sullivan repertory from London.

The playbill of musical attractions started slowly, but soon boomed with such outstanding song and dance shows as "The Great Waltz," "Anything Goes," "Life Begins at 8:40" and "Say When."

"They are showing this in every election, national, state and municipal. And there is a very definite place for able young men and women in politics."

As to the New Deal, Benjamin was less ready with criticism. "I am unable," said the former California State Republican chairman, "to criticize Mr. Roosevelt or his policies. He's certainly entitled to a chance."

"He's eminently sincere and I am convinced he is doing everything he can to overcome most of our national difficulties. This really is no time to sit in judgment on him or the New Deal policies. It is a regrettable fact that he will be convicted for failing if he fails, rather than credited with trying. This is because we as a nation have come to be a nation of 'voters against' rather than 'voters for' a candidate or a policy."

Money To Have Lesser Value In Near Future

TOLEDO, Dec. 27.—"Money will not be so important under the new scheme of things when we come out of the depression," Philip C. Nash, president of the University of Toledo, told Elks Club members here. "But also," he added, "there will not be that desperate fear of lack of money."

Nash predicted that income and inheritance taxes would cut down fortunes that pass on through generations.

Dr. Wynkoop Again United Trial Appeal

Dr. Wynkoop was again united in an appeal for a new trial in the case of the woman who was found guilty of the murder of her husband. The appeal was heard by the Florida Supreme Court and the decision was rendered in favor of a new trial.

The woman, Mrs. Wynkoop, had been convicted of the murder of her husband, Dr. Wynkoop, who was found dead in his study. The case had been the subject of a sensational trial, and the appeal was based on the grounds that the jury was improperly instructed and that there was some doubt as to the guilt of the defendant.

The Florida Supreme Court, in a unanimous decision, granted the appeal and ordered a new trial. This decision was hailed as a victory for the defendant and her attorneys.

Eastern States Besieged By Iron Western Winds

The Atlantic weather Bureau reported today that the Eastern States are being besieged by iron Western winds. The report indicates that the winds are strong and cold, and are likely to continue for several days. This is a departure from the milder weather that has been experienced in the region recently.

The Bureau noted that the winds are blowing from the west-northwest, and are accompanied by a decrease in temperature. This is a sign of a cold front moving in from the West. The winds are expected to reach their peak strength in the next few days.

The report also indicates that there is a possibility of some snowfall in the higher elevations of the region. This is the first time in several years that snow has been reported in this area.

KANSAS JUDGE HOLDS PRICE FIXING ILLEGAL

A Kansas judge today held the practice of price fixing illegal. The judge's decision was based on the fact that price fixing is a restraint of trade and is therefore prohibited by the federal antitrust laws. The judge found that the defendants in the case had conspired to fix the prices of certain goods, and that this was an illegal act.

The judge's decision was a significant one, as it established that price fixing is illegal even when it is done by individuals or small groups. This is a departure from previous legal interpretations, which had held that price fixing was only illegal when it was done by a large group of people.

The decision is expected to have a significant impact on the practice of price fixing in Kansas and other states. It is hoped that this decision will help to protect consumers from the high prices that are often the result of price fixing.

Women Use Less Intelligence In Eating, Is Report

WASHINGTON, Dec. 27.—(AP)—Although women are the nation's cooks they eat less intelligently than men, the Bureau of Home Economics has discovered.

Tests were made through observing the meals bought by 755 men students and 850 women students during two ten-day periods at one of the state agricultural colleges. One test was run in warm weather and one in cold.

Two-thirds of the men bought milk, sometimes for both lunch and dinner. Only one-fifth of the women bought milk, thereby having less milk in the diet than nutritionists consider necessary to provide the calcium the body needs.

Men ate bread and meat oftener than women. They even ate more vegetables, although "vegetables" for men usually meant potatoes.

Women ate more deserts, while more than one-half the men bought sweets, from two-thirds to three-fourth of the women had them with their meals. Pie was the favorite dish with the man, and ice cream with the women.

Considering the meals as a whole the investigator found them low in energy value. Women ate meals which were 9 percent too low in calcium, 15 percent below in protein, 28 percent below in phosphorus, and 43 percent below in iron.

The men were up to standard in calcium, protein, and phosphorus, but they, too, were below, although the deficiency was only 22 percent.
