BIG PROBLEMS FACE SOLONS AFTER RECESS

Prohibition, Railway Consolidation And Tariff To Feature Legislative Work

WASHINGTON, Jan. 4.—Prohibition, tariff and railroad consolidation legislation occupied the headlines today on the legislative program awaiting the return of Congress from its holiday vacation.

When the House and Senate reconvene Monday, they will face six or seven months of legislative activity before the first session ends, they will have to deal with the prohibition problem with its intricate and highly acrimonious, as well as enforcement, must the pending tariff bill, dispose of the railroad consolidation question and pass upon a dozen other equally important issues.

The annual supply bill, carrying about $1,500,000,000 to finance the government next year, must be enacted too, the House having passed that measure last week and the Senate having passed it last week. The prohibition bill, which came to the fore when the treasury appropriation bill is considered, since it carries the funds for the prohibition unit, the coast guard and the border patrol, all intimately identified with prohibition enforcement.

In the Senate, the tariff will have the right of way until passed, after that, the revision of a tariff bill must be considered to iron out differences with the House. Administration leaders hope to send the measure to conference by the end of February and to have it written into law by April.

The prohibition controversy will hold the spotlight continuously through almost congressional committee will be created within a week or two to pass upon all additional legislation, needed to improve prohibition enforcement. It will be this committee's duty to sponsor legislation carrying out the recommendations of President Hoover's law enforcement commission.

County Schools To Reopen Following Christmas Recess

After a two week's Christmas and New Year's vacation, students of Sanford and Seminole County schools will resume their respective classes Monday morning, it was announced today by T. W. Lawton, superintendent.

Mr. Lawton said that the teachers of the schools will start at the time where they left off at the close of school Friday afternoon. The 25 and students are to be reminded to remember that the holiday recess ends and that classes begin promptly at the usual hour Monday morning.

While the graded schools, and the three lower classes of the high school will probably take the first five months of a matter of course, the number of the graduating class of Seminole High is expected to follow in the footsteps of their predecessors and enter their public school careers with a final period of "hard work" filled with accomplishments, according to Charles Butler, president of the senior class, who said that his classmates will be busy in preparing their annual play sometime in January, and also engaged in the task of publishing the "Red Ragundi," the school year book. The class also contemplates taking charge of the publication of The Herald one day next winter, he said, and during the closing days of the school term there will be parties, socials, dinners, banquets and other entertainments bidding the graduates farewell.

Looking For Opportunities

Mexico, lamentable enough, is going United States. According to the Miami Herald, that nation, probably tawling its cue from the way this country habitually celebrates special weeks, has inaugurated a "Clean Stable Week."

Mexico, it seems, is having a tendency to go United States in a great many ways. Whether this is a cultivating influence of Dwight Morrow, who represented this country and J. P. Morgan in Mexico City long enough to improve financial relations anyway, or whether it is the inevitable result of travel on the part of Mexico's leading statesmen, we do not know.

Last week there were in the United States the president-elect, Pascual Ortiz Rubio, his wife, two sons, one daughter, a sister-in-law, her son, and at least twelve assistants; also, the president-elect, don Vasconcelos, his son and daughter; also, the mayor of Mexico City, Manuel Pala y Casaurano; and his wife; also, the "Mexican Lindbergh," Colonel Pablo Sillar; also, General Manuel Perez Trevino, president of the Grand Revolutionary Party; also, Filberto Gomez, the governor of the state of Mexico; also, Saturnino Cedillo, governor of the state of San Luis Potosi; also, Alberto Tejeda, governor of the state of Vera Cruz; also Jose Gonzalo Escobar, super-revolutionist.

Some of these men no doubt find the salubrious climate of this country, despite the Klans of the South and the gangland gangs of New York and Chicago racketeers, a healthier place in which to reside than the turbulent residential sections of their own Mexico City. And we have no doubt that while they are learning many beneficial things in this country such as our famed weeks, like "Better Babies Week," and "Turn off the Heat Week," from which they get their "Clean Stable Week," they may have picked up some of our baser customs.

But we hope they did not learn all of them from us. For we find no less a general than Don Gonzalo Escobar, the "George Washington of Mexico," who has visited this country many times, before his most recent flight across the border, and undoubtedly was very wise in the way of the world, taking advantage of every break in life in the United States. With his eyes to the future, while in the very midst of precipitating a revolution which ends the rule of some four thousand of his fellow countrymen by the Bank of Montreal in Mexico for $108,000,000 and the money to the United States where it would be safe in the event of emergencies.

He reminds us of the general who after exhorting his men to dash bravely forward into battle, concluded his remarks with this advice: "If you can't hold the hill, retreat. I get a lame leg, so I'll start now." Escobar had safely fled Mexico shortly after the firing began and is now looking for business opportunities in Chicago.

Why Not A Tourist Club?

The recently organized Sarasota Tourist Club has according to the Herald of that city, already become one of its most important institutions. While the city of Sanford has never to any large extent made an effort to induce winter visitors to locate here, even for a brief period during the season, nevertheless we believe that such a body as the Tourist Club of Sarasota could accomplish wonders in adding this city to its return to prosperity.

Sanford has much to offer many visitors to this section. True there is not here the wild excitement of Miami, the social whirlwind of Palm Beach or the metropolitanism in its entirety of Tampa and Jacksonville. Still there are many persons who do not want these things, who rather prefer the quiet restfulness of the smaller cities, where they can enjoy to the fullest extent the mild climate, which "by" winds, throughout Florida, and the fresh vegetables of the surrounding country.

We have many forms of outdoor recreation, which should appeal to most northerners. We have hunting, more readily accessible than to visitors in larger foreign cities, and sea water fishing, which is not excelled anywhere in the South. We have a public library where the best books can be procured, and a public library where the best books can be procured, and a public library where the best books can be procured.

Why could we not have a tourist club? Sanford is primarily an agricultural community, but the tourist business is making other Florida cities grow and prosper at a surprising rate. Sanford is needs time one of its greatest opportunities by not pushing this tourist business.

The tourist club finds at hand a wide field in which to function, says the Sarasota Herald. "The Thursday evening meetings at the Mira Mar auditorium provide an excellent through which all our visitors can find a goodly fellowship."

"It is a medium through which not only do the members from the different cities in the north get in touch with one another, but with our own citizens." The Sarasota paper continues. "The tourist club has wisely provided for two classes of members—an active membership consisting exclusively of tourists, and an associate membership consisting of residents of Sarasota. While the tourists are affiliated into themselves and can have a good time here apart from association with our local citizens, it is very manifest that a free mingling of tourists and citizens will greatly conduce to their enjoyment and add much to the attractiveness of Sarasota. Quite a number of our best people have already joined the tourist club, but many more are waiting to do so. With a pleasant time and good fellowship, the tourist club through the commencing of the winter season, will give an ever increasing number of fine people a chance to spend their winters in this city."

The World's Window

By Pierre Van Passant

There is a little tavern near the entrance of the forest of St. Germain in which Henri IV once spent the night. A small man in a black coat and a white shirt, who looks like a historical accuracy of the event, was sitting at the table when the monarch entered. He was looking at the monarch with a certain interest, and when the monarch had seated himself, he said to him: "You are a Frenchman, are you not?"

"Yes, I am a Frenchman," replied the monarch. "Why do you ask me that?"

"Because I have a question to ask you," replied the man in the black coat. "I have a question to ask you, and I have a question to ask you."

"What is your question?" asked the monarch.

"I have a question to ask you," replied the man in the black coat. "I have a question to ask you, and I have a question to ask you."
