Dee Dee Stoner

Dee Dee Stoner is a charming 28-year-old woman who enjoys working hard, helping others and singing a happy song.

She's extremely proud to be on the verge of her 10th anniversary as an employee-client at the Seminole Work Opportunity Program (S.W.O.P.) in Casselberry.

To be sure, Dee Dee is one of the most valuable assets at S.W.O.P., a non-profit organization that provides services for more than a hundred clients who have been identified by the state as developmentally disabled.

A cerebral palsy victim, Dee Dee has the use of only one hand yet accomplishes work loads that are close to miraculous. "Dee Dee can label faster than me," said Tracy Balint, the client services manager at S.W.O.P. "She's amazing, and very dedicated."

Dee Dee takes regular turns as the microfilm camera operator at the work activities center, and also assists other employee-clients who need help with their work and when they sit down for lunch each day.

"I assist Herbert Scott, Jr. and Alfredo Wiggins," Dee Dee said. "Help them set up to eat. I like doing all I can for them. Sometimes I sing for them. I sing oldies, like 'Go, Granny Go' or

27 years later: Feds target Sanford for school desegregation; Lake Mary schools OK

By VICKI DeBORNIER
 Herald Senior Staff Writer

SANFORD — Not since the introduction of the year round school concept has there been such a public outcry over any proposal put forth by the Seminole County school district.

The desegregation consent decree plans have brought out throngs of parents to meetings at the school board office and at several of Sanford's elementary schools.

And they're not happy.

The Seminole County School District has been under a federally-mandated desegregation order since 1970. While there are a few other school districts in the state that are still so burdened, the trend has been away from massive busing in the far-flung, racially balanced attendance zones to the more traditional neighborhood schools.

In Seminole County, on the other hand, attendance zones are being manipulated in Sanford in order to achieve racial balance.

See Schools, Page 5A

Complying with a federal desegregation order would entail a busing plan enabling elementary school children to travel to a school chosen from a designated group of schools.

SANFORD — As the school year wraps up, some students are dreading the arrival of their report cards. Others will be pleased to see how they performed throughout the year. With one notable exception.

Supt. Paul Hagerty should be pretty proud of his evaluation which was sent out Friday.

SANFORD - Law enforcement officers from several local departments held a joint K-9 training session in the parking lot of the Sanford Herald late Thursday night and into the early hours of Friday morning.

K-9 officers from Casselberry, Longwood, Sanford and Seminole County spent about four hours working with the dogs in tracking and apprehension exercises within a several block radius of the newspaper office, which is located on U.S. Highway 17-92, just north of Lake Monroe.

Officer Jim Goodman, of the Casselberry Police Department, explained the tactics used

Jeff Goldblum: Movies and magic

By DAVID FRAZIER
 Herald Staff Writer

ORLANDO- Jeff Goldblum is not considered a big draw at the movies. Although, a lot of his films have fared considerably well with mainstream audiences. Especially in the past four years. Goldblum has had roles in Jurassic Park, Independence Day and, now, The Lost World: Jurassic Park already in the record books as the highest grossing movie within a five day period.

Goldblum last week was on hand for the opening of Universal Studios Florida's newest attraction, The Lost World. The new attraction recreates scenes from the sequel to one of the most popular movies of our time. One of Universal's backlot soundstages is the setting for many of the movie's props. It offers visitors the opportunity to see behind the scenes of what is sure to be the movie to beat this summer.

Along with President and Chief Executive of Universal City Florida, Tom Williams, Goldblum took the press around the new attraction, and then was able to field questions about his new movie. "Last time, the landmark technology that allowed them to create these never before seen, realistic dinosaurs has been upgraded," said Goldblum when asked how this movie differs from the original Jurassic. "They've used it [the CG technology] more nimbly." Goldblum also spoke about the action in Lost World and how director Steven Spielberg made this movie a lot scarier than the first. "I saw it with an audience and people are just on the edges of their seat," Goldblum said. "There are several classic 'jump' scenes where you throw your popcorn all around."

Goldblum brings a quirkiness to his roles that make him so interesting to watch. He also has a

Surfin' the Internet can land you in a heap of summer camps

By STEVE BARNES
Herald Staff Writer

CYBERSPACE - Summer's here and the kids are out of school. For the next couple of weeks, they will have the time of their lives. Then comes the inevitable, "I'm bored!" Not sure what to do? Fear not. The magic of the Internet comes to the rescue again, this time with literally hundreds of thousands of listings of great and wonderful summer camps to keep your kids happy and off the street.

One site, InterCamp, has listings for hundreds of kids' summer camps located all over the country, and a few around the world. While not full of whiz bang special effects, the site is extremely user friendly. (If you have trouble, ask your child for help.)

The home page offers the options of looking at a camp directory as a list or by state. It also allows you to view only those camps that have their own web pages. Another section is a directory of companies that sell outdoor equipment. A rather unique section allows you to participate in "chat groups" with other parents.

As I scrolled through the list of states looking for camps in Florida, I gave thanks that I don't live in Wyoming. You have to scroll past not just the names of the states to get the information you want, but also the camp listings in each state. The more logical choice would have been to have links to each state's page or a place to type in the state of your choice.

Once I found the Florida section, I was treated to a list of camps which run the gamut from Aviation to Zoology. The camps all include basic information about their location, activities, price range, age ranges served and the time of year that they are open. A few of the more interesting looking camps:

-Embry-Riddle Aeronautical University Aerospace Summer Camp in Daytona Beach (904) 226-0186. This high-tech alternative offers such activities as astronomy, computer classes, writing workshops and tours of the Kennedy Space Center.

-Circle F Dude Ranch in Lake Wales (the phone number listed was scrambled) offers traditional "cowboy" activities including horse back riding and campfire sing-alongs. They also provide time for camp crafts, art and creative improve.

-For the budding biologist or animal lover in your family, check out Monkeys and Mangroves located in Savannah Ga. (912) 897-5106. This camp teaches kids about primate behavior and ecology. This sounds like a fun camp, but be careful when you pick up your child or you may bring home the wrong little chimp.

-My personal favorite, Sail Caribbean, e-mail - sailcaribbb@aol.com is based in the British Virgin Islands. They offer sailing, scuba diving and other water based activities. (If your kids come home mumbling about the presence of a wild eyed journalist, you will know that I finally convinced my editor of the need to actually spend a few days on board to do a proper review.)

This is just a brief sampling of the camps listed in the InterCamp directory. For a more detailed look, check out their home page at <http://www.intercamp.com/>

If you don't find what you are looking for there, go to your search engine and type in "kids summer camps" or some combination of similar words. My first search turned up over 36,000 listings.

If you have any questions or if you know of a web site that might be of interest to Herald readers, call me at 322-2611 or e-mail me at news-guy@usa.net Until next time, keep on surfen!

Making a difference for seniors

First in an occasional series

By SHARI BROOIE
Herald Staff Writer

Providing services to senior citizens in Seminole County takes a lot of resolve.

Seniors comprise 15 percent (47,000) of the population of Seminole County, according to statistics given by the Senior Resource Alliance. There are special needs and concerns of this population that are addressed daily by more than a dozen agencies in this county and throughout Central Florida. But without a collaborative effort, far too many of those who really need help, do not get it.

Dotti Burkett, Elder Service Officer for the Seminole County Sheriff's Office, has made it her mission in life to enhance the efforts of senior caregivers in this county, insuring that not one senior falls through the cracks.

Burkett is the chairman of TRIAD/SALT for Seminole County, a volunteer position that meshes well with her duties at the sheriff's office. (TRIAD is a three-way effort between the sheriff, police chiefs and senior agencies and SALT is an acronym for "Seniors and Lawmen Together.") She organized a breakfast Thursday, attended by all of the groups involved in TRIAD/SALT, to "recognize and rejuvenate" the effort that has been working in Seminole County since 1993. A representative of each agency was asked, at the end of the breakfast, to sign a resolution to "agree to work closely to continue to develop and implement policies and programs that reduce criminal victimization of older persons, serve the special needs of older citizens and enhance the delivery of law enforcement services to the elderly."

"Serving others is what all of you have chosen to do," Burkett told those who attended the breakfast. "Together, we can make a difference."

TRIAD is a national program which began as a way to enhance law enforcement services to older citizens, getting back to community policing or the "beat cop" style of law enforcement.

In Seminole County, the Sheriff's Office, all seven municipalities, the Florida Department of Law Enforcement, the State Attorney's Office, Department of Children and Family (formerly HRS) and a variety of senior organizations are involved in TRIAD. These groups include AARP, Better Living for Seniors, Seminole County Cooperative Extension Services, the Central Florida Zoo, RSVP, the Salvation Army, Senior Resource Alliance and the Alzheimer Resource Center. The Thursday breakfast was hosted by Baldwin-Fairchild Cemeteries and Funeral Homes, a business partner in TRIAD.

Because the special needs of the older population are not always instantly discernible, it takes the special attention and special training of the law enforcement officer, a person who is more likely to make initial contact, to recognize these needs.

Burkett told those in attendance that she provides sensitivity training to sheriff's deputies and police officers in the county, bringing to light the disabilities that come with age. She generally asks those in her class to tell, true or false, if all of the five senses decline with age. She asked Lake Mary Police Chief Richard Beary at the breakfast, and he answered "false."

In explaining why the statement is true, she used the example of the older woman at church who gives you a hug and you are overwhelmed by her cologne. "She put it on until she could smell it!"

Why won't mom eat, you might ask yourself. Burkett said that in many cases, the sense of taste has declined and everything tastes like cardboard.

For the patrol officer, awareness comes in the way of how difficult it is for that older adult to get out his or her license and registration, during a traffic stop, with arthritis-crippled hands. While that traffic cop can relate to the father with three screaming kids strapped in their car seats, speeding through a school zone, Burkett said, in most cases, that officer has not experienced the decline of age and what that does to the body. She said she tries to teach patience and compassion.

Once an officer learns to recognize the needs of the elderly, he or she must then know what the best course of action is. This is where the information shared through TRIAD plays a large part.

"The key is the cooperative efforts and sharing of information," Burkett said in the progress report she distributed at the breakfast. "The collaborative efforts do not replace any existing programs, they only enhance them by adding safety and security concerns."

How has the program worked in the past four years? Linda Ryder, with the State of Florida Department of Children and Family, summed it up by saying, "It's a better effort and the seniors are the ones that are benefiting."

Editor's note: In coming weeks, we will focus more on the purpose of TRIAD, some of the agencies that provide services to the senior population and on some of the programs provided by the Seminole County Sheriff's Elder Service Office.

Grades

earned grades of more than four from four of the Seminole County school board members. Only board member Bob Goff rated him at an abysmal 1.85 average.

Barbara Kuhn gave him an average rating of 4.55; chairman Sandy Robinson gave him an average rating of 4.33; Jeanne Morris gave him an average score of 4.21; and Larry Furlong rated the superintendent with a 4.09 average.

Goff made no excuses for his low rating.

"It was based on my own personal experiences with him," Goff said of the superintendent.

Goff said he and the superintendent have never gotten along professionally, even before he was elected. But in recent times, especially, Goff said, Hagerty has "taken cheap shots at me in public every chance he gets."

Still, it is not a vendetta, he maintains. He does not hold a grudge because he feels he's been mistreated by the superintendent.

"I'm just rating him on my experiences and in my experience he has poor people skills and poor management skills."

Goff said he rarely meets with employees below the level of assistant superintendent who do not tell him of waste in the school district.

"They're going through money like crazy and I'm supposed to give this guy top marks?" Goff asked.

Apparently the other board members thought so.

"I didn't see any problem areas," Robinson said. "There's always room for improvement, though."

She suggested the superintendent needed to go out more into the community to work with the business leaders on ways they and the district could work together to continue to improve the schools. She also suggested he needed to work on expanding his "circle of advisors," from which he could draw fresh ideas.

While one board member disputed the opinions of his peers, the superintendent will retain his job for another year following the formal vote on the matter at the next board meeting on June 10.

"Absolutely. Without a doubt. He keeps his job," Robinson said.

As chairman, she will enter into negotiations with the superintendent in mid-June.

Fishing for answers

Seminole County Commissioner Daryl McLain went fishing Thursday - fishing for all the facts and figures in the emergency medical services competition that may or may not be resolved on June 10.

McLain was the only commissioner to attend the four-hour proposal committee rating session (Chairman Randy Morris dropped in later after being the county's representative at funeral services for Amos Jones).

We expected the others would be at the ranking meeting, too - particularly the three who supported the Request for Proposal for EMS services, creating a situation that threatened to destroy the county's highly respected First Response system if a private company was chosen over the county's fire-rescue division.

There's still the possibility that commissioners Win Adams, Grant Maloy and Dick Van Der Welde will reject the committee's rankings as they did a recommendation last Tuesday from the county purchasing director to throw out LifeFleet/Atlantic's bid because it did not include all the information required.

Each member of the BCC has more than a week to think about how he will vote on June 10. Maloy told us he will listen closely to the tapes of the committee ranking session and thoroughly study the facts and figures. He said he regrets a scheduling conflict caused him to miss the session itself.

McLain and Morris have fought hard on the side of the county's fire-rescue division, which gained a huge boost when ranked tops by the committee at the conclusion of Thursday's presentations and question-answer session.

Commissioner Adams proposed the RFP and brought in the Big Six auditing firm of Deloitte & Touche to "even out the playing field." The firm's lead official named the county's fire-rescue division the tops of the lot Thursday. Hiring the firm cost the taxpayers $65,000. Now we ask two questions. Was it worth the money? Are the commissioners ready to accept the firm's direction?

We salute Commissioner McLain for his fishing expedition. Seems he's caught on better than some.

Former mayor blasts economic incentives

I read with interest the letter from Jimmy Ross concerning this tax and spend policy of our liberal county commissioners.

The tax and spend virus found its way to Longwood via the lobbying efforts of the representatives of the county commission. This virus infected the Longwood City Commission to the extent that it agreed to consider giving away $25,000 of our money in a socialist experiment.

This experiment, also disguised as a jobs incentive program, has not come to fruition. I appeared before the Longwood City Commission and offered some salient facts that had not been given to the Commission before it agreed in principle to engaging in a socialist adventure.

Tax and spend liberals have a way of sugar coating issues to such an extent that nothing but confusion exists. For certain, taxing people to give money to businesses to create jobs simply does not work. If it did, we'd have 100% employment all the time, no welfare except for the disabled, and people from other socialist countries would not be coming to our shores seeking a better life.

Steve Miller,
former Mayor of Longwood

Complaint about expenditure

I have formed a committee of one to complain about Seminole County Commission approval of $5,000 toward Sanford's 4th of July celebration. The basis for this complaint is a matter of principle, not dislike for the City of Sanford.

My home could be sold on the courthouse steps if I failed to pay my taxes. Therefore, I have every reason to expect that each of my tax dollars will be frugally spent on the traditional services that taxpayers expect the County to provide. Buying Fourth of July fireworks is not my idea of one of these services.

If the County Commission could find its way clear to eliminate frivolous expenditures such as this, it might have enough funds to provide a Stormwater Management Program without raising my taxes.

Seminole has seven, who'll give us eight?

TAXES!!

The hated word is upon us again. Look out Orange County! I never thought I would see the day when we would have a seven cent sales tax. Think about it...seven cents out of almost every dollar you spend! That alone sounds like a lot to me, but when you add school, property, income tax, and all the "OTHER" taxes and the other words...revenues, fees, etc., it's really time to say NO MORE! Besides the fact that we are taxed too much...they waste it!

We all want to have the best of schools, but when our tax dollars are treated like monopoly money it's time to say, "No, we're not giving you anymore until we see some accountability!"

If there are fiscal conservatives out there, please tell me who they are. This is a very serious problem. It's at a boiling point with most

Think about this,

ERNEST HATTON II

Ernest Hatton II is a veteran member of numerous government boards and is a civic activist in the interest of good government.

Americans. The only way to turn the problem around, before we all become serfs of government, is to stop any further tax programs. The truth is that you may give them another cent now and they'll promise you that everything will be just fine, but they'll be back. Trust me, there's another tax being considered right now. Why give them more? Look at the transportation issue...another deficit situation with light rail. Are they looking at alternatives that may not produce a deficit? There will come a time when the well is just about dry or when the public has finally lost its patience.

It's like an auction. We have seven cents who, will give us eight, seven cents in Seminole...will Orange go eight? Orange is only at six, will they go to seven first. Now back to Lake County...Whatta you want to do? Will you go eight? Now back to Orange, do you want to go to seven? Yes, we have seven in Orange. Does Seminole want to go to eight? They do...Oh, we also have eight in Orange. What's goin' to be? If you snooze, you lose! You get the picture.

In the eyes of this year's grads

I had the honor and great privilege to be a part of the Lake Brantley High School graduation. It's a part of each school board member's duties to authorize the granting of diplomas and to turn the tassels of the graduating Seniors, an act which signifies that the student has graduated.

As the Seniors received their diplomas from Principal Darvin Boothe, they turned and approached me. Their cords told me about their school activities and their collars told me of their academic honors. But it was their eyes that told me many stories. Many had tears--some had the glint of confident, assured individuals who looked forward to tomorrow because their future was planned and set-jobs obtained, scholarships earned and futures well in hand.

But many of those eyes told me of a different story. They were the eyes of graduates who were afraid. Sure, some of those students had never appeared before an audience of 10,000 before--let alone by themselves, in the glare of the spotlight with strobe lights flashing as pictures were taken. Many were awed by the experience of the moment. Some were as close to being in shock as you will find in survivors wandering around in the ruins after a hurricane. With all of the hoopla of graduation, there were still eyes coming towards me that revealed that some of our graduates don't have a plan, much less a future that they feel comfortable facing.

In particular there were two graduates who stood out in my mind. As the names of the graduates were announced, there were cheers or applause from the audience. The Homecoming queen and the baseball star types got the most recognition from the assembled 10,000--but two students graduated in absolute silence. The father in me wanted to believe that their parents--or at least one parent--watched in silent pride. The journalist wanted the story of why these students apparently had no one in the audience who recognized them for their achievement of graduation. The School Board member agonized that no one had come forward in these children's academic career to help them form the friendships which would have resulted in audible recognition at this, the most important time in their young lives.

I'll never know what the real story was with those two individuals. The eternal optimist in me hopes that somewhere out there in the crowd was a large family, brimming with pride, who smothered their child with love and affection after the ceremony. I hope so.....

Here's a thought for you to consider. When County Commission Chairman Randy Morris announced his selection of Shutts and Bowen to represent the county in the legal actions against illegal adult entertainment establishments in Fern Park, attorney Ken Wright filed the first two suits within 30 minutes of the commission vote. Now keep in mind that Chairman Morris kept insisting that Shutts and Bowen would assign an attorney to the county and indicated that he had no particular attorney in mind.

BOB GOFF

For those of us who are common ordinary citizens, when we want to file a suit, it takes weeks to meet with the attorney and to have the attorney gather all the facts of the case and write the complaint--let alone file the suit with the Clerk of the Court. And when did you ever get an attorney to do anything before the retainer check cleared the bank? Now, either Ken Wright knew exactly how the vote was going to go--he's partners in a boat with Commissioner Daryl McLain so there was no reason to think that he wouldn't get that vote, and Chairman Morris had already met with him--or he was taking a big leap of faith to do all that work depending on the whims of the mercurial Win Adams, a commissioner who flips and flops on almost every issue. And what would have happened if McLain declared a conflict of interest and removed himself from the vote--as most observers expected him to do? You don't get hired on a 2-2 tie vote. Do you think Mr. Wright knew about the results of the vote before it was taken? There are some who think so!

A final thought on the graduations of Seminole County's high school seniors: Lost in the furor of having a massive drug bust during final exams is the positive community work performed by thousands of these seniors. At Lake Brantley, the blood drive brought 850 contributors--more than at any other high school in the state. Another notable statistic was the number of volunteer hours contributed to the community--in excess of 10,000 hours this year by just this one senior class. The same message was presented at other graduations--Brantley is not the exception, but the rule.

Yes, we complain about the drug dealers among our students. And we read about the delinquents who are failing test after test--leaving our schools to graduate to a life of crime. There are some of these kids in our schools--the challenge is to recognize the good things that kids do while making sure that the bad things are identified, evaluated and dealt with. The greatest joy that I have as a school board member is that I have a unique opportunity to see first hand the unwritten stories of children's growth and success. The most pleasure I have as a columnist is that I get to tell you about some of them.

Transportation for the disabled,

Part 2

Last week's article focused on just the basics of Central Florida's Para-Transit system. This week I would like to explore some other areas. Again, Para-Transit is transportation (mostly) for the disabled. It is commonly referred to as T. D., short for Transportation Disadvantaged.

To repeat from last week: In Para-Transit, the client or customer calls and schedules a ride ~~one or more days in advance~~, depending on the criteria the client falls into. This service is available throughout the tri-county area (Orange, Seminole and Osceola). Para-Transit is a door to door, shared ride system.

The Local Community Transportation Coordinator is Lynx, the areas public transportation company. This is run by the Lynx A+ Link Department. Lynx is aided by an advisory board called the "C. A. C.", Consumer's Advisory Committee. This board is mostly made up of disabled riders of the system. The board meets once a month and has been in effect for several years.

Another entity in the transportation set-up is the L. C. B., which is part of the Metropolitan Planning Organization (M. P. O.). The L. C. B. meets about six times a year. Among its main tasks, the L. C. B. evaluates the C. T. C. (Community Transportation Coordinator - Lynx, and reviews local funding.

The L. C. B. also evaluates regional opportunities, annually reviews the C. T. C., monitors the services provided by the C. T. C., and investigates and provides recommendations for the resolution of grievances.

The membership of the coordinating board - L. C. B. - consists of elected officials, local representatives from the State of Florida's agencies or services and representatives from the senior and disability communities are also on the board.

In effect, the L. C. B. is patterned after the State of Florida's "Transportation Disadvantaged Commission". This is a gubernatorial appointed board that handles state transportation issues. It also meets several times a year and has members from throughout the State of Florida, including Central Florida.

Now that you know the basics of the Para-Transit in a nut shell, you know that it is a very planned out system. Sure as with any big entity, there are some days that are better than others. On the positive side, however, the local Para-Transit service continues to evolve. With each of these evolutions, the service gets better. With well over 35,000 grips a month, and this number grows constantly, many disabled people are very glad that this system is in effect.

* If you have a non-profit group or organization, related to the disabled, and have a fund-raiser or special event coming up, please let us know about it. Also include the name, address and phone number of the group or organization, as well as, the time, place and contact person for the event.

"Oh Donna."

Dee Dee was born in Denver, Col., and came with her parents to Florida as a small girl. She graduated from Lake Mary High School and now takes adult education courses at S.W.O.P. She has a special interest in medicine and science.

She wore a couple of angel pins on her T-shirt as she worked one day last week, her blue eyes dancing gaily. "Sometimes, I feel as if I'm in my own little world," she said.

We're glad Dee Dee is in our little world and salute her as one of our 11 favorite Seminole County people.

Meet our other June honorees:

Dave and Pam Glassburne

The Glassburnes graciously brought 17-year-old Russian exchange student Dimitri "Dima" Zinkevich into their Lake Mary home last fall, responding to a call from Ann Ruddell, the Central Florida representative of the International Cultural Exchange Service.

Because Dimitri had cerebral palsy, Ruddell searched a long while to place him with a caring family. Many rejected Dimitri before the Glassburnes read about him in this newspaper and welcomed him.

"Dimitri loves the Glassburnes and they love him," Ruddell said. "They are the kind of people who make a program like this work. They have gone well beyond just being host parents. Dimitri goes home this month knowing what America is all about."

Angela Eakman

Fire service technician Angela Eakman extends herself far beyond the call of duty and is high on the list to become a lieutenant in the Seminole County fire-rescue division.

Eakman, a four-year veteran of the division, has designed welcome packages that the division gives to new citizens, informing them about first aid, telephone numbers and the best methods to get help. "She's a little dynamo," says Fire Fighters Local 3254 president Richard Criswell.

Eakman works out of station 22 in Fern Park.

Patrick Daly and Yahronda Burden

Patrick and Yahronda are the latest oratorical winners in the annual contest sponsored by the Optimist Club of Sanford and competed in a state-wide competition this weekend in Gainesville.

Patrick attends Sanford Middle School, and Yahronda is a 10th grader at Seminole High School.

Both wrote brilliant essays on good citizenship, and then delivered their messages with gusto and glory.

Paul Benjamin

Paul Benjamin is a man in perpetual motion, a leader of the Men in Action, U.S.A. organization, a Royal Ranger at Wekiva Assembly Church and a volunteer chaplain at the Orlando Bridge, where he helps felons in a 12-step drug and alcohol rehab program.

You can also catch Benjamin at 3:30 p.m. each Wednesday on WTRR 1400 AM radio. He is the host for the Marriage and Family Survival Program.

Donna Evans

Donna Evans gives a lot of tender loving care to all her clients at Dave's Barber Shop in Sanford. She's especially generous to the many senior citizens who are as comfortable in her barber's chair as they are in their homes.

Donna frequently donates her time and skills to those in nursing homes or senior care centers.

And by the way, she's a terrific barber.

Betty Vann

A retired Seminole County teacher who has never lost interest or enthusiasm for young people, Betty Vann serves the community well as the Youth Activity chairman for the Sanford Optimists Club.

"No matter what needs to be done, Betty is always there ready to help," says newly-elected Optimist Club President Audrey Ogden. Hundreds of Vann's former physical education students fondly remember her as "Coach Watson."

Betty Tuepker and Thea Moulton

Betty Tuepker, aka "Bingo Betty" and her sister, Thea Moulton are volunteers twice each week at the Healthcare & Rehabilitation Center (formerly known as Hillhaven) in Sanford.

Tuepker coordinates bingo parties at the center. Moulton accompanies her sister and kept to the duties even after suffering a recent stroke.

Tuesdays and Fridays are special days for the center residents - the days they are visited by Betty and Thea.

Schools

Gay Clark is a concerned parent who believes the school board is being manipulated into accepting a plan that satisfies the U.S. Department of Justice's statistical formula for desegregation. Decisions are being made, she said, by the school district staff and the justice department's civil rights division.

"Their (members of the school board) hands are tied to a certain extent," she said. "The decisions are being negotiated without them."

Parents argue the school district is being led down a dangerous path, with money being spent recklessly and children being put in danger by having to spend unnecessary time on the bus.

"It's irresponsible to put these students on a bus for a longer time each day," Clark pointed out. "It's fiscally irresponsible as well."

The plans being considered for the Sanford schools involve varying degrees of "controlled choice," a plan of action, Supt. Paul Hagerly said, "that will address the needs of students, and the wishes of the community, inside the attendance zones in the northern quadrant of our county."

Under the proposals, students in northeastern Seminole County would have the choice of attending Pine Crest Elementary School, the Hamilton Elementary magnet school for communications through advanced technology or the Midway Elementary magnet school for basic skills through the arts. Students in the northwestern quadrant would have the choice between Wilson, Idyllwild and Wicklow elementary schools.

The point of the liberal transfer policies allowed under the plans, district officials said, is to eliminate "racially identifiable" schools. Still Lake Mary and Heathrow elementary schools, which are predominantly white schools have been left out of the mix.

This, too, perturbs Clark. "Lake Mary Elementary is closer to the black community than Wilson, but they don't include that school in the cluster," she noted. "Why not?"

Kathy Devine, the justice department attorney assigned to Seminole County, visited every school in the district and spoke with various community groups recently. It was she who selected the schools which would be included in the clusters.

Devine would not comment about how she came to her conclusions, saying department policy prohibits her from speaking to the media as well as to school board members. Members of the community who have spoken with her, however, said she has told them the board "had no hand in the choice of schools."

Friedman's stores convert to Marks and Morgan Jewelers

From Staff Reports

The A. A. Friedman Co., with stores in Sanford and Altamonte Springs, will convert 110 of its Friedman's Jewelers stores to Marks & Morgan Jewelers, in a move designed to unify the chain under a single name and position it for future growth under a new generation of family ownership.

The 110 stores will combine with 17 Marks & Morgan stores now operated by the chain. The move by the Augusta, Ga.-based company resolves the increasing confusion resulting from two jewelry chains operating in the Southeast under the Friedman's Jewelers name, and settles litigation between the two companies over their common use of that name.

Robert W. Hatcher, President of A. A. Friedman Co., welcomed the change. "This decision gives us a tremendous opportunity to define and promote the Marks & Morgan image, while building on the strong traditions of our company."

"We plan to attract new customers and increase market share under the Marks & Morgan name, and we are committing the resources needed to make this happen," Hatcher said. The company recently added a director of marketing and a director of real estate to its executive staff, and has engaged a new advertising agency.

The Marks & Morgan name continues the heritage of a family which has been in the jewelry business since 1909. Marks is the maiden name of Betty Friedman, the late chairman of the firm. Her daughter, Susan Morgan, currently serves as the company's C. E. O. and chairman. Two

Interviews can take many forms

As a small business person your first reaction to the topic of interviewing is that I must be talking about employment. Well, that is just one type of interview. After all, each night as we watch the television or read this newspaper, we are seeing the results of a different type of interview.

Let's begin with the most common interview that a small business is likely to engage in. That is the employment interview. Most large companies and many small ones have a human relations person or persons to handle employment interviews. There is a strong tendency to allow the human resources department to handle everything, especially if it involves hourly personnel. This is a mistake in my opinion. You should use your HR personnel as a screening device and have them send the strongest candidates to be interviewed by the supervisor who needs the job filled. This way the person who understands the job need best will conduct the final interviews. The chance of hiring the best candidate is enhanced by this procedure.

Small Business

Another type of interview is the performance interview. You need to evaluate your people at least once a year. This is to ensure that the employees are working efficiently. In some cases this interview can be used as the basis for raises or bonuses. You should use this opportunity to build closer relationships with the people who work for you. It can be an invaluable tool to head off trouble.

Conducting performance evaluations is a management responsibility that can be a chore or a pleasure. The more you develop your skills, the more enjoyable this task will become.

A third type of interview is the disciplinary interview. This is definitely the least pleasant type of interview to conduct. It is not easy to look someone in the eye and say, "Your performance is lousy! Shape up or we will have to ship you out!"

Now I am not suggesting that you phrase the interview like that, but that is the underlying message. It is a negative performance interview. Many times we don't hold performance evaluations because we don't want to have to talk face to face with employees about poor performance.

You can prevent misunderstandings with carefully planned disciplinary interviews. In some cases, the employee is not aware of their shortcomings and are eager to correct the problems once they are made aware of them. You can save yourself a lot of turnover by dealing with problems in a forthright manner. No employee should be surprised by their termination if you have laid the correct groundwork in previous interviews.

The exit interview is the one type that almost no small businesses take advantage of. Yes, you have to listen to a lot of negative baggage, but you can many times get a refreshingly unrestrained view of your operations. You also tend to leave a better impression in the departing employees' mind.

Realtors' tips for house-hunting with kids

From Staff Reports

Let's face it, you wouldn't take small children on a full-day house-hunting excursion if you had any choice at all. Of course, parents include all family members when they're ready to narrow down the choices. But in the early stages of viewing countless properties, most parents would rather be on their own.

That's the ideal, of course, but it's not the real world. Realtors often work with relocating families or even local home buyers who don't have access to a babysitter and have young children in tow. To make the experience less stressful for all involved, savvy realtors offer these tips to parents who are house-hunting with your children.

● Put yourself in your child's shoes. Children's emotions run high during any type of life change, and are often the most intense when a move is involved. It's undoubtedly stressful for you, too. However, adults have a different perspective. A home of five years was probably a relatively small part of your life, but it will be the only home your 6-year-old child remembers. No matter how positive the move, children may be extremely emotional when asked to uproot. Sometimes they will blame you or a pet. Be as understanding as possible.

● Ask your realtor about baby sitters. If you've been unable to locate a baby sitter on your own, ask your realtor. He or she may have a contract with a local day care center or may be able to make arrangements for someone to watch your children in the office while you go house-hunting. At the very least, make sure you let your Realtor know in advance that your children will accompany you on the excursion.

● Explain the outing to your children. Let them know what to expect. Tell them that you're looking at potential new homes and that your realtor is an expert at helping families find just the right house. Explain that the realtor is there to help you find the best place to live.

● Set firm ground rules. Explain that you'll be going into many different homes filled with very nice things and even with other children's toys. Tell them that they can look, but cannot touch. Explain that the things they will see belong to someone else. Ask them to tell you if they see something they want to look at more closely.

● Ask for their opinions. Make sure your children know that their opinions matter to you. Have them draw pictures of what they would like most in a house. Tell them that they could be a big help to you should they choose to do this.

● Bring along some activities. Promote quiet, mess-free activity. For the car, bring small toys and maybe a few books. Keep the activities in a bag and give them to the child during one at a time.

● Involve the children. As you tour the house, discuss it with your children in language they'll understand. Help them create mental pictures of the future with statements like, "See the pool in the backyard? We can swim all day in the summer. You can invite some friends over for a pool party, or... I'll bet that backyard would be a great place for you to play baseball!" Encourage the child to pick out a room that might be his or hers. Ask, "Which room would you like the best? Where would you put your bed?" Also, ask your realtor about activities in the area that your child would enjoy, such as Little League, play grounds, and the library.

track perpetrators who hide efforts at a crime scene. He said they bring in the dogs who are given the command to find the scent. Once they lock on to the trail, the chase is on.

For this particular exercise, Officer James Holcomb, of the Longwood Police Department, played the bad guy. He was given a 15-minute head start, while Goodman's dog, Otto, remained in the car. Holcomb made five escape routes through a house and then jumped through the parking lot and adjacent field of Conklin, Porter and Holmes Engineering. Otto was given the command "K-9, Sit!"

Almost immediately, the four-year-old German Shepherd picked up the trail. Nose to the ground, nearly dragging his handler, the four-legged cop stalked his quarry. For the next couple blocks, the trail was obvious to the stealthy blood-scent. Then, for some reason, he lost the scent. Sniffing the air in a 90-degree radius, he whining as it's called, put his snout back on target. In 30 to 15 minutes, the expert tracker located the fugitive.

The dogs are trained to follow their handlers every command, said Goodman. Ordinarily, when a violent or potentially dangerous suspect is captured, the dogs are given the command to hold, that is, grab the suspect by a limb. In the event that a handler is overpowered by a perpetrator, the dogs would do anything necessary, including giving their owner life or saving their master.

with sarcasm that he uses for his guests. When his character, Dr. Ian Malcolm, is the unscrupulous, hairy little dinosaur, he makes a complete mess of the problems with the World Trade Center park. Malcolm finds a way to get the dinosaur to the park, but the dinosaur is not the only one who is not happy with the situation.

Goldblum's second movie, "The Usual Suspects," is a thriller that involves a kidnapping and a murder. He plays the role of a man who is accused of a crime and is trying to prove his innocence. The movie is a classic example of a thriller that is both entertaining and thought-provoking.

Spillberg was said to have been around the set making it possible for the director to have some idea of how to reconstruct the scene. Looking through the old film way, somebody is saying, "There's a dinosaur there," said Goldblum, "and somebody is making the movie." About the physical side of the job, Goldblum said, "It's a lot of work. In particular, it was memorably taxing. There were weeks of intense struggling and getting around."

The first movies that Goldblum remembers as a child sitting in the movie palace. The "Tootsie" in West Homestead and "The Untouchables" were then, he says, his favorite movies. Goldblum, naturally, has appeared in not only these dramatic thrillers, and last year's "The Usual Suspects," but also "The Untouchables" and "The Untouchables."

For lucky charm, Goldblum seems to use with the fact that he has started up "The Usual Suspects" in the past four years. It is very troubling for him, being a part of the movie, and he says that he will be waiting for some kind of live a little, said Goldblum.

He feels that there was a sense of liberation at the end of "The Usual Suspects," and that the saga has probably ended. But Goldblum said it Spillberg were to sign on for a third and there is a role for him, he would be more than happy to do another film.

clique over the years. But K-9 Officer Jim Goodman of the Casselberry Police Department will tell you that his dog, Otto, is much more than a friend. He's part of the family. Otto, a four-year-old German Shepherd, has been Goodman's partner for two years. In addition to working and training together, the two share a home with Goodman's wife and two children.

Spending that much time together, often in dangerous, high-stress conditions breeds a special closeness. Goodman said he trusts Otto completely and has no doubts about his partner's loyalty. "He would give his life for me without hesitation if it became necessary," said Goodman.

On at least one occasion, Otto saved the life of his human partner. About two years ago, a murder suspect rammed a police car in his attempt to escape. Goodman and Otto pursued the suspect until the man crashed his car and attempted to escape by swimming across a pond.

Goodman and Otto jumped in after the suspect and tried to capture him. Unfortunately, Goodman was wearing a lot of gear, including a bullet-proof vest which slowed him down considerably. Otto attacked the suspect in the water but the suspect took off the dog's leash and tried to drown him. Each time the man held Otto under water, the dog would break free, circle around and re-engage the fight. As Goodman struggled towards the bank to get stuck in the deep, gooey mud, Otto kept the suspect occupied until Deputy Sheriff Kevin Wilkinson arrived on the scene and made the arrest. Wilkinson was recently honored with the Medal of Merit for saving the lives of both Otto and Goodman. Goodman says he is reasonably sure the man would have killed him had Otto not been there to help.

In addition to being a great cop, Otto is also a wonderful family pet. At the end of the shift, when Otto and Goodman return home, Otto makes the rounds of the house. He checks the kids' rooms, then goes in and tries to wake up my wife by nudging her. He really loves my wife, said Goodman. He will roll over and try to get her to scratch his stomach. He's good with the kids, too. They have a trampoline out back and he loves to get up there and jump around with them.

It's not all fun and games though. Breaking in a new dog takes a lot of work. It takes about a year for the dogs and trainers to work smoothly together and develop the level of trust needed for this dangerous work. The dogs are purchased from breeders in Germany at a cost of between $1,600 and $3,000 each, when they are about a year old. According to Goodman, the high cost of the dogs is justified by the quality of the breeding. The money for many of the dogs, including Otto, comes from money seized from drug dealers, many of whom are caught with the help of the dogs.

Each K-9 officer is given the opportunity to try out a dog before it is assigned to him. Most don't make the cut, said Goodman. They have to have just the right temperament and respond well to their human counterpart. Once the dog is selected, the real work begins. Each city sets its own policy on how much the team must train. In Casselberry, eight hours per week is the minimum. That is in addition to the regular duties the pair must perform.

All the hard work pays off, said Goodman, in the success rate of K-9 units. Usually, the K-9 unit is called in after traditional investigative methods have failed or when a criminal has fled the scene of the crime and can't be found. "We get all of the hard core cases," said Goodman. "And in most of those cases we catch the suspect." The team has a 90% success rate when it comes to locating drugs hidden in cars. In the two years, the team has been together, they have made over 200 drug busts.

Many of the dealers arrested would have gone free with out the help of the dogs, said Goodman. A lot of times, we know there are drugs in the car but can't locate them with out the dogs. To illustrate the power of the dogs' sense of smell, he contrasted the way humans and dogs detect odors. "Take a bowl of stew," said Goodman, "a human smells stew. A dog smells beef, carrots, potatoes and onions."

Officers not assigned to K-9 units also recognize the benefits of having four-legged cops on the beat. Sergeant Darrell Presley of the Sanford Police Department was on the scene in the area being searched Thursday after a convenience store hold-up. He said the hardest thing for an officer to do is just to rope off an area and wait for the K-9 unit to arrive. He acknowledged, however, that sometimes that is the best way to find the perpetrator.

What happens to these four-legged heroes when they retire? Often they remain with their partner. According to Goodman, the handlers often become so attached that they opt to keep the dogs as family pets.

Loch Arbor residents angered by new housing project behind them

By VICKI DeBONNIE
Herald Staff Writer

Oaks, elms, magnolias and pines reach their ancient branches over the homes on Crystal Drive at the edge of Sanford.

Standing as defiantly as the residents of the 40-year-old community the trees shake as heavy equipment booms its way toward them, having already smashed some of their brethren to make way for hundreds of new houses.

The Mayfair Club development, several hundred homes squeezed in between the ninth hole of the historic Mayfair Golf Course and the Loch Arbor neighborhood, has been controversial from the start.

Things came to a head a few months ago when the developers began telling residents to move their fences back between as much as a foot and as little as two inches. Some of the fences had been in place for two decades or more. Residents were outraged and, for the most part, compliant.

They stood by, teary-eyed but still fighting with calls to Seminole County (where their homes are located) and to the City of Sanford (where the development is taking place), as the wooded area behind their homes was turned into a barren wasteland populated by ugly heavy equipment.

"We aren't getting satisfaction from anyone," said Chris Rehkop, a long-time resident of the area. "Everyone passes us on to the next one. No one wants to take any responsibility."

On Wednesday, nearly two dozen residents took refuge from the rain under a screened porch at one of the houses overlooking the piles of dirt that have replaced the trees behind the homes. The inclement weather had put a stop to the constant pounding of compactors, earthmovers and other vehicles that has become a way of life for them.

"It goes on all the time," said resident Terry Sisaleumsak. "It just shakes the whole house. I've found cracks on the exterior and now I'm finding them inside my home. I just discovered a new one in my bedroom this morning."

Sisaleumsak said she has been witness to earthquakes on several occasions. The rumblings from the construction equipment are similar, she said, "but this is of longer duration."

Complaints of cracked walls were common. Down the street a short time later, Barbara Barber pointed out a crack next to her fireplace through which one could see sunlight from inside the family room.

When the equipment is rumbling, she said, she has watched her glass collectables dance to the edge of the shelves and nearly teeter over the edge.

In the rain, with only the lighter machines doing their jobs, some of the items were jumping, if only slightly, on their perches.

Some of the residents have been fighting the development since it was first proposed about two and a half years ago. They are opposed not only to the number of homes crowding

The view in Loch Arbor used to be of trees, but The Mayfair Club project has leveled them. The area has been built up so new homes will sit above the old neighborhood causing existing residents to fear problems with flooding.

in behind them, but also to what they call poor planning on the part of the city and the county.

"I don't think they've looked at the impact of all this," Rehkop said. "What about the increased traffic this is going to bring? Has anyone looked at widening the road out there? Has anyone looked at the impact of all this building on our lakes?"

Country Club Road to the west of the development is currently being ripped up so that stormwater overflow from Mayfair Club can be pumped into the Crystal Lake chain.

"Don't these people remember what happened at Timacuan?" several residents asked, referring to the overflow of water into lakes in the luxury community which threatened the homes there during the rainy season and beyond several years ago.

In addition, a recent plan change has a row of houses being constructed at the property line, three feet above the level of the Loch Arbor homes.

"Water doesn't go uphill," Sisaleumsak said, pantomiming the water washing over houses at the foot of a hill and shaking her head.

The five retention ponds originally planned to service the development have been reduced to three. The Loch Arbor residents have been unable to find out why.

Residents don't plan on selling their houses and running. Some say there wouldn't be any chance of that, anyhow.

"Who's going to buy with this going on?" Sisaleumsak asked. "Homes in this area have traditionally sold quickly. Now they don't stand a chance."

The group plans to continue the fight. Just this week, several residents attended a meeting with the county planning division. They are making plans to speak up at a meeting of the county Planning and Zoning Board on June 17.

They are consulting with an attorney, Charles Choice, to see what sort of recompense they can expect for the damage already done to their homes.

And they want some sort of assurances they will have some protection against the flooding and other damage they expect will occur once Mayfair Club is finished and occupied.

"We just want some sort of assurances that our homes are safe," Barber said. "We want to protect our homes."

YMCA living down stigma of bad song

SANFORD — There are few things in life more annoying than the "YMCA" song by the Village People, especially when people who haven't gotten off their couch in years decide to make public fools of themselves when the tune comes on.

Don't blame the YMCA, blame the Village People and disco for the song.

The YMCA itself is doing a great job trying to live it down.

Seriously, if you aren't aware of what the Seminole County YMCA is offering, you're missing out on the best bargain in town.

Head down Lake Mary Boulevard, turn onto Longwood/Lake Mary Road and pass Lake Mary High School. Go another two blocks and the Y jumps out at you.

Looking for something to do with your summer?

Want to be in shape next time you go to a wedding reception and "YMCA" comes over the stereo system?

Looking to teach your children some good values while they spend the day at the pool and the night at the basketball court?

Head for the YMCA. It is located in Lake Mary but serves the entire county and underwent a major expansion last year that allows the facility to offer an exercise room, a full workout room (don't worry, you won't be overwhelmed by Mr. Universe-type behemoths), a large swimming pool and enough programs to keep anyone of any age busy all summer.

All that with the values taught by YMCA instructors adds up to a heckuva bargain at a heckuva price.

The Y recently announced its summer programs and the list of offerings is huge. Some of them include a host of field trips to such attractions as Water Mania, Moscow Circus and Roels Springs, camping programs and, for the sports minded, there is a Total Sports Camp.

With the sports camp, the cost is, as usual with the Y, cheap and affordable and the teacher-student ratio is small. Weekly themes include baseball, basketball, soccer, flag football, track and field, roller skating and road trips to see the stars in action.

Money is no object. Besides the affordability, scholarships are offered to anyone who needs financial assistance.

Kids aren't the only ones included. Remember that jump shot from years ago?

Flash it again during some of the Y's adult basketball leagues.

There's a lot more, but you get the idea. It's easy to sit around on a recliner and watch inane television all summer and spend the allowance on video games.

It's even easier to get the kids over to the Y. Take advantage of one of Seminole County's hidden treasures.

Work off that winter gut. Remember the jump shot of your youth.

Last second shot: It's easy to root for John Stockton and Karl Malone as the Jazz gets set to take on the Chicago Bulls in the NBA championship.

It would be easy to say that Jordan has lost a step. Pippen's foot isn't 100 percent. Dennis Rodman is good for at least one technical per game and Phil Jackson doesn't know if he's welcome on the Chicago bench.

All that is easy to say. It's easier to say Bulls in five.

Special to the Herald

SANFORD — With old glory flying high under a beautiful Sanford sky, and the tempting smell of fresh popped pop corn and grilled hot dogs drifting from the concession stand, hundreds of parents and fans watched with pride as players, coaches and umpires stood on the foul lines in preparation for the start of the Sanford Little League Minor Division Tournament at Ft. Meillon Park's Roy Hollar Field last Saturday.

After the playing of the National Anthem and the reciting of the Little League Pledge, the Mets and Devil Rays took the field for Game 1 of the double-elimination tournament.

The Mets took a quick 4-0 lead in the top of the first inning with a double by Charles Stuart being the big blow.

Eckstein continues to prove will is as important as inches

GAINESVILLE — Four years ago, David Eckstein walked onto the University of Florida baseball field for the first time.

He had graduated from Seminole High just a year before after batting .427 as a senior and leading the 'Noles to a state championship as a junior.

He was also a three-time all-Seminole County selection which made him one of the best unwanted players in the state.

It seemed college and pro scouts added it up and still came to 5-9, which is his height, so no one came calling.

So, the Seminole decided to become a Gator whether they wanted him or not.

Rick Eckstein

Four years later, Eckstein holds Florida's all-time hit record and ranks in the Gator top-10 in runs scored, total bases, stolen bases, assists, sacrifice bunts and even hit-by-pitches.

SHS choral department shines at nationals

By SUSAN WENNER
Herald Staff Writer

SANFORD — Local youth have done it again. They've made our city proud by bringing home the gold.

Under the direction of Bob Maguire, the Seminole High School Choral Department recently participated in the National Festival Events held in Nashville, Tenn. Vince Smith, assistant director to the Gospel Choir and J.B. Scott, assistant director to the Jazz Band, also attended.

According to information received, a total of 175 students and 21 chaperones filled four Mears touring buses to capacity. The tour director, Edith Dowell planned the tour which included a visit to the Grand Ol Opry, a day at Opryland USA, a 14-hour bus ride up and back and a full Saturday which featured all of the performing groups in competition.

The Gospel Choir placed first in the open class Gospel Choir Division with superior rating. The Jazz Band was honored with a first place in the open class Jazz Ensemble Division with a superior rating. Madrigals also placed first in the open class of Chamber Choir Division, while Destiny carried another first place in the open class Show Choir Division with a superior rating as well as noting a Grand National title in the overall show choir division again with a superior rating.

Pizazz placed fifth in the open class of the Show Choir Division. Fantasy placed fourth in the open class Show Choir division. Tori Carl was cited as Outstanding Jazz Soloist with a drum solo of "Tiger in San Pedro."

Final competitions for the Seminole High School Jazz Band took place in Jacksonville in the beginning of May. Three show choirs, Fantasy, Destiny and Pizazz, all also participated in state contests in Gainesville.

Destiny performed an original tune "Opening Night," Blood, Sweat and Tears tune "Spinning Wheels," Stevie Wonder's "Once in My Life," Barry Manilow's "Swing Street" and "W" by Bread. Fantasy performed a Broadway tune "Get Happy," a Dixieland original "Jazz Me Blues" and "Love Shack." Pizazz performed "Dancing in the Streets" by Marvin and the Mandellas, "I Will Survive" by Donna Summer and an original Latin song "Carnival."

The University of Florida campus was the site of the performance of the groups in the School of Music. Byron Doese and Liza Jones represented Seminole High as vocal soloists and Kyle Mattingly performed a piano solo.

Superior ratings were given to the Jazz Band, Fantasy, Destiny and Kyle Mattingly. Pizazz received an excellent rating.

The Seminole High School Choral Department was the feature choir at Disney's Very Merry Christmas Parade which was televised nationally. They also performed as feature choir at Disney's 25th Anniversary Celebration at the Bob Carr which was also nationally televised.

Among other Disney performances they were the feature choir for three nights at Disney's Candlelight Ceremony and performed nine Disney shows featuring "Circle of Life" or "When You Wish Upon a Star." They were highlighted on two professional convention shows through Allied Entertainment Network.

Bob Maguire commented, "We packed our suitcases with costumes. We said goodbye to our loved ones, loaded up four chamber buses and traveled with Seminole pride in our hearts across the states. Four days later we returned to the welcoming arms of our families and bringing back to our alma mater more national trophies than any other school."

He continued by saying, "The combined effort of the community administration, faculty, staff, parents and students themselves of Seminole High School is producing a generation of young adults who understand the value of hard work, team work and cooperating. I am so proud of these students for not only what they do but for who they are."

Maguire chuckled as he shared that his wife is in charge of the Dazzlers Dance Team at Seminole. "My trophies are bigger than hers," he said. "But, she's on national television. We have a lot of competition in our home. It's healthy competition. We're both real proud of the students though."

Destiny earned first place in the show choir division. Below: Jazz Band Jazz earned first place in the ensemble division.

Radiant butterflies session soars

By DEAN SMITH
Herald Sports Editor

Sanford's June McFadden ended her four-year journey through the grand line of the Grand Court of Florida, Order of the Amaranth last Saturday night with uncrowning ceremonies at the Orlando North Hilton in Ajamonte Springs.

McFadden was elected to the grand line in May of 1994 in a landslide vote.

"It was very important to David McFadden, her husband and a Past Grand Royal Patron, that I get elected in the Grand Court of Florida," McFadden said. "At the time I was not sure it was what I wanted to do, but looking back I now know that this was God and Dave's plan to give me a future because Dave knew he would not be here for me."

"I am so thankful to God for all he has done for me over the past four years. He has given me strength and he has helped me to see my rewards as we are a fraternal, social and charitable organization. The Amaranth motto is 'Those who serve Humanity, Serves God. Those who serve Amaranth serves both.'"

The Grand Court of Florida, Order of the Amaranth was held May 21-24. There were more than 500 members and friends from all over the United States and Canada in attendance.

The 49th annual session was called The Radiant Butterflies Session and opened on Wednesday night with Mike Hartman, Senior Warden of Sanford Lodge 62 of Free and Accepted Masons in Florida, singing "Somewhere over the Rainbow", in recognition of the year's emblems, rainbows and butterflies, as Honored Lady McFadden was escorted into the room.

After three days of business that included the election of next year's officers and a Fun Night

talent show and celebrity look-a-like contest that Sanford musicians Don and Jean Zimmermann played at, the Grand Court of Florida came to an end with an open installation on Saturday night.

McFadden was thrilled and honored to have Jan Ragan from Orlando sing for her, but the highlight of the evening was having her eldest son David, who has been in the U.S. Navy for 27 years, and his wife GeorgeAnn, be able to attend the closing as the two make the transfer from San Diego, Calif. to Washington, D.C., as well as daughter Colleen, an honored lady herself, and her husband Michael Hill and son Colin from Orlando, son Tommy and his wife Denise and daughter Krystle from Deltona, and daughter Sharon and her husband Dean Smith, who are both officers in the Grand Court of Florida.

Also on hand were friends Dean and Blythe Smith and Dick and Callie Beadles from Sanford. Nina and George Cook from New Jersey and several members of her home court, Seminole Court 59 in Casselberry.

McFadden's daughter, Sharon, capped her mother's year by presenting her with her Past Royal Matron's pin and saying, "The Angel, the symbol for newly elected Grand Royal Matron Sylvia Saunders from Orlando, had set the Radiant Butterfly (June) free."

"There are no words that can say enough for all the love and support I have received these past four years," McFadden said. "The climax to it all was being able to donate the $55,000 we raised this past year to the Amaranth Diabetes Research Foundation."

Overall the Order of the Amaranth, Incorporated is hoping to raise over $450,000 worldwide to help in the search for a cure for diabetes. Since 1979 the OaFA has raised over $2.3 million in the fight against this disease and last year received the Charles H. Best Service Award presented by the American Diabetes Association for donating more money than any other organization.

Junior Beta Club grants wish

If you had a wish, what would it be? For Edward Fernandez, a 5-year-old diagnosed with leukemia, his wish was for a Nintendo 64 for himself and a Barbie doll for his sister.

Thanks to the Junior Beta Club at Greenwood Lakes Middle School, Edward is going to get his wish. The club held garage sales and bake sales throughout the year to raise money for the Children's Wish Foundation. The club worked with their advisor, Julius Francis and with Children's Wish coordinator, Rhonda Ryan to find a child who's wish they could fulfill.

Rhonda and Joel Jones, the executive director of the Children's Wish Foundation, brought Edward and his parents to meet the Junior Beta Club. Dawn Harrop, the Junior Beta Club committee chairperson, then presented Edward with a check for $1000 for a shopping spree. All the committee members got the chance to meet Edward. The committee members were Dawn Har-rop, Allie Herrera, Rosemary Hall, Jenny Dennis, Ben Mosier, Deena Saltman, Tracy Harrop, Patricia James, Tiffany Lima, John Martino, Heather Wingfield, Kristina Yontz, Christine Bowser, Sean Myers, Lisa Feenburg and Parvathy Pillai.

This is the third year that the Junior Beta Club has fulfilled a wish. In addition to offering wish fulfillment, the club members work at Wish events, such as Wish Camp and Flight to Santa Land throughout the year. The club intends to keep up their work with the Wish Foundation. Next year, Dawn's sister Tracy will take her place as committee chair.

LAKE MARY STUDENT COUNCIL COLLECTS BOOKS FOR NEEDY

The Lake Mary Student Council decided they wanted to do something to help children in need. Something that would be helpful and educational at the same time. What better way than a book drive? The council began their book drive during the Scholastic Book Fair. Book Fair attendees were asked to buy a book for the drive.

Then the classroom representatives got involved. They spread the word through all the classrooms. Bring in your used books that you've outgrown.

The class that collects the most books would get a popcorn party. Boxes were put in every classroom and the books started coming in. When the book drive ended after two weeks, the student council had collected 3,569 books. There were books from every age level, from pre-kindergarten picture books to adult westerns. The adult books will be taken to senior living quarters and the children's books will be donated to needy children.

Woman is ready to revolt against autocratic in-laws

DEAR ABBY: My in-laws are making my life miserable. They still believe that the man is the head of the household and that women should be subservient at all times. My husband and I are both college graduates with successful careers, but they continue to treat us like children. They order us to do something, then pout when we don't obey. They stopped speaking to us for weeks when we decided to buy a modest home against their wishes (even though we could easily afford it). They are convinced that we are unable to manage our own finances and household (especially me). I've actually been ordered to quit my job and stay home to take care of my husband (we don't have any kids yet). Luckily, my husband agrees that this is my decision to make, not theirs.

ADVICE ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I was suddenly awakened to the fact that nowhere else did I see or hear of George Washington on Feb. 22, except for reading the heading of your column, "Happy Birthday, George." It made me stop and think about what has happened to our country when we overlook respectful recognition in exchange for our three-day holiday weekend. It's a sad day for us when we fail to even mention the birthday of the father of our country. Abby, your "Happy Birthday, George" revived my proud-to-be-an-American spirit, so I hung my American flag out on the balcony of my apartment for all to see. Thank you, Abby, for reminding me and many others, I hope, of our precious American heritage. JACK R. ROBINSON, KENNEWICK, WASH.

We have tried discussing this rationally as adults, but they start yelling or lecturing. They have now decided they want us to give them control of our finances if anything should happen to my husband because they believe a man should be in control. They also want full custody of our children we might have. Up until now, I've bitten my tongue, but I'm ready to explode. I don't want to alienate my in-laws by getting into a screaming match, but I've reached the end of my rope. How should I handle this? STEAMING IN DALLAS

DEAR TRIPLY BLESSED: My congratulations to your wife. Her response is inspired.

DEAR ABBY: I attended a bridal tea this weekend and saw something I had never seen before. I wonder, have things changed this much?

As the guests arrived, their gifts were taken from them and carried over to a display area where they were opened by assigned people and put on display, without the future bride seeing the gift at all until it was put on display. Why would people go to the trouble of wrapping a gift with beautiful paper and ribbons on it if the bride is never to see it? I was appalled and thought this was in very poor taste. Am I wrong, or is it proper? CONFUSED

DEAR JACK ROBINSON: Thank you for your thank-you. Perhaps some formerly forgetful folks will remember to mark their calendars at the beginning of 1996 that on Feb. 13 we honor Abraham Lincoln and on the 22nd we honor George — and President's Day honors them both. (Problems? Write to Dear Abby. For a personal, unpublished reply, send a self-addressed, stamped envelope to Dear Abby, P.O. Box 68440, Los Angeles, Calif. 90068. All correspondence is confidential.)

DEAR STEAMING: Your in-laws' values are firmly rooted in another century. Don't allow them to intimidate you or draw you into an argument. Assuming that you and your husband have already prepared a legal document that would protect each other and any children in case of a tragedy, you are under no obligation to discuss it or disclose its contents to anyone.

DEAR CONFUSED: I have never heard of this practice at traditional bridal showers. However, if the bride's family is from another culture, that might account for it. Without knowing more of the facts I cannot make a judgment.

DEAR ABBY: I read with interest your column about the mother who gets all kinds of comments about the number of children she has. She asked if she should respond to these often rude remarks. My wife and I are blessed with triplets. We too get many comments when we are out in public — some nice and some seemingly rude. We feel enormously fortunate to have three healthy children, and we soon learned that our attitude makes all the difference in the world. We ignore some remarks, but we take others as an opportunity to tell people how blessed we are. My favorite response when someone sees our triplets and says, "I'm glad it's you and not me," is one my wife came up with. She replies, "I'm also glad it's me and not you!" TRIPLY BLESSED IN ALABAMA

Your Birthday

Sunday, June 1, 1997

A strengthening of financial trends is indicated for the year ahead; you should be able to improve your lifestyle. However, as your earnings increase, practice prudence, not extravagance.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Curiosity seekers should be barred from your confidential affairs today. This becomes even more vital with issues that relate to your finances or career. Gemini, treat yourself to a birthday gift. Send for your Astro-Graph predictions for the year ahead by mailing $2 and SASE to Astro-Graph, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 1758, Murray Hill Station, New York, NY 10158. Be sure to state your zodiac sign.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Do not make any commitments today unless you're absolutely certain you can follow through with them. Inconsistency could tarnish your image.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) You can accomplish a great deal today if you keep your mind focused on the task at hand. You will invite complications, though, if you daydream at work.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Today will be more enjoyable for you if you avoid members of the opposite gender who pretend to be something other than what they, really are.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Material goals are reachable today, if you don't get careless with your financial affairs. Give serious matters the attention they deserve.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Try to get difficult assignments completed as early as possible today. You might have to deal with some distractions as the day continues.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Strive to be consistent in the management of your finances today, or what you gain with one hand, you may lose out the window with the other.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) The thing that could hold you back today is your disbelief in yourself and your abilities. See yourself as the victor, not the fall guy.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) Give expression to your ambitious urges today if not, you might later collect guilt for the things you could've done but didn't do.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Try to draw a fine line today between business and pleasure. Deals you attempt to promote in carnival surroundings could fizzle out.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Ambitious objectives can be fulfilled today, provided that you don't ease up when victory is in sight. Push for the type of closure you desire.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) You are an honest person whose statements can be believed. However, today you might deal closely with someone who doesn't abide by your standards.

WIN AT BRIDGE

Why did that happen?

By Phillip Alder

BRIDGE

PHILLIP ALDER

The weather was really warming up. Even the Senior Life Master, who was in his chair near the bar, had taken off his jacket. As he sipped a Californian sauvignon blanc, a young woman came over.

"Don't you play anymore?" she asked. "No, I can't take the stress. Sit down and I will tell you about the deal that was the beginning of my end."

The SLM wrote today's North and South hands on the back of a coaster. Many years ago (began the SLM), I was partnering a woman nearly as pretty as you. Her name was Hortensia Parslow-Parslow. I was hoping she might become my partner in life and bridge. After that auction, Hortensia was the declarer in four spades. How would you have planned the play? West led the diamond two. After giving the woman a few moments to consider, the SLM continued.

As you can see, you have only one side-suit loser; the club ace. So, you can afford two trump losers. And there is a safety play. You must start by leading low toward dummy's 10. However, Hortensia thought she saw an easy overtrick in her future. She started with the spade ace and could no longer make the contract.

"Were you playing in a pairs event?" asked the woman. "No, we weren't. It was a set game of rubber bridge. And I admit that I became irritated. Not only did I lose my patience, but I also lost Hortensia and my thirst for bridge."
