WEDNESDAY, MAY 2, 1951
TODAY'S BIBLE VERSE
Old for God but new to us.

Former Mayor O'Dwyer of New York City has contributed to the growth of organized crime in this city, says the Kefauver report.

According to Senator Douglas of Illinois, it cost $5,900 to maintain an American soldier for a year in 1948, only $4,450 to maintain a Marine.

The British government, which has nationalized just about everything in Britain, protests to the Iranian government over the nationalization of Iranian oil.

America may be threatened by enemies abroad and from within. Americans are burning up the highways with gasoline which soon may become too scarce.

There is no sense in legalizing other forms of gambling just because in certain states pari mutuels have been legalized at dog and horse tracks.

Four years ago, General Wedemeyer, then U. S. commander in China, recommended to President Truman that the United States government provide as early as practicable moral, advisor, and material support to China and South Korea in order to contribute to the early establishment of peace in the world in consonance with the enunciated principles of the United Nations.

The Kefauver committee recommends 22 specific new laws dealing with the suppression of crime in this country.

Freedom From Fear

A knock on the door in the middle of the night can sound like thunder. It can be loud enough to hurt a man's ears and break his heart, if he lives in a police state.

Vogeler, American businessman, heard the knock on the door in the still of night; he was taken to prison and accused of many crimes against the Hungarian state.

Vogeler has now warned his countrymen that what happened to him can happen to anyone. He said that a man needs the right to say what he thinks and go where he likes without the fear of being taken from his home during the night to face accusations before policemen and officials.

We should heed the warning that Vogeler gives us. We need to guard against the Communists whose philosophy imprisoned Vogeler. We must also be sure that in guarding ourselves we do not destroy the freedom we would defend.

The words of Vogeler sum it up well: "You never realize what freedom means until you lose it."

Forest Fire Danger

It is never too early to become conscious of the danger of forest fires. The point is emphasized by an announcement by Oscar L. Chapman, Secretary of the Interior, that more than 2,200,000 acres of federal land were burned out by forest fires last year.

Damage done by forest fires is varied and great in extent. Trees valuable from an industrial standpoint burn and a loss of money results. Wild life which inhabits the woods is killed or driven to find safety elsewhere.

Most forest fires are the result of carelessness. Observing ordinary common sense when in the woods or passing by them will help to save the forest riches of the nation.

Be sure the cigarette is dead, absolutely dead, with no possibility of smoldering and coming to life later. Be sure the camp fire is entirely out before you leave it.

Strength At Home

Do we, as a nation, incline to turn too much to the Old World, with its alien philosophy, in the effort to solve our problems? A New York religious leader in a recent speech claims that we do.

"We need a rediscovery, a renewed understanding of the tried and true principles of Americanism. It would be tragic if we exhausted ourselves in fruitless searches all over the world for an effective formula of peace when the secret can be found in the untuned pages of our history."

It is true that we sometimes seem unaware of our own powers and resources, allowing ourselves to be governed by fear and by distrust of our established institutions.

General Is Described As Lonely, Fenced In From Modern Armies

NEW YORK (AP)—It is always lonelier on a mountain peak than in a valley.

It's that way with military life, too. The generals are lonelier than the lieutenants. Sometimes they are among the loneliest of all men, particularly in combat zones.

To the ordinary private, who has so many bosses he sometimes feels like a hare surrounded by a high picket fence, the life of a general looks like one long dream of luxuriant liberty.

"Nobody can tell the general what to do," the low man on the army totem pole tells himself enviously. "He can go where he wants and do what he wants to. He can bunk down when he wants to and get up when he wants to. He don't have to walk in the mud—he can fly over it in his own plane."

"He can get what he wants to eat and all the liquor he wants to drink. He sleeps between sheets. He don't have to polish his own boots. He's got a high-class baby to do all his dog-robbing errands, too. Man, how do they ever get jobs like that?"

And, of course, the average private envies the privilege which legend accords to most generals—the privilege of dying in bed instead of upon the battlefield.

The general, however, sees his own life in no such light. He feels he is hedged about by almost as many rules as the private, and often he rather yearns to have the private's sense of freedom when duties are done.

For there is no such thing as complete freedom for a general. He is bound by a host of regulations and restrictions. He is often the only person who can really understand...

THE NATION TODAY

By JAMES MARLOW

WASHINGTON, May 2—(AP)—From now on the Truman-MacArthur dispute will be a little less than wide open. The Senate inquiry into the case, starting Thursday, will be held behind closed doors.

The two big senate committees conducting the inquiry, armed services and foreign relations, will call the chief characters in the drama behind those doors to state their case.

They will include General MacArthur, Secretary of Defense Marshall, Secretary of State Acheson, the Joint Chiefs of Staff and their chairman, General Omar N. Bradley, and anyone else the committee wants to hear.

After each hearing most of what was said in private will be made public in question and answer form. But some of the questions and answers will be scratched out of the copies made public.

In the give-and-take of public hearings information of the most secret nature might be blurted out, perhaps providing the Russians with more knowledge than they could have obtained from a battalion of spies in 10 years.

At least that might happen. Yesterday the senators on the two committees had to decide between public and private hearings.

Whether this procedure of telling the public less than everything will satisfy the public that it has learned the whole story remains to be seen. But certainly this method also makes possible very damaging "leaks."

Leaks are not new in this city where so many people have notoriously been unable to keep their mouths shut. And since some testimony will be withheld, a "leak" can distort the importance of what has been withheld.

Further, not all leaks come out on the day when an event occurred or a word was spoken. What is said today might be leaked next month or six months from now, preceded by waves of rumors on what was really said.

In short, less than fully open hearings may in the end create more unrest than the inquiry was intended to cure. But the Senators had to make a choice, keeping national security in mind, and they made it.

It was only a little more than a month ago that private testimony by another distinguished military man, General Eisenhower, was leaked here in Washington. He talked privately to the same two committees.

That was on Feb. 1, after he had returned from a quick survey of Europe's military needs and made a public report to both Houses of Congress, sitting in the congressional library. He then talked to the committees.

On Mar. 10 the leak came on some of what he had said behind closed doors to the senators. For instance, he said use of the atomic bomb against the Russians would depend on whether its military value outweighed its moral disadvantages.

Also, the leak said, he thought 12 American divisions, with sufficient air and sea support, could hold the Breton peninsula of France against any Russian attack. The Russians probably appreciated the formation.

For weeks the committee had been preparing this report on its sensational investigations of a year. Its report, which will include recommendations on how to throttle crime, was to be published today.

The failure of secrets to remain secrets in the senate was pretty well illustrated in the past few days in the case of the Kefauver crime committee's reports.

But last week, before the report was finished, various versions of what the report would say leaked all over Washington.

TIGHT LITTLE ISLAND

My New York

By MEL HEIMER

EN ROUTE TO ENGLAND—The twilight begins to come down, and you remember the first time you crossed the Atlantic; by the time you were an hour out of Paris, with the rain and fog of Europe under you and the sudden realization that you were 30,000 feet in the air, you got awfully nervous.

Certainly you are up to your ears in luxury. The BOAC people are flying you this time, on what they describe as their new Monarch service. As an effete American, used to tea in your drinks and a shoe shine stand on every corner, you might describe it better as American-type service.

When the time comes for dinner, you work your way leisurely through soup, salmon, chicken, frozen strawberries, a banana and a tumbler full of Mumm's. The magnum from which the steward pours is swathed in a towel, so you can't tell the year—providing you knew anything about vintage, which you don't—but the first sip lets you know it is somewhat removed from hemlock.

The big plane climbs up over the weather and God alone knows what is going on in the way of wind, rain or monsoon, under the clouds of overcast beneath you. Inside the vehicle, Caledonia by name, life goes on peacefully.

An Englishwoman behind you complains mildly to an American sitting next to her that central heating in New York drove her out of her mind. Up front, two small boys discover, as Edison once did, what fun it is to produce light by snapping a button.

A man across the aisle from you, who talks like Rex Harrison but looks a bit like Adolf Hitler, opens a pocket book of Rogue Male, and you remember the excellent movie they made of it. Man Hunt, they called it, wasn't it?

THE BARRINGTONS' BULLETIN IS PASSED OVERHEAD and back to you by the man in front, and you read in Captain Percy's cramped, typically British handwriting, that we are over Nantucket rounding up of another Captain Percy, the astute skipper of the party's sleep Virginia, out of Hymnia) and doing 311 miles per hour, 311,000.

It is but below zero outside and we are at 15,000 feet, with favorably west winds. It looks like London in 11 hours, he notes, and the devil with the step at Hudson this time. "The weather in London is good," Captain Percy notes. Then, he adds wryly: "Well, at least it's not raining."

A bit later you have a talk with the captain, a big and stolid man who has flown more than 30 years and made this crossing around 300 times, and you spell him with your ignorance of things mechanical. You are a man who drives an automobile with twin carburetors and what twin carburetors are or do, the captain excuses himself politely when you smile foolishly and announce you don't have any idea of and returns to the cloisters of his cockpit.

THE CAPTAIN MAKES UP YOUR SEAT EARLY, around 9 or so, and you figure that this will be the night you get that good evening of sleep. You climb up, read a few pages of Eric Ambler's Judgment on Deitchau, and then slip off to sleep.

However, your figuring is off. The sleep is good—but somewhere in the night, they have sneaked up and sandbagged you out of five hours. It is almost no time before a stream of sunlight pours its way through the little hatch port's. You yawn, get up, muck up in the gentlemen's stall for a rinse and a quick workout with your electric shaver, and then you settle back for breakfast and the landing.

The captain was dead right. Sunlight stretches across the little red rooftop of suburban London, with only here and there a cotton puff of a cloud. Then the big Strato-cruiser levels out for that incredibly long last run, the wheels touch down on the runway at—oh, 150 miles an hour?—the reversible-pitch propellers do their braking job well, and you have arrived.

Nick Nichols, BOAC man, pokes his hand at you in welcome. "Good trip?" he asks amiably. "Good show? Bit of a good show?" There is no doubt where you are.

HOLLYWOOD

HOLLYWOOD, May 2—(AP)—Senator Kefauver has made some changes here, to "The Racket."
I'm not speaking in terms of real-life crime and corruption. But the crime-investigating senator from Tennessee has made Hollywood alter its thinking about gangster pictures.
Top-rank producer Edmund Granger disclosed this to me. Said he: "The Kefauver hearings had a tremendous impact on the public. People were able to see first-hand what gangsters really look like and how they operate. Now you can't fool them with anything phony."
Initially, the hearings hurt the picture business, because people stayed at home and watched their TV sets instead of going to the movies. But I think the investigations will help us in the long run. The reason is that people are now more aware of and concerned about gambling and gangsterism."
Granger said the hearings have completely outmoded the old style of the movie gangster, which was already on the decline. The movies used to portray criminals as tough-talking mugs. The Kefauver hearings showed many of them to be smooth characters who acted more like businessmen than gangsters.
Edward G. Robinson, the "Little Caesar" who was one of the first and most successful screen gangsters, tried one of his old-style characterizations in "Key Largo." Unfortunately, he conveyed more humor than menace. James Cagney, the famed "Public Enemy" of the early thirties, has done a couple of gangster roles recently, but they are "wearing pretty thin."
"We can't get away with that," said Granger.

Mr. and Mrs. John Alden Brown and two granddaughters, Lenora and Martha Mitchell of Daytona Beach, spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. F. R. Mitchell at their home on East Fourth Street.
sort of thing any more," Granger declared.
The Kefauver hearings proved a break for the producer, who was preparing a new version of the old play, "The Racket" (in which, coincidentally, Edward G. Robinson made a Broadway hit).
"I was having trouble with the Johnston Office," said Granger, referring to the industry's censor, "The play concerned the connection between the criminal element and politics. The office told me that the subject might be offensive, since corruption is limited to only a few localities."
"I tried to tell them that it was widespread. Then the Kefauver hearings came along and showed the connection of crime and politics in many areas. After that, I didn't have any trouble with the Johnston Office."
Granger covered the Kefauver hearings in Los Angeles and picked up pointers for his film.
"I also had a long talk with Senator Kefauver," he added. "I wanted him to play a role in the picture, but he didn't have enough time. I am now trying to get him to deliver a forward to the picture."
"The Racket" will not portray the Kefauver hearings, but will show a state crime commission. Along the lines of the one that has functioned in California, Granger has managed a switch of his usual tough role, Robert

Claire Rita Durand Weds E. A. Kendall

Miss Claire Rita Durand, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Schwartz Durand, began the bride of Eugene A. Kendall, son of Mr. and Mrs. Albin Kendall, in a beautiful ceremony in the All Souls' Catholic Church Tuesday evening.

The altars were decorated with assorted white flowers and the altar rail held bouquets of white Easter lilies, larkspurs and burning white tapers. Father Anthony McGowan officiated during the ceremony. Roger and Ronald Durand brothers of the bride, served as altar boys. Mrs. F. K. Roumillat, organist, played the traditional wedding marches and during the ceremony played "O Perfect Love."
The bride, given in marriage by her father, was lovely in her ball-length gown of a lace fitted bodice with a scooped neckline and net yoke and a full skirt of net. She wore a crown of bridal net and orange blossoms and a three-strand pearl necklace, a gift of the groom. She carried a bouquet of a white orchid, carnations and gardenias.
Miss Connie Durand served as maid of honor for her sister and wore an aqua organza dress over peach taffeta and a crown of net with carnations. Also attending the bride was Miss Rosemary Cullum wearing a grey organza dress over peach taffeta identical to the maid of honor. Both attendants wore a single strand of pearls, a gift of the bride and carried a bouquet of rosebuds, iris and daisies.

Serving Mr. Kendall as best man was Carl Van Herbold, Ushers were Robert Durand, brother of the bride, and John Adams. Following the ceremony the couple left for a short wedding trip.
