Demo Delegate: 'Well-Run' Parley

By DONNA ESTES
Herald Staff Writer

There were some grumblings by delegates at the Democratic mini-convention in Memphis over the weekend that it was being controlled or orchestrated and a few South Florida delegates were not pleased with the way party chairman John White handled the gathering.

But Kathleen Reynolds of Sanford, an alternate delegate from large-flush Florida, said today in the workshop she attended she didn't see either orchestration or control.

"The people certainly had the right to present their views. In the workshop on the national health insurance program, the people on the platform took up so much time, everyone in the audience did not have time to ask all their questions or make all their statements."

"We were told, however, we could write to John White and he would put our statements in the record annals. Many people were accommodated during the question-and-answer portion and didn't seem unhappy when questions and statements were cut off. In other workshops we had elections for those who were going to serve on the platform committee for the 1980 convention.

"I thought the convention was well-run myself and I learned a lot about many matters including the problems of older citizens," said Mrs. Reynolds, active in the local Democratic Party for the past 10 years and currently state commissionership as well as Seminole County committee woman, and president of the Democratic Women's Club of Seminole County.

Among those Florida delegates who have complained was Mrs. Nancy Abraham of Miami who announced she has sent a letter to White charging he "bastardized the Democratic process to its ultimate limits."

Others from the Florida delegation complained that the convention produced much praise for the Carter administration but little debate on controversial issues such as abortion and gay rights.

"Delegates to get resolutions on various matters on the floor were circulating throughout the convention," said Mrs. Reynolds. "It is possible circumstances could not get sufficient signatures to get some controversial issues on the floor because the majority did not wish to bring those issues to the floor for debate."

Mrs. Reynolds pointed to a letter put out by the Democratic National Committee (DNC) which outlined procedures for getting amendments to the temporary rules of the

The sign on the door says "Network." Once inside, you hear the familiar jargon of a television studio. "Are you ready? Lights, camera, action," the director says as he stands poised beside the camera staring at the monitor.

This scene is not taking place at a large television station but in the confines of a classroom at Taungs Middle School in south Seminole County.

away a person is punching the necessary data into a computer and waiting an hour to be punched up on the printout screen.

This scene is not taking place in a computer room, but in a classroom at South Seminole Middle School in Chuluota. In both instances, the participants are students in the Seminole County school district's gifted student program.

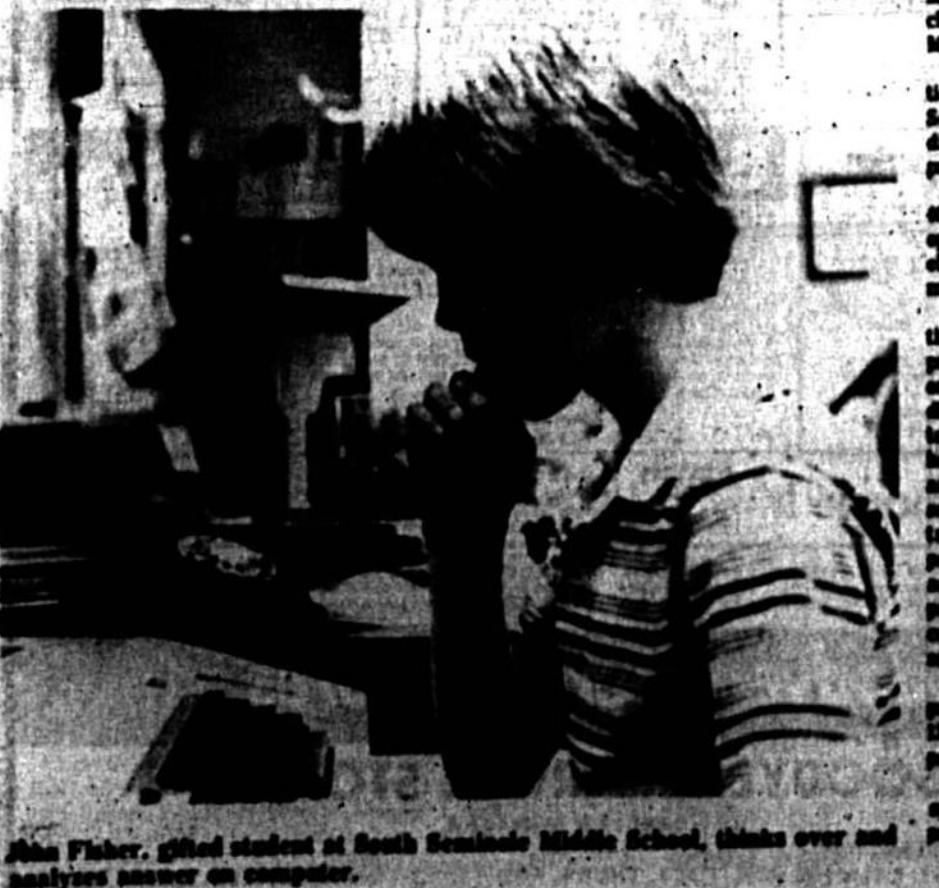

The program which has about 60 students, is currently in operation at one high school, 15 elementary schools and four middle schools.

If a student is found to meet the criteria for the gifted program but does not live near one of these schools, the school district does permit the student to enroll in a school which does have a gifted student program and if a boy doesn't go to that school the district will pay the transportation costs of the pupil to take the student, according to Mary Whipple, program director for exceptional education for the school district.

To be admitted to the program a student must have a 90.0% or higher and have a parent consent.

Although the gifted student spends one full day in the program, he is still required to

Sanford Commission Cool On Police Panel Request

By TOM GORDANO
Herald Managing Editor

Unless the Sanford City Commission can be convinced there are specific management problems with the city police department, a request to establish a panel to study the department will be tabled at its 7:30 meeting tonight.

That was the consensus of commissioners, raised this morning how they would treat the request by David Parr, one three commission candidate, whom agenda items came up for discussion.

Parr has said he is making the panel to establish because of comments made to him by the general public during his recent campaign.

However, Parr also confirmed the public comments dealt with problems said to exist at the police department in the past and looked into by four separate agencies, all of which concluded allegations of major departmental problems could not be substantiated.

Parr iterated his position and said he will approach the commission tonight not with specific charges but to report on a mood, a general public climate in Sanford that something is wrong at the police department.

Parr continued: "I intend to make suggestions to the commission which could help reverse that mood or correct it."

As to the commission tabling his request until after the election, Parr noted: "If the commission takes that position, that's fine."

"If they want to table it, that's their prerogative, but I don't think that would be wise.... I think the public wants to see some positive action."

"The police department has been torn apart enough, as far as I'm concerned, and enough is enough. At far as the last minute for the election, I've been tabling it, but I prefer killing it off altogether," said Commissioner Eddie Keith.

Keith noted he has had many citizens in Sanford contact him from time to time with what the general public often feel police should be handling, but may be unable to.

"I've had people contact me and tell me about a drunk in the area or something similar, and Lebra Stanley and Fred Sipila won the title "Mr. and Miss Seminole High School (SHS)" in the first annual pageant sponsored by the junior class in the school auditorium. Thirty seniors in competition were judged Saturday night on academics and minors, contributions to school and community, articulation, self-assurance and talent. Sipila also won the talent trophy for his modern jazz dance interpretation. Runners-up were Amy Daus and Mike Agree. The Senior Holiday Dance followed at Saigard Garden Center.

'Gifted'

The equipment is used to film the material and do the homework for these regular classes he has missed that day spent in the gifted class.

As opposed to a regular classroom each child in the gifted program has an individual instructional plan which details the student's week and study points and shows the teacher where work needs to done.

"What we try to do is use their strengths to strengthen their weaknesses," said Peggy Thomson, the Taggart gifted class teacher.

To accomplish this, her students use video tape equipment.

"The teacher of gifted students the video tapes give a lot of insight into what the student is thinking and a look at different personality characteristics," she said.

For students like Kim Johnson, working with the video equipment is a perfect example of how much better it is than the regular classroom.

"We learn to use and develop abilities that we might not be able to use in other classes," he said, noting that using the equipment teaches the class about working together and getting along with fellow classmates.

Jeff Miller's gifted class is useful in helping to solve problems.

"For instance we find that a teacher in a regular class is often mean toward us but because the class is so big we don't feel like we can say anything. But when we can come into this (gifted) class, talk to the teacher may point out something I am doing to make the other teacher mad or she may just go and ask that teacher what I'm doing."

If anyone thinks a problem could arise for the gifted child to get along with a regular student, that is not the case.

However, the students at Taggart said they found no such problem with their friends.

For John Fisher, 15, working on the computer gives him a chance to "use my mind in a way that you do not get in the regular classroom."

"Sometimes I will learn the information in the regular class quickly and then I get bored. But in this class I am constantly being offered creative activities so I can't get bored," he said. "The computer is interesting to feed information into the computer, then make up a problem and then see how the computer arrives at the answer."

Fish's fellow classmate Robbie Miller, 11, the opportunity to be creative is what also appeals to him.

One example of this creativity is dismantling different objects and then putting them back together again.

A student may be getting the class but may understand the material and is just not interested," Ms. Thompson said.

On the other hand, a student could be getting straight A's but his/her parents may feel he is falling fine in class and doesn't need to be in a gifted class."

'They Had Their Arms Around Each Other...'

MIAMI (UPI) — Two young brothers, ages 3 and 4, lie side in their two-family home, die in each other's arms while sleeping, according to touching news reports by neighbors in morn to them.

The bodies of Gerald Alexander, 3, and Nixon, 4, were found together in the rear living room of the two-family home.

"They had their arms around each other," said Dr. Ronald Wright, medical examiner.

The fire began just after 8 p.m. Sunday, about an hour after the children's mother, Immaculate Alexander, and a friend, Andre Gelin, left the house to laundry. The two boys' bodies were found in a kitchen neighborhood in Miami.

Neighbors saw the smoke and heard the youngsters screaming.

Fire officials said they were not certain what caused the blaze.

The Matter Of Doctor Advertising

The American Medical Association has leaped to the barricades to fight a threatened order by the Federal Trade Commission which would allow doctors to advertise.

This should surprise no one. The AMA has attacked advertising by doctors as unethical for years, and mounted a vigorous defense against the complaint before the FTC that it stands amounted to "restraint of trade."

It is also easy to understand the argument the AMA has always made — that advertising would work ultimately against the public interest, leading to compromises in the quality of medical treatment as doctors felt the pressure of competition in the setting of their fees.

Advertising, in this view, would encourage medical quackery and drag down the standards of the whole profession.

Yet the FTC's administrative judge, Ernest Barnes, has made a point that doctors cannot easily dismiss.

While the advertising ban may serve a useful purpose in one sense, it also "has served to deprive consumers of the free flow of information about the availability of health care services."

In other words, it is difficult for a patient to know whether a doctor's fees are justifiable or not.

It would be a mistake, however, to assume that lifting the restraint on advertising would solve the problem of high medical costs.

Part of the problem is the advent of health insurance plans which cover much of a patient's medical bill and discourage "shopping" for doctors or hospitals that might charge less.

Since medical bills reflect the extent of treatment a patient demands or expects, and not just what a doctor chooses to charge, the public has more than a little responsibility toward control of inflation in health care costs.

Nevertheless, the decision by the FTC judge, which now must be approved or rejected by the commission itself, is bringing a fateful issue for medicine to a head.

Even without an FTC ruling, AMA policies against advertising are coming into question under new interpretations of the First Amendment by the courts.

The U.S. Supreme Court ruled last year that it was unconstitutional for a bar association to limit its membership to lawyers who agreed not to advertise.

The AMA itself has relaxed its ethical code to permit a limited form of advertising by its members.

The FTC judge thinks the code can be relaxed considerably more without compromising ethical standards to the point that the public interest would be harmed.

The ethics of individual doctors would remain subject to the policing powers of licensing boards in the various states.

One thing is certain. People faced with doctor bills extraordinarily high by yesterday's standards, and with rising health insurance premiums, would welcome a sign that the medical profession is willing to open the door a little wider to the pressure of competition within its own ranks.

From a public relations standpoint, an adamant stand by the AMA against advertising will not go over too well in the waiting room.

Downtown Centers Salvation

WASHINGTON (NEA) — One brave soul has mastered the courage to tell the awful truth about the mega-structures currently being touted as the salvation of the decaying downtown cores of the nation's major cities.

Offering a candid, critical appraisal of those oversized complexes is a daunting undertaking because business and civic leaders in cities from coast to coast have staked both their reputations and their fortunes on the success of the urban behemoths.

In Detroit, the Renaissance Center is advertised as the cornerstone of local efforts to revive a depressed central city. In Houston, a similar commercial complex is known as the Houston Center.

In Los Angeles, another mammoth development is supposed to provide the downtown area with vitality matching that of Beverly Hills, Westwood and other communities on the city's west side.

Once inside, however, "you're not sure what city you're in — or whether you're in a city or an airport," urban planner William H. Whyte Jr. explained at a recent Washington convention sponsored by the Conservation Foundation.

Author of "The Organization Man," still widely read 20 years after it was first published, Whyte also addressed New York City's Street Life Project.

Perhaps most important in Whyte's catalog of downtown characteristics is a few of them especially attractive to people — or the sterile buildings was the fact that their dominant architectural characteristics belie their purported mission.

Milliken, who succeeded George Romney in Lansing in 1969, is second in seniority among Michigan governors only to Robert Ray of Iowa. But up to the election of 1978, he was sort of an outsider among the GOP state chief executives.

He is regarded as a moderate to liberal Republican who has managed to get support from the cities as well as the small towns and rural areas in an industrial, highly unionized state that looks like it should be dominated by the Right.

Milliken has not only won the governorship three times, he carried Wayne County, his home county, to victory this year. He did it largely by appealing to the middle class in the state of Michigan to demand that state legislation be ended to keep jobs from moving out and to upgrade a rapidly deteriorating housing situation.

In this, Milliken, a former small town department store owner, worked closely with Coleman Young, a street-wise black Democrat who was faced with a city on the verge of collapse when he took over. Both Republicans and Democrats have work side by side.

He did it largely by appealing to the middle class in the state of Michigan to demand that state legislation be ended to keep jobs from moving out and to upgrade a rapidly deteriorating housing situation.

There was no more assurance this year than before that the majority of Republicans would give up their attention to Milliken. But this first time since he joined their ranks, the Michigan governor had bring proof that what he has been talking about all this time can produce political dividends.

You win some years and you lose some.

Finally, the lack of respect for detail, texture and color invariably gives refugees from the stark concrete-and-steel structures to characterize their experience as depersonalizing.

JACK ANDERSON

U.S. Called Human Rights Violator

WASHINGTON — One of Jimmy Carter's most publicized issues has been his championing of human rights. To the intense irritation of the countries that have been the targets of the president's efforts, he has attacked regimes that lock up dissidents to silence their prisoners under the guise of criminal activity.

This past attitude strikes many of our liberal neighbors as a breach of the rules of international law, especially by people who live in glass houses. Their reaction will now involve a formal airing.

Today, on the 25th anniversary of the United Nations Declaration of Human Rights, the United States will be cited as a violator. A 200-page brief has been filed with the U.N. detailing the case histories of 60 individuals in the United States who allegedly have been imprisoned for their political beliefs.

What makes the document particularly embarrassing is that it will be filed today, not by Carter but by three organizations run by Carter's political opponents: the Commission for Racial Justice, the National Conference of Black Lawyers and the National Alliance Against Racism and Political Oppression.

They will urge President Carter to "take a look at home" before condemning other nations

The Orlando Area Chamber of Commerce Education Committee is asking support of a project to encourage implementation of a program through the school systems of Orange, Seminole and Osceola counties and other appropriate agencies and institutions to alleviate the problem of unplanned teen-age pregnancies.

The committee has set a resolution and information letter to civic groups and individuals in the three county area listing starting statistics.

The committees say the number of teen-age pregnancies in Orlando and surrounding areas is now twice as many compared to a state average of one birth in every five to a teen-age.

According to the Orange County Health Department, the latest states, 5 percent of maternity admissions in Orange County during the first six months of 1978 were to teen-agers. This figure averaged 36 percent in previous years.

The committee said, "We need to begin an education and information program immediately to advise the community of this problem with an ultimate goal of incorporating supplemental sex education programs into school systems."

Mesquite, the statistics nationally, gathered by the committee, are that one million teen-agers will become pregnant this year. One teen-age girl in 10 will bear a child. Some 76 to 85 percent of these births are unplanned and 44 percent of the girls will become pregnant again within one year. About half of all U.S. youths 15 to 19 are sexually active, and they give birth to nearly 10 percent of mothers, 15-to-17 years old, who give birth are likely to need welfare assistance. The cost of care for a pregnant teenager is about $2,000. It costs $100,000 to rear a child to maturity on welfare.

Alarmed at the report of the board of directors of the Orlando Area Chamber of Commerce adopted a resolution calling for implementation of a permanent sex education program in the school systems of the three counties.

The committee said, "We need to begin an education and information program immediately to advise the community of this problem with an ultimate goal of incorporating supplemental sex education programs into school systems."

The chamber is making speakers on the subject available. To get a guest speaker on the subject call the chamber's civic affairs office 425-5553.

County government is Bob, Boddy or Robert. The county commission has two Roberts or Bobs — one from each political party — Starn and its new chairman, French. The county's legislative delegation has two Bodys — Hatfield and Bradley — one from each party.

On the school board, it's a little different. It officially, has only one Robert — Feather, the new chairman. But, it has two Bodes — Layer, supervisor of public instruction, and Feather, the nickname by which everyone calls him. In addition, it has two Williams — Layer's real name and Kroll, known as Bill.

tendency to jump to conclusions mistakes.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Avoid Christmas shopping today. Chances are you'll either come home empty-handed or sit around your car, waiting for the stores to open.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) Be cooperative today, but don't be condescending. Others could misinterpret your action and feel you're trying to take advantage of them. Find out more about yourself by reading for your 1979 copy of Architectural Record and check out the annual design competition in Astro-Graph, P.O. Box 69, Radio City Station, N.Y. 10163. Be sure to specify birth sign.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Major problems you can handle in stride today, but petty frustrations could cause you to overreact. This is not a time to make mountainous from molehills.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Today you could be overly influenced by the opinions of people who don't have your best interest at heart. Strive to please them and you'll do yourself a disservice.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) Try not to cross your fingers and toes in hopes of getting creative suggestions. Looking for faults won't enhance your popularity.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 22) In business matters today be very careful of what you sign. Read all small print thoroughly before locking yourself into a long-term agreement.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Take time to think things out clearly if you're involved in any major projects. You have a

Shrinking Body Common In Women

Dr.
Lamb

DEAR DR. LAMB — It is my misfortune to have a degenerative bone disease called osteoporosis. I have had it for a year or two. It has been a slow decline, so I have only 4 feet 8. I would like to know if there is anything I could do to slow the process or stop it altogether.

DEAR READER — I hope you are seeing your doctor. Your disease is very common, particularly in women who get older. It starts usually after the menopause. It makes porous bones and it's caused by a loss of calcium in the bone cells. The vertebral column is smaller and brittle because as the bones degenerate and deform the chest, they affect the way the ribs move. Eventually this limits the ability of the person to breathe. The disease is usually painless except during the fractures of vertebrae. Then the pain can be quite severe because of pressure on nerves.

In my case, I think the disease is serious enough that anyone who has it should be under regular medical care.

Women who are calcium deficient diets are five times as likely to develop this disorder as are women who have a normal amount of calcium in their diet.

I am sending you The Health Letter number 6-12. Otherwise, Bone Softening, to give you more information about this disease.

The Health Letter I am sending you explains there are several different ways of treating this problem. Your diet is very important and you should be certain to get enough calcium. I would like to see you get a least one-and-a-half grams of calcium a day; this is about the amount you would find in one quart of fortified skim milk.

During the disease varies so much from milder to very severe, any exercise program to help prevent deformity has to be individualized. Meanwhile, as a general preventive measure to avoid or minimize this disease, I think moderately aged women should eat one-half gram of calcium a day; and should have a regular exercise program that is suitable for an individualized basis on an individualized basis.

Sanford: Nudes, 'No'; Police Panel, Not Now

'Blue-Ribbon' Survey Tabled

By MAX ERIKLETTAN
Herald Staff Writer

As was expected a proposal that the Sanford City Commission establish a blue-ribbon committee to survey the city's police department was unanimously tabled at its Monday night meeting.

The tabled proposal, submitted by David Farr, seat three commissioners candidate, requires a two-thirds vote by the five-member commission if it is to be considered again in the future.

After Farr made his proposal, Mayor Lee P. Moore addressed the issue defending the integrity of the police department and asking that the motion be tabled. With no further discussion, the commission voted to put it to rest.

"At this time, I want you to know I am here alone," Farr told the commissioners. "I have asked no one to appear with me in support. There may be others here who support my views, but they are here without my encouragement and not at my request."

Responding, Moore said, "I don't think things of this political weight should be dealt with in the city commission room. I don't want to talk about Ben Butler or Wallace LaPeters tonight. I want to talk about the man who wears the uniform and drives the black and white."

Moore reviewed investigations of the department over recent years ranging from charges of equal employment violations to ticket-fixing.

"I want to talk about the man who has to go out and arrest his neighbor. The man who works hard to make a case and when he's made it, goes to the state attorney who doesn't have time for it because he's got bigger things," Moore said.

Alone, Farr said, he had led the heart king played low from dummy and won with his ace. Then he played his next spade, led a club and had a regular player a spade toward his hand and made five odd.

"At the other table, South nearly jumped from spades to four. The same jack of hearts was led and South decided to go after it with a spade. He was successful and led the heart king, South won with the ace and made that same play the rest of the time. After that, the whole hand collapsed. When East got in with the king of trumps he led a club and won. West cashed two hearts and led a diamond which East ruffed for the setting trick."

"I don't see how you can go much further than that," Farr continued. "McClanahan said of our original ordinance, 'It's difficult for him to stand beside a car and issue a citation, because he has been under investigation for four years. Four years he's been out there doing his job and he's out there doing his job tonight.'

"The avenue for you," he told Farr, "to go is the legal route, through the state attorney's office and the state attorney is not going to investigate on generalities."

Farr said he asked for a blue-ribbon panel because of a "mood, a climate among Sanford citizens that something is wrong at the police department." He confirmed, however, there were no

I don't think they know what they're talking about," Mrs. Nicholson added before the commissioners adjourned. Her husband is returning to the U.S. Navy's, a neighbor said.

Terry Nicholson apparently arranged the expedition into an uncharted jungle region near the Rio Napo River where the group hunted for valuable insect treasures.

"One from the expedition has come back. The man who went with Terry, I don't know anything. I wish I did," Mrs. Nicholson said. Her husband, Clyde, and a second son, Terry, of Memphis, have been held in the South American country since Oct. 25, according to a spokesman for the U.S. State Department.

A second trip was planned and the group arrived in Quito, Ecuador, on Oct. 25. The group was held in the capital city of Quito, Ron Abney, the spokesman reported.

The state department returned to the U.S. because of an injury, provided most of the details on the expedition. The group is being held in Ecuador's capital city of Quito, Ron Abney, the spokesman reported.
