Melon thieves injure guard dog

SANFORD — Eighteen watermelons are missing and a Doberman pinscher guarding the scene has been hurt at a fruit stand at 999 Monroe Road, Sanford, Seminole County sheriff's deputies report.

Louis A. Morris, 51, of George's Bait and Tackle, reportedly told sheriff's deputies his melons, valued at $53, were stolen some time Monday night. When he reported the loss Tuesday evening, Morris also said that his Doberman pinscher dog's foot was apparently broken with an oak board during the theft.

Polk back part-time

SANFORD — Sheriff John Polk is back at work for about three hours each day, as he continues to recover from chest surgery to repair internal damage that followed heart surgery in November.

Polk, 58, who has been re-hospitalized three times in Altamonte Springs following his second heart bypass surgery performed at Duke University Medical Center in North Carolina, was released from his latest hospital stay May 9. On May 2 Polk's doctors at Florida Hospital Altamonte reopened his chest to repair four of five wires that were to hold his ribcage together, but which had broken. Three floating ribs were reattached and scar tissue removed.

Polk said he has suffered no pain since repair of the internal damage to his chest, but he has lost about 50 pounds.

Test scores here highest in the state

By VICKI DeSORMIER
Herald staff writer

SANFORD — The Seminole County school district's 10th graders scored, on average, higher than students across the state on the State Student Assessment Test (SSAT).

According to David Winger, coordinator of testing for the district, students in this district have scored consistently higher than the state average. They have also topped their own past scores each year.

"They did much better this year," he said. "They managed to keep ahead of the state average which is continuing to go up as well."

The test is divided into two sections, one which measures basic skills in reading, writing and mathematics and the other which measures those skills to everyday life situations.

Seminole High School student test scores show a "significant increase over their 1989 scores," Winger

Search for minority teachers intensified

SANFORD — Over the past year, the personnel department of the Seminole County school district has concentrated its effort to recruit more minority teachers.

District and school level administrators traveled to 10 schools across the state as well as to Louisiana State University and Southern University to try to bring minorities into the classrooms of Seminole County.

Three hundred ninety-six interviews were conducted between February and December last year resulting in the hiring of 102 teachers.

The district has made an effort to identify the areas where the greatest inequities exist.

Legislators: Brace for tax increase in '91

United Press International

TALLAHASSEE — Florida residents should begin facing up to the unpleasant fact that next year's Legislature will probably have to consider some form of general tax hike to meet the demands of state government, several state lawmakers say.

"We have maxed out our ability to tap our existing tax sources on a piecemeal approach," Senate President Bob Crawford said Monday, echoing similar comments earlier from lawmakers like House Speaker Tom Gustafson and his successor, state Rep. T.K. Wetherell.

"The Legislature is going to find itself in a real dilemma" in 1991, Crawford said, and is likely to find itself looking at more of a general tax hike to meet the demands of state growth.

The other option is a cutback in services, which often seems attractive to voters until they begin to suffer themselves from the cuts.

One of the major problems is that Florida's revenue base no longer is growing as quickly as it was during the 1980s. That means that while the demand for state services continues to go up, the money to pay for them is not increasing as rapidly.

One top state official who disagreed with the gloomy outlook was Gov. Bob Martinez, who used his veto threat during the session that ended last weekend to force lawmakers to adopt a scattergun approach to raising the $1.5 billion in extra taxes and fees needed for the $27.5 billion budget.

"Florida's had good growth in this budget. ... Even without (the tax package), the budget would

Georgia native may become new county manager

By J. MARK BARFIELD
Herald staff writer

SANFORD — Michael Bryant, the quiet-spoken county manager of Hall County, Ga., may become Seminole County's next county manager.

Commissioner Sandra Glenn said Bryant was "positive" about the job and offer Tuesday night after speaking with Bob Slavin, president of the county's search firm MSN Management Consultants. Slavin extended the county's offer of $80,000 a year to start, rising to $85,000 after six months, and a county car every two years. They also agreed to pay his moving expenses.

Glenn said Bryant told Slavin he would have to discuss Seminole County's offer with his wife who was away from their Gainesville, Ga. home on business. His answer is expected by Thursday, Glenn said.

Seminole County commissioners and a four-person interview committee unanimously agreed Tuesday to offer Bryant the position of the chief executive of the county. Bryant has held his Hall County position 10 years and currently

Forecaster predicts active hurricane season

United Press International

DENVER — Hurricane forecaster William Gray said Tuesday the southeastern United States should prepare for an active tropical storm season this year and warned it might usher in a renewed cycle of stronger hurricanes.

Gray, a professor of atmospheric science at Colorado State University, has issued hurricane predictions annually since 1984. His predictions had been very close every year until last year, when his forecast was wide of the mark.

STORM WARNINGS

A comparison of the number of hurricanes predicted annually by Colorado State University Prof. William Gray and the actual number:

(Year) Prediction.....	Actual
(1984) 7.....	5
(1985) 7.....	7
(1986) 4.....	4
(1987) 4.....	3
(1988) 7.....	5
(1989) 4.....	7
(1990) 7.....	?

Last year, Gray predicted four hurricanes, three short of the actual number. He also failed to predict anything of the magnitude of Hugo, the most destructive hurricane in the nation's history.

A missing factor in his old forecasting equation caused the 1989 prediction to fail, Gray told a news conference, and that has been corrected.

The 1990 forecast, which Gray will revise on Aug. 3 before the start of the most active part of the season, predicts seven hurricanes, 11 named storms of at least tropical-storm intensity, 30 hurricane days and a slightly above-average hurricane destruction potential.

Three of the predicted hurricanes will be major events of a category 3, 4 or 5 in the Saffir/Simpson intensity scale, he said. A category 3 hurricane is nine times as destructive as a category 1 storm, and a category 5 hurricane is 25 times as strong. Hugo was category 4 in intensity.

Gray also went a little bit further, saying he believed the Southeast might be faced with a renewed cycle of potentially-destructive storms similar to the late 1940s, 1950s and 1960s.

Gray's predictions are based on a number of meteorological factors, including the presence of any El Nino warm-water events in the South Pacific, the direction of the

New generation of weather-radar will aid in predicting killer storms

United Press International

GAINESVILLE — Florida, which has some of the most fickle weather in the nation, is scheduled to be among the first states to be outfitted with a new generation of weather radar to better predict lethal storms.

The first of seven weather stations in Florida could be installed in Melbourne by the end of the year, according to National Weather Service officials and members of Congress.

The installations are part of the NWS's five-year, $2-million modernization program that will see 160 new radars — the so-called Next Generation Weather Radar setups — put into place across the United States.

"We're operating in the Paleolithic age in our country in terms of weather forecasting," said U.S. Rep. James Scheuer, D-N.Y. "It's a national shame."

Phone companies accused of fraud

FORT LAUDERDALE - Two cellular telephone companies were accused in federal fraud suits of overcharging customers by billing them for the period of time when their car and mobile phones were only ringing. The suits, filed in Fort Lauderdale against Cellular One and in West Palm Beach against BellSouth Mobility, allege that customers were fraudulently billed on a per-minute basis from the time their phones began ringing, and regardless of whether calls were completed.

Child abuse charge changed to murder

FORT LAUDERDALE - Child abuse charges against 25-year-old man were upgraded to murder after doctors disconnected the life-support systems that had kept his 3-month-old son alive. Ricardo Gonzalez was charged Tuesday with first-degree murder. He remained jailed without bond in the Broward County Jail Wednesday.

His son, Ricky Ricardo Gonzalez, died Tuesday at Memorial Hospital. The baby suffered 18 broken bones and brain damage known as "shaken baby syndrome," caused when young children are shaken so violently that the veins in the brain rupture. The baby had been on life support systems since his distraught mother rushed him to the hospital Saturday. The mother, Ofelia Rodriguez, was not charged. She had left the baby in his father's custody while she worked at a convenience store.

Detectives said the baby's injuries were "an ongoing thing," and medical records showed some of his bones had been broken at least six weeks ago. "This baby was in pain for a long time," said Sgt. Darron Castiglione.

Former mayor subject of investigation

MIRAMAR - Former Miramar Mayor Frank Branca is under investigation by the Broward County State Attorney's Office because of undisclosed allegations of possible misconduct during his administration. Assistant State Attorney Tim Donnelly confirmed the investigation but would not reveal exactly what he is examining. On Tuesday, Donnelly and state attorney's investigator Mike Gillo examined Branca's personnel file, financial records and the minutes of meetings held while Branca was in office, the current mayor, Vicki Coceano said. Donnelly and Gillo also interviewed Coceano, the city finance director, and the directors of the payroll, accounting and water-sewer departments.

Deerfield Beach bans skateboards

DEERFIELD BEACH - City commissioners in Deerfield Beach voted to ban skateboards in city parks, on city basketball and tennis courts and on beachfront sidewalks. Violators would face fines of up to $500 and 90 days in jail. City officials approved the restrictions Tuesday after insurance specialists warned that the city, which is self-insured, would be vulnerable to lawsuits if a skateboarder is injured or injures someone else on city property.

Key Biscayne heads toward incorporation

KEY BISCAYNE - Key Biscayne has cleared the first hurdle toward becoming an incorporated city. Dade County commissioners authorized the Key Biscayne City Council Tuesday to take its case to the Metro Planning Advisory Board and the people of the island, who ultimately must approve the change by a majority vote. A public hearing will be held before the commission, which still has final say on incorporation. The commission did not set an election date but said the voting would be held "as soon as is practical."

NEWS FROM THE REGION AND ACROSS THE STATE

Shuttle undergoes last-ditch test

United Press International

CAPE CANAVERAL - Engineers pumped frigid liquid hydrogen rocket fuel aboard the shuttle Columbia Wednesday in a last-ditch bid to locate a leak that has wrecked NASA's launch schedule and threatens to ground the ship until early August. The critical fueling test began at 8:08 a.m. to duplicate the minus 423-degree temperatures that were present when the leak first showed up last week, interrupting Columbia's countdown and indefinitely delaying launch. NASA spokesman George Diller said 21 special instruments were installed to help pinpoint the problem, including two hydrogen-sniffing mass spectrometers and 15 leak detectors. The hydrogen portion of the shuttle's external tank holds 383,000 gallons of hydrogen, but engineers did not expect to pump more than about 30,000 gallons aboard during the test Wednesday. Despite extensive tests last week, engineers were unable to locate the leak, which apparently shows up only in the presence of supercold liquid hydrogen. NASA engineers hoped the fueling test would enable them to finally find the problem area.

NASA managers want to find the leak before hauling Columbia back to the Vehicle Assembly Building for major repairs. A top NASA manager said Tuesday the space agency likely will delay Columbia's launch on a 10-day astronomy mission until around Aug. 9 in order to launch the shuttle Atlantis on schedule July 11 to ferry a secret military satellite into orbit. NASA officials strongly suspect Columbia's leak is located in the area where the shuttle's primary 17-inch-wide fuel line butts up against the belly of the orbiter. A critical seal in the 17-inch "quick disconnect" fitting is one possible suspect, although the problem could involve internal mechanisms. In that case, Columbia could face an even longer launch delay.

Engineers cannot fix the quick disconnect fitting without first disconnecting Columbia from its external tank. And that can be done only using a giant overhead crane in the Vehicle Assembly Building 3 1/2 miles from the launch pad. Because of the time needed to fix Columbia, NASA managers may decide to proceed with the shuttle Atlantis's roll out to launch pad 39A next week for blastoff around July 11. Engineers in the shuttle Discovery's hangar, meanwhile, are continuing to assess the condition of the ship's right-hand payload bay door to find out if the fragile panel was damaged during an accident Monday. One edge of the 60-foot-long door was pulled up more than 10 inches when an overhead crane was accidentally moved, pulling on cables running from the crane to door-closing fixtures on the long panels.

The long panel returned to its original shape once the tension was released and "looking at it, it doesn't appear to be damaged," a NASA spokesman said. "What's concerning some people is hidden damage under the (heat insulation) blankets." The Discovery accident was the latest in a series of problems that has thrown NASA's ambitious, around-the-clock launch processing schedule into disarray.

With Columbia facing a roll back to the hangar and a months-long delay, the space agency can ill afford problems with Discovery, scheduled for launch Oct. 5.

Ancient Indian village destroyed by blunders

United Press International

MIAMI - The remains of an ancient Tequesta Indian village were destroyed by bulldozers and dynamite because county planners forgot to warn the building developer to protect the rare site, a county archaeologist said. Tequesta Indians probably buried their dead on the tropical hardwood hammock surrounded by saw grass in southwest Dade County 500 to 1,000 years ago. Work crews destroyed 90 percent of the one-acre site last month to build an artificial lake in the midst of a 1,080-unit housing project.

The only archaeological finds rescued were some pottery fragments, pieces of animal bone and a human tooth. "Unfortunately, if there's anything else there, it's buried under tons of rock and rubble now," said county archaeologist Robert Carr, who discovered traces of the Tequesta settlement last year. "An important historical record has been lost." County planners agreed the site needed protection but never told the builders that the remains were there and issued a permit allowing it to be destroyed.

It was the ninth Tequesta site in southwest Dade County destroyed by developers in the last decade, said Carr. Spanish explorers found about 1,000 Tequesta living in southeast Florida in the early 16th Century. The last mention of the tribe was made by a Cuban priest who came to the area in 1743. Apparently, warfare had reduced their numbers to about 80 and the survivors eventually went to Havana with the Spaniards. Carr said he is partly responsible for the series of mistakes that led to the site's destruction. "In this one instance, everything that could go wrong did go wrong. The developer was not the bad guy. This was a real case of bureaucratic bungling," Carr said.

State releases list of worst tire dumps

United Press International

TALLAHASSEE - State officials have released a list of the eight worst used-tire dumps in Florida, citing a giant 25-acre dump in Polk County as the most dangerous. The Polk County site, located near Polk City, has 7 million tires stacked in piles that 6 feet high. One state official said it would cost the state $5 million to clean up that one dump.

The big tire piles are considered a major environmental hazard, since they are mosquito breeding grounds. Additionally, a fire in the big piles would put huge amounts of oil in the ground and clog the air with smoke, besides being extremely difficult to put out. Three of the eight tire dumps on the Department of Environmental Regulation list are located in Orange County. Two - including the Polk City site - are in Polk County, while the others are in Hillsborough, Nassau and Pasco counties.

The most-dangerous dumps were rated according to their number of tires, their proximity to neighborhoods and their potential for environmental harm. Unlike some garbage, tire don't decay. They just continue to pile up, and recycling them to other uses such as road construction material is expensive. "Tire dumps have been a lucrative enterprise for landowners over the years, but the practice became illegal in 1988. "You can't just dump a pile of tires in the middle of nowhere anymore," said Bill Hinkley, director of DER's solid waste program. "The good old days of dumping tires at low or no cost are behind us." Current state law requires dump owners to shred their stockpiles or pay to have them carted away to a site for shredding. They can apply for permits to operate their sites as recycling centers, but few have done so, said Hinkley. "There is a surcharge of one dollar on every new tire sold in Florida to feed a trust fund. The fund, which raises about $15 million a year, is supposed to be used for research on developing new uses for old tires."

Chiles says DeFoor's selection won't change race

United Press International

FORT LAUDERDALE - The addition of J. Allison DeFoor III to the Republican gubernatorial ticket won't influence the course of Lawton Chiles' Democratic campaign for governor, or the ultimate outcome, despite DeFoor's controversial tenure as a state judge, Chiles said Tuesday. Republican Gov. Bob Martinez kicked off his re-election campaign Monday by naming DeFoor, the Monroe County sheriff, as his running mate. DeFoor, a former judge, was reprimanded by the Florida Supreme Court in 1986 for improper campaigning and other indiscretions while on the bench. Chiles, who spoke to reporters before touring a day-care center for disadvantaged children, refused to comment on the public reprimand. But the former U.S. senator sounded confident when asked if DeFoor's selection would boost Democratic chances in November, as some maintain. "I don't know how you could boost what you think are awfully good chances to begin with," Chiles said. "What our campaign is about - and it doesn't change with the sheriff getting in it - is people versus money. We think people are more important than money, and that's what we're out to prove," he added. Chiles, who is challenging U.S. Rep. Bill Nelson, D-Fla., for the Democratic nomination, spent about a half an hour visiting children at the Jack & Jill Nursery to point out the need for more state supported day-care services. "Day care is tremendously important, especially in this kind of setting," he said. "The tragedy is again that you have a program like this that works that is not available to all of the kids of the working poor."

Chiles said more federal money would be available for day care in Florida if the state came up with additional matching funds. That money could help to reduce the current waiting list for subsidized day care, estimated at 22,000 children, he said. "I don't think we ought to have a waiting list," Chiles said. "If we don't have these kids educated, they will be on our welfare rolls, or they'll be in our prisons." Chiles also criticized the Martinez administration for presiding over cutbacks in a food program for poor families that he said will affect 30,000 children in Florida.

POLICE BRIEFS

Man accused in strong arm robbery

MIDWAY — Seminole County sheriff's deputies report the arrest Tuesday morning of a man accused as one of two robbers who allegedly attacked a man on Sipes Avenue, Midway, May 18.

The victim had told deputies that a 17-year-old boy, also suspected in the case, allegedly held a gun to his head and demanded money after Thurman Latherio Byrd, 22, 2370 Granby St., Sanford, allegedly hit him in the face.

Byrd allegedly tore a pocket from the victim's clothes and took $75 from the pocket, a sheriff's report said. Byrd was arrested at the sheriff's office at 10:36 a.m.

Man charged with threatening roommate

FERN PARK — A man who allegedly threatened his roommate because he didn't want fire fighters called to their house after a pan of food the suspect was cooking caught afire Tuesday morning, has been arrested.

Marcel Dube, 52, 600 Prairie Lake Drive, Fern Park, was charged with aggravated assault. He was also charged with battery on a policeman after allegedly struggling with deputies and striking one. The arrest was made at 3:54 a.m.

Fake identification leads to arrest

SANFORD — A woman who allegedly presented a Social Security card and a birth certificate in the name of another woman to get a fake Florida identification card in Sanford Tuesday afternoon was arrested.

Sanford police report charging Maria Isabel Rios, 18, 981 Dinero Drive, Winter Springs, with unlawful possession of or an unlawful attempt to get a driver's license or identification card. She was arrested at the state driver's license office at 1251 E. Airport Blvd.

Four nominated for board post

SANFORD — Seminole County sheriff's workers covered by civil service have nominated four candidates to fill a recently vacated employee-elected post on the five-member civil service board.

In an election during the second week of June, sheriff's Sgt. Ralph Salerno, Sgt. Mike Messer, corrections officer Mark Yingling, and bailiff Joe Scutero will vie for the post.

The term is for two years. There is one other employee-elected slot on the board. The board itself appoints one other board member and the sheriff appoints the remaining two board members.

Leffler resigns from circuit post

By NICK PFEIFAUF
Herald staff writer

SANFORD — Circuit Judge Kenneth Leffler, who has served as circuit court judge in Seminole and Brevard counties for 15 years, has forwarded his letter of resignation to Gov. Bob Martinez, effective December 31. He would not have been up for re-election for another four years.

In announcing his retirement in the letter dated June 4, he said he had no immediate plans for the future.

"I want to take some time to take inventory, then determine which direction I might go," Leffler said.

Leffler said it will now be up to the governor to declare a judicial election to choose his successor. The election is scheduled for Sept. 4. "At that time," Leffler said, "I have informed the governor I will be willing to back-date my resignation, should he decide to appoint whoever wins the election to fill the remainder of my term for this year."

Several people have already announced they will seek the seat vacated by Leffler, although the official judiciary qualifying period does not begin until July 16 at noon.

While he would prefer to resign his post sooner, Leffler said Martinez would probably not take action to fill the post until the end of the year, and that could cause a hardship in the case loads of the circuit court.

SANFORD — Although the official judiciary qualifying period is still over a month away, a number of candidates have made announcements of their intent to run for a circuit court judgeship in the 18th judicial circuit which includes Seminole and Brevard Counties. Two announcements were made this week, from Sanford and Melbourne.

At the beginning of this week, Seminole County attorney Ned N. Julian Jr. announced his candidacy for the Group 10 judgeship vacancy created by the retirement of the Honorable Kenneth M. Leffler. In Melbourne, Brevard County Judge Tonya Baccus yesterday announced her plans to seek a circuit judgeship.

Julian, a graduate of Stetson University and Stetson College of Law, began his law practice in Seminole County in 1967 with the firm of Stenstrom, Davis & McIntosh. He is now a senior partner in the firm, now known as Stenstrom, McIntosh, Julian, Colbert, Whigham & Simmons, P.A. In addition to being admitted to the Florida Bar, Julian is admitted to the U.S. District Court for both the middle and southern districts of Florida, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 11th Circuit and the United States Supreme Court. He also regularly appears before the Florida Public Employee Relations Commission, and the Florida Commission on Human Relations.

Julian also serves as attorney to the Seminole County School Board, attorney for the City of Lake Mary and assists his partner Kenneth McIntosh in representation of Seminole Community College. He also serves as the attorney for the Seminole County Housing Authority.

Baccus was elected to the Brevard County court bench in 1986. Before entering private practice in 1981, she served a year and a half as an assistant state attorney, prosecuting cases in county court. She then established a general practice which involved a variety of legal work, primarily in criminal, real estate, corporate and family law.

Baccus graduated from the University of Florida College of Law and completed her undergraduate work at Florida State University. She also received a Master's degree in business administration from the Florida Institute of Technology where she was formerly an adjunct faculty member.

Chamber won't support effort to save fireworks

By J. BRADLEY DILLING

SANFORD — A hurt and angry Steve Alford left the Greater Sanford Chamber of Commerce meeting room yesterday after the Executive Committee voted not to support him, as a group, in his efforts to raise money for Fourth of July fireworks.

After hearing the chamber might abandon its traditional fireworks display this year, Alford had been working since last Thursday to raise money for the project. The chamber had $1,700 left from last year's effort and was discussing whether or not to spend it on fireworks this year.

"They acted like a bunch of blockheads, as I see it," Alford said after the meeting.

Alford had tried to persuade the committee to support the project, but to no avail.

"The question I really have to ask myself is: Is there a solid business reason to do this, or is it just patriotic," committee member Jim Young said. "We've got to consider the competition. We've got Orlando and Walt Disney World. It really hurts us to put up a mediocre display."

Young said Disney and Orlando spend at least $15,000 each, compared to Sanford's usual $3,300. He also said the chamber received several complaints about the quality of the display last year.

"This isn't just any old event," Alford said. "This is our country's birthday. Do we have to keep up with Disney World? Do we have to keep up with Orlando?"

Chamber President Tony Russi replied. "We're in business to help business. I don't think this helps business. I commend you for what you do. I support you — personally, for what you do."

Revco sells 220 stores

United Press International

TWINSBURG, Ohio — Revco D.S. Inc., formerly the nation's largest drugstore chain, announced plans Tuesday to sell 220 stores in five states to the Jack Eckerd Corp. of Clearwater, Fla.

The purchase price for the stores in Texas, Florida, Mississippi, Louisiana and Oklahoma was not disclosed, but it will be revealed in federal bankruptcy court filings during the next few weeks.

Revco has been under federal bankruptcy protection since July 1988. It operates more than 1,800 stores in 27 states.

On Jan. 26 Revco announced it would sell 712 stores in 17 states, keeping only its 1,100 stores in Ohio, Pennsylvania, West Virginia, New York, Maryland, Virginia, Georgia, North Carolina, South Carolina and eastern Tennessee.

Lake Mary commission to debate controversial building purchase

By NICK PFEIFAUF
Herald staff writer

LAKE MARY — The question of whether to purchase the Community Improvement Association building, 260 N. Country Club Road, will come before the Lake Mary City Commission for the second time tomorrow night.

The city already owns the property on which the building is located. When the matter was brought up for a vote the first time, during the May 17 commission meeting, the proposal failed to pass, with a 2-to-2 decision and one commissioner not in attendance.

Mayor Dick Fess, who voted against the purchase during the last meeting said he had a problem in buying a building that is not particularly suited for the needs of the city. Referring to park property further north on Country Club Road now owned by the city, he said, "I think we could construct a building on the land we just purchased."

In a memorandum prepared for tomorrow night's commission meeting, City Manager John Litton differs in that opinion. In his memo, Litton said, "During the Commission discussions regarding the acquisition of the CIA building there have been some expressions that possibly we do not have an immediate need for such a facility. Let me assure you that we do, and that fact can be verified by reviewing the results of the Recreational Needs Survey which was distributed to each household in the city earlier this year. Some 70 percent of those responding said that such a building was needed and more than half said they would be willing to bond for such a facility, which indicates to me an immediate need."

Litton said the results of the survey indicate the people of Lake Mary want a place which is available to community groups for meetings, educational and recreational activities, as well as private functions. While the CIA has been providing its building for such purposes in the past, Litton said the CIA does not have the staff nor the resources available to accommodate those needs on a demand basis.

The meeting will begin at 7 p.m. tomorrow night at the city commission chambers, 155 N. Country Club Road.

Lotto winners sue partner for double win

United Press International

ORLANDO — Four Orlando postal workers were ecstatic over winning a $214,000 lottery jackpot until they learned their partner had bought another ticket with the same numbers, thereby reducing their take by about $40,000.

The workers filed suit Friday in Orange County Circuit Court against Willie Schmidt, 50, seeking to force Schmidt to add his second winning Fantasy Five ticket to theirs.

Schmidt said he did not realize he had played the same combination — 10, 16, 17, 19, 31 — with his son-in-law, but he said he never promised his co-workers he would not play their numbers on his own.

The workers have refused to pay Schmidt his $42,000 share of the $214,000 windfall, but Schmidt on Monday received his share of the $214,000 he won with his son-in-law.

"It's a shame it had to turn out this way," he said.

The Fantasy Five jackpot on May 25 was worth $1.7 million and there were eight winning tickets. Florida lottery officials reported.

Electoral sickness

A well-informed citizenry is the cornerstone of a democracy. Thus elected leaders in the United States should be alarmed at the widespread public cynicism among Americans of voting age. That warning is contained in a report from the Markle Commission on the Media and Electorate, which notes the irony of the democratic process flowering in numerous countries around the world while it appears to be withering here.

The report reflects two years of study by an eight-member commission consisting of prominent academics, journalists, and two former U.S. senators. After evaluating the role of citizens, the media and candidates during the 1988 presidential campaign, the commission concluded that many voters believe they have little or no effect on national elections. This pessimism helps explain why voter turnout has steadily decreased during the last three decades.

In the 1960 presidential election, nearly 63 percent of the voting-age population cast ballots for John Kennedy or Richard Nixon. In 1988, however, a mere 50.1 percent bothered to vote for George Bush or Michael Dukakis. Voter turnout for congressional elections is even more paltry; 48 percent three decades ago compared with 37 percent in 1988.

What can be done to increase voter interest and participation in the political process? The commission offers several recommendations that could have a significant impact.

A national advertising campaign, funded by an income tax checkoff system, is a good place to begin. Voters need to be reminded that their input is vitally important for the system to work. High schools, colleges, and universities could provide a timely assist in this regard.

We agree that the Federal Communications Commission ought to encourage television and radio networks to offer regular public service air time during presidential campaigns. Congress also should suspend the requirements that networks must provide equal time to all candidates for the presidency. The more voters see and hear of the respective candidates, the better able they will be to make informed choices.

If network and newspaper executives assumed a more aggressive role in determining the validity of campaign advertising, the candidates might stick to the issues instead of resorting to mudslinging and outright deception. No wonder so many would-be voters are turned off by an increasingly sleazy process whereby far too many candidates are packaged and sold by their handlers like boxes of sugar-coated cereal.

Media executives and reporters also must be more vigilant against being used by campaign flacks whose goal is to win at all costs. All too often, newspapers and television get caught up in the horse-race syndrome of handicapping the contenders. Devoting more attention to substance rather than style is the surest way to put the focus where it belongs for candidates and voters alike.

Finally, presidential candidates should be required to participate in four debates in order to qualify for federally matching campaign funds. And the ground rules for these debates should be determined by the networks themselves not the respective campaign staffs. That way the contenders would be obliged to engage in some intellectual roughhousing instead of conducting parallel press conferences.

The Markle Commission is to be commended for reminding candidates as well as the print and broadcast media of the need for them to constantly strive for integrity in presidential campaigns, this is the first step toward restoring public confidence in the electoral process.

Company finds it pays to be clean

MAPLEWOOD, Minn. — For most corporations, concern about the environmental consequences of their actions is a matter to be handled by a hollow public relations gesture on special occasions such as Earth Day.

At other times, those firms' business-as-usual approach to the release of toxic and carcinogenic materials into the air, water and soil means that abatement of industrial pollution has only a low priority on their agenda.

In 1988, the most recent year for which comprehensive statistics are available, the nation's manufacturers released into the environment 6.2 billion pounds of contaminants suspected or known to endanger human health or safety.

But for the Minnesota Mining and Manufacturing Co., widely known as 3M, the reduction of environmental pollution has been the object of a 15-year campaign believed to be unmatched by any other major corporation.

3M, whose headquarters are located in this Minneapolis suburb, launched its Pollution Prevention Pays initiative in 1975 — when corporate concern about the environment was hardly fashionable.

Corporate officials estimate that the 22 program has reduced company-generated air pollutants in the United States by 224 million pounds and water pollutants by 30.6 million

Those figures, says 3M, represent savings only in the initial year of each improvement. Moreover, the company claims that the more than 2,500 projects initiated under the 3P program at 63 domestic and 22 international sites have reduced its costs by $500 million.

Crucial to the initial success of the 3P initiative is its emphasis on eliminating or reducing contamination at the source — usually during production — rather than generating pollutants and then attempting to treat, store or dispose of them.

In 1988, the company's releases of harmful chemicals included almost 61.4 million pounds into the air.

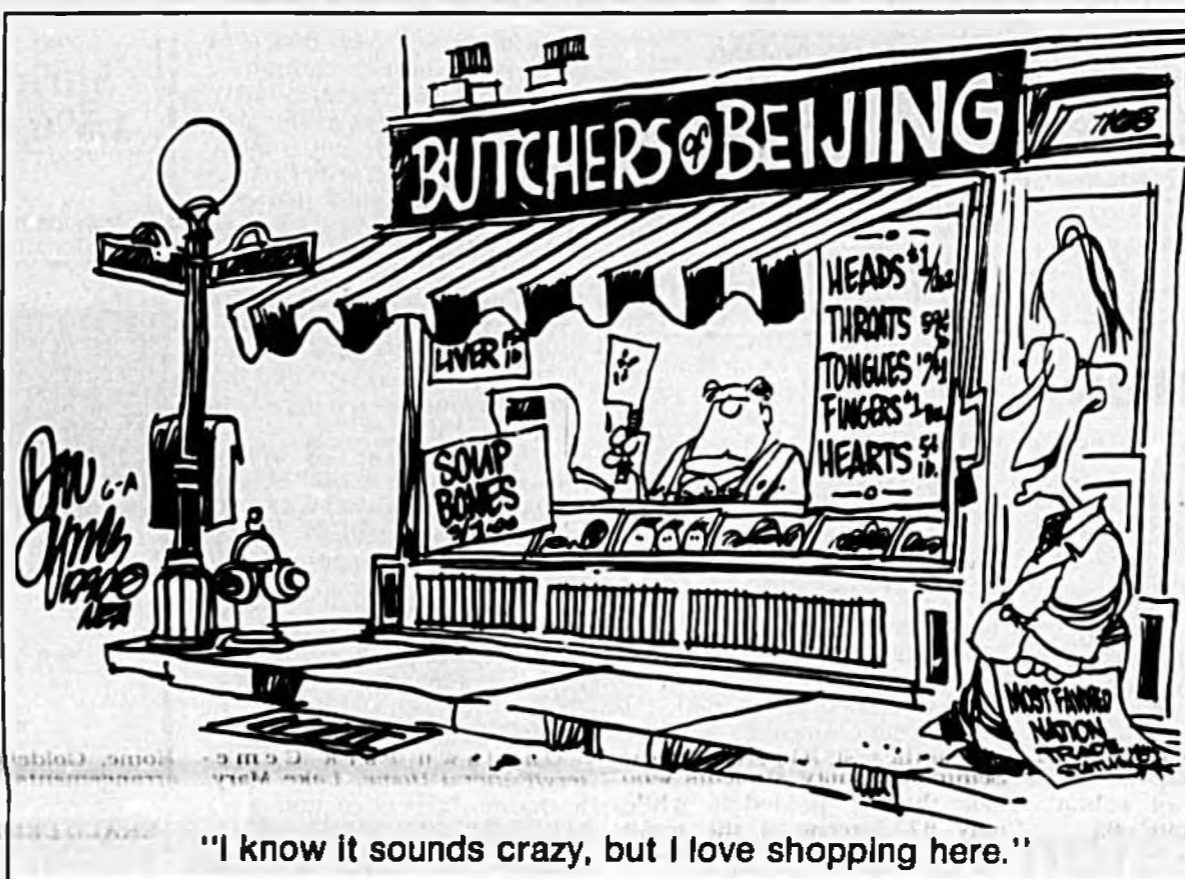

That task is complicated by the fact that many of the approximately 60,000 products 3M makes involve the use of adhesives or other coatings. (The company's best known consumer products are Scotch tape and Post-it notes.)

Large quantities of petroleum-based solvents, which become harmful air emissions when they evaporate, long were assumed to be required in the manufacture of those items. Now, however, 3M is turning to water-based solvents or eliminating their use entirely in its manufacturing processes.

"Our biggest problem is air pollution, much of it caused by solvents," says company spokesman Richard H. Renner. "Because we want the trust of the people who are breathing the air that contains our emissions, we've got (pollution control) research programs going for every major solvent use we have."

A few other companies — including AT&T, Monsanto and Chevron — have belatedly joined 3M in recognizing that controlling pollution is more than an environmental gesture because it contributes to corporate efficiency, productivity and profitability.

Too many other firms, however, continue to deny that they contaminate the environment even when the need for waste reduction becomes critical.

"I know it sounds crazy, but I love shopping here."

Backyard farmers' opening day

BOSTON — There is no fanfare for this opening day. No organ waits its Star Spangled Banner over the turf that has been groomed so meticulously for this annual event.

Nevertheless the woman suits up into her old uniform. On her head is the beat-up cap that bears witness to summers past. On her hands are the gloves that weathered many winning years. Awaiting her is the trusty equipment assembled for this day: one well-worn spade, a hose, two-dozen tomato plants.

Walking out to the boxed mounds of dirt, like some pitcher in one of those romantic, golden-hued baseball movies, she says to herself quietly. Let the season begin.

The growing season had arrived at last.

The scene would have looked absurd to an outsider, unfamiliar with the ceremonies of her life. The woman in question is an urban dweller who spends most of her time in what they call the built environment. She lives where people have structured masses of brick and concrete. They make do with a skyline instead of a landscape.

More to the point, the woman has an indoor job. In the workplace, she cannot even open a window without throwing a chair through it. For months on end, the weather pattern remains constant: indoors. Her relationship to nature is pared down to its effect on traffic.

Even the food this woman eats comes from that other artificial environment, the world marketplace. In that un-natural exchange, raspberries fly in from Chile in January like misguided tourists. Apples fall onto Northern winter plates all the way from New Zealand summers. Oranges full of Florida sunshine feed New England dank longings.

There are no seasons in this marketplace. There are only prices, as if nature itself could be bought off.

Moreover, let us be frank about it, the playing turf that she approaches so ceremoniously this day is not impressive. This is not the stuff of farming. On nature's quarter acre, she has cut back to four rectangles of earth that add up to no more than a six-by-eight rug of growing space. A crop that once spread a plague of ratatouille across the larders of her friends is now reduced to tomato basics: Beefsteaks and Big Girls.

Nevertheless, this rite of planting and growing has come to occupy an emotional space in inverse proportion to its shrinking geometry. This is indeed the stuff of ceremony. But it's not a rite of passage, it's a rite of connection.

What opening day attests to is a tiny, nearly symbolic and yet tenacious, tie to nature. A tie that she shares with every apartment dweller who ever put a cherry tomato pot on the fire escape, every vegetable gardener who ever costed out the home-grown produce at $1 a pepper.

Digging holes for seedlings, she thinks of a mantra fitting for gardeners. Plant, to remember that things do not just appear in the refrigerator. They grow, slowly. Plant, to repair the nearly severed umbilical cord with the natural world. Plant, to keep the pact of mutual caretaking with nature.

To the woman in her uniform, that pact with nature seems especially fragile this year. Opening day had been postponed on account of weather. May was called off on account of weather. The cold here, the floods in the South, were attributed by some to changing patterns produced by pollution. Weather itself suddenly seemed unnatural.

Have we at last conquered nature? Is it behaving like all subjugated peoples: rebellious?

So this urban gardener, kneeling in an altar-size plot pays homage with her spade. When the enemy was Germany, spaces like hers were called Victory Gardens. When the enemy is in the environment, the target is different. Victory over alienation. Here is the earth that feeds us.

Croached in a position that would appall her physical therapist, she gently separates the tomato seedlings. She has chosen this plant because, of all the species, tomatoes have most ferociously rejected mass production by withholding flavor from the marketplace. Carefully she mounds the dirt around the roots.

When the job is done, the woman removes her gloves and surveys the land, like a star of opening day watching a ball go over the wall. The small plants are straight in their rows. The sun is strong, the omens are right. In a most private sort of pride, she tips her old hat to them. Season's Greetings.

What opening day attests to is a tiny tie to nature.

EPA black humor misses the mark

WASHINGTON — An attempt by the Environmental Protection Agency to humor Americans into protecting the planet has backfired. The media campaign called "How to Destroy the Earth" used reverse psychology to pass along environmental tips. But there was a small problem. Many of the tips were wrong, and a few of them were too radical for the Bush-era EPA to endorse.

The embarrassed EPA has withdrawn some of the ads and put out a story that minor tinkering had to be done. The good news is that a well-meaning Boston ad man, Steve Cosmopolos, donated $1 million worth of his creative time and energy to come up with the campaign, so the EPA has only wasted $18,000 of your money in production costs. Cosmopolos, who just wanted to do his bit for the environment, is still scratching his head, wondering why none of the EPA scientists or bureaucrats caught the mistakes before they went out on the air. The campaign answers the question, "How to destroy the Earth," with some tongue-in-cheek suggestions:

- "Pour used motor oil into the ground."
- "Leave the lights on, especially when you're not there."
- "Drive everywhere. Never walk, ride your bike or take public transportation."

The EPA didn't mind saying those were environmental no-nos. But EPA officials drew the line when Cosmopolos threw in this suggestion for destroying the Earth: "Use disposable diapers." Apparently the EPA hasn't noticed that the environmentally correct baby is swathed in cloth these days. EPA officials say there is still an ongoing debate about whether wasting water to clean cloth diapers is a worse offense than throwing them away.

Some other offenses implied in the ads ran afoul of current EPA thinking:

- Styrofoam cups are deadly to marine life. The EPA says that ain't necessarily so.
- Plastics are toxic when incinerated. That position contradicts what the EPA has said on the record.
- Plastics aren't recyclable. Wrong again. Some are and some aren't.

Sources in the EPA told us that no one checked the campaign with the agency's environmental experts before it was produced. Once the ads hit the air in a test area in New England, the bloopers loomed large. But that was no problem for the resourceful EPA. Our associate Tim Warner has obtained an internal EPA memo on how to ease the ads out of circulation without creating a stir.

The memo, written by the EPA's senior public affairs official Lewis Crampton, suggests that the makeover be handled in the Boston offices of the EPA so it won't look like Washington is censoring the ads. Dow Chemical gave Crampton a perfect excuse to withdraw the ads when the company complained about the use of its trademark, "Styrofoam." Crampton suggests using that as an excuse to the media for recalling the ads. "Since we are committing truth here, I don't see any problems as long as we work quickly," Crampton wrote. He told us he was not "trying to feed the press a line here," but that he was merely trying to "manage the issue."

Then Crampton added another excuse for recalling the ads — the fear that some people are too stupid to get the joke. "I think it's a legitimate question to ask whether this campaign will work in rural or metropolitan areas of the country where people are a little less literate," Crampton told us.

The EPA has only wasted $18,000 of your money in production costs.

NATIONAL BRIEFS

Senate refuses to shorten crime debate

WASHINGTON — The Senate refused to end debate and force a final vote on an anti-crime bill that includes proposals for an expanded federal death penalty and a ban on military-style assault weapons.

The Senate voted 54-37 Tuesday to limit debate — six votes short of the 60 required to impose so-called cloture — and Senate Democratic leader George Mitchell ordered a second vote Thursday.

The failure to end debate left the Senate, which began considering the bill May 21, facing a determined stalling campaign by opponents of the ban on assault weapons and a staggering backlog of 246 amendments.

Family backs Alzheimer's patient suicide

FORTLAND, Ore. — The husband of a woman who killed herself on a doctor's "suicide machine" quoted her final statement as saying she didn't want to put her family "through the agony" of Alzheimer's disease.

Janet Adkins, 54, committed suicide Monday with the assistance of Dr. Jack Kevorkian, 62, a retired Royal Oak, Mich., pathologist who hooked her to a "suicide machine" he created that injected potassium chloride into her veins.

Adkin's husband Ronald, 57, said Tuesday that his wife was a woman who "loved life." He said she was an adventurer who had climbed Mount Hood, traveled to the Himalayas, flown in hot-air balloons and spoke French.

Court: Poor schools need more money

TRENTON, N.J. — In ruling that the state must spend hundreds of millions of dollars more for aid to urban schools, the New Jersey Supreme Court recognized the special problems of children trapped in declining cities, the lawyer who argued the case said.

Marilyn Morheuser, a lawyer for the Education Law Center in Newark, called the high court's opinion "a decision unlike any other."

The opinion handed down Tuesday followed similar action in the past year by the Kentucky and Texas supreme courts.

Trump adviser predicted empire's fall

NEW YORK — Stock analyst Marvin Roffman, fired when he dared to question Donald Trump's wisdom in opening the opulent Taj Mahal casino, could wind up benefiting from the very woes he predicted.

Trump is negotiating with his bankers to restructure his assets and could be forced to give up big chunks of his real estate and casino empire to ease a critical cash shortage.

Among his biggest problems, analysts say, is the extravagant Taj Mahal, which opened April 1 to much fanfare but is failing to generate enough cash to allay lenders' fears about Trump's ability to meet his long-term obligations.

Black, woman win big but face tough races

By JOSEPH MIANOWANY
UPI Political Writer

Former mayors Dianne Feinstein and Harvey Gantt scored a pair of historic firsts for women and blacks by easily winning the Democratic nominations for governor in California and senator in North Carolina, but both face tougher odds in the general election.

Highlighting the busiest primary day of the year thus far, Feinstein, who made her gender a campaign issue, Tuesday became the first woman to capture a major party gubernatorial nomination in the Golden State. Gantt became the first black to win nomination to any major office in the Tarheel State.

However, both Feinstein, a former mayor of San Francisco, and Gantt, a former chief executive of Charlotte, N.C., now must contend with a pair of Republican opponents who have well-established political bases and have proven they can win statewide.

In California, GOP Sen. Pete Wilson, 56, a popular two-term federal lawmaker and former San Diego mayor, easily defeated token opposition Tuesday to capture the Republican gubernatorial nomination. If not a favorite to replace retiring Republican Gov. George Deukmejian, Wilson must at least be viewed by Feinstein as an extremely tough opponent.

And in North Carolina, Gantt will contend with three-term Republican Sen. Jesse Helms, who is one of the most outspoken conservatives in the country and popular at home.

Nonetheless, both Feinstein and Gantt were ecstatic Tuesday night and looking forward to doing battle with their Republican rivals.

Gorbachev goes from U.S. love to headaches at home

United Press International

MOSCOW — President Mikhail Gorbachev, leaving behind adoring crowds in the United States, returned home to challenges to his authority and a country beset by new ethnic violence and a crumbling economy.

Gorbachev was smiling when he and his wife, Raisa, stepped off their plane Tuesday night at the Moscow airport and were greeted by about a dozen members of the Politburo and the Presidential Council.

But while Gorbachev was meeting President Bush and thrilling admiring crowds during his travels around the United States and Canada, the officials left behind fought myriad battles in the Soviet Union.

At the top of the list of problems are the economy and growing nationalist tension.

The government's plan to move toward a market economy that would include price increases — officially announced just days before Gorbachev left for the summit — faces grave opposition that may doom it.

In the days after Gorbachev and Prime Minister Nikolai Ryzhkov spoke of a national referendum on the plan, it was given a resounding "no" vote by parliaments in two of the country's largest republics — the Ukraine and Byelorussia.

The huge Russian republic has indicated it may also reject the price increases.

In Russia, Gorbachev also must deal with the election of populist Boris Yeltsin as the effective president of the republic despite the fierce public opposition from the Soviet president.

Yeltsin, who was kicked out of his high Communist Party posts for criticizing what he called the slow pace of Gorbachev's reforms but made a remarkable political comeback based on popular support, says he is willing to work with Gorbachev now but it must be on good terms.

After his election as chairman of the Russian Parliament, Yeltsin outlined a plan for increased autonomy for the republic that may make the central government largely irrelevant.

Reading

Bible favorite among leaders

United Press International

EVANSTON, Ill. — A survey of 1,000 chief executive officers of major corporations and the presidents of 1,200 universities indicates half of them read up to two hours per day and the most widely read book is the Bible.

Of the respondents to the survey conducted by National-Louis University, 25 percent said the Bible was the book that most changed or influenced their lives, the school announced Tuesday.

Four percent cited "A Tale of Two Cities" by Charles Dickens; 2 percent cited "The Book of Mormon," and beyond that, no book was mentioned twice, the survey said.

National-Louis University President Orley Herron said of the wide range of book titles submitted, an overwhelming number of them dealt with the themes of man's triumph against adversity and social injustice.

Among the books cited were: "Atlas Shrugged" by Ayn Rand; "Walden" by Henry David Thoreau; "War and Peace" by Leo Tolstoy; "Moby Dick" by Herman Melville; "Profiles in Courage" by John F. Kennedy; "The Grapes of Wrath" by John Steinbeck; and "The Jungle" by Upton Sinclair.

"The results of this survey should send a strong message to students all across the country about how to emulate success," Herron said. "We found that America's leaders are passionate about reading and almost 50 percent of them devote from one to two hours a day reading."

"In this visual day and age, I find the results of our survey uplifting."

Sixty-seven percent of those surveyed said they read at least five hours per week and 12 percent said they sit with a book anywhere from 20 to 35 hours a week.

The leaders said they spend

Over the last decade bookstores have become glutted with self-help literature. "The Relaxation Response" and "On Death and Dying" are the two most frequently recommended by clinical psychologists.

18 percent of their time reading fiction, 34 percent reading non-fiction, 21 percent on magazines and 27 percent of their time reading newspapers.

When asked what book they would recommend to today's youth, 25 percent again said the Bible. Also receiving multiple recommendations were "Catcher in the Rye" by J.D. Salinger; "War and Peace"; "Huckleberry Finn" by Mark Twain and "The Red Badge of Courage" by Stephen Crane.

Nielsen seeks minority viewing data

United Press International

NEW YORK — Nielsen Media Research will expand its collecting and reporting of data to provide the advertising and television industries with a better picture of minority television audiences, it was announced Tuesday.

The news came after Nielsen, the leading provider of television audience measurement services, held a series of discussions with Tribune Entertainment and two ad agencies, Burrell and Unsworth, as well as other Nielsen customers in the black community.

Earlier this year, some members of the black community complained that Nielsen avoided areas that were predominantly black in its audience measurement. Nielsen denied this.

Starting in 1991, Nielsen will expand its monthly National Audience Demographic Report to include black households and about 20 black demographic categories.

Nielsen also will provide marketing information such as what percentage of a local market is black or Hispanic in its local market reports.

Nielsen proposes a National Black "Pocketpiece," similar to the one produced for the broadcast and cable networks and television syndicators.

The "Pocketpiece" is the weekly report of television performance used by buyers, sellers and programmers of television time. A National Black "Pocketpiece," if it receives enough client support to justify its startup, would provide ratings, share, household and demographic information on television viewing among black people.

William G. Jacobi, executive vice president, Nielsen Media Research, said in announcing the plans.

"These improvements are part of an on-going process by Nielsen to provide advertisers, their agencies and television programmers with the most accurate, reliable information about viewership among Afro-Americans, Hispanics and other ethnic minorities."

ACT honors children's TV programming

United Press International

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. — Action for Children's Television honored more than 20 television, cable and video programs for youngsters Tuesday, but deplored a dearth of diverse, quality offerings.

"That's the wonderful side of what's happening — there are people who care. There are those who support this kind of programming. The bad news is that they are like a very few stars lighting up a very dark sky," said ACT President Peggy Charren.

"It's never been worse," she said.

ACT, a national nonprofit organization that has worked for 22 years to promote diversity and limit commercial angles in children's television, planned to present the awards at a ceremony Wednesday. The event was dedicated to the memory of Muppets creator Jim Henson, who died last month of bacterial pneumonia.

"It's hard to think of children's television these days without remembering him," Charren said. "The world's children will continue to be educated by his material."

Among those programs cited by the group were Cable News Network's "CNN Newsroom," HBO's "Babar," Nickelodeon's quiz show "Make the Grade" and Pittsburgh public television station WQED's "Wonderworks."

For the first time in the 18-year history of the awards, no commercial television network series was honored, Charren said.

Hospitals' newborn costs jump

United Press International

ORLANDO — Crack cocaine babies and uninsured patients have pushed the cost of treating newborns up 28 percent in Central Florida and elsewhere, the chief of the state hospital cost review board said Tuesday.

The latest six-month study of the Health Care Cost Containment Board, which was released Tuesday as "The Patient's Guide Number 9 to Hospital Charges," revealed that the cost of treating newborns with problems rose 27.5 percent in Central Florida during the first six months of 1989, and 14.6 percent statewide.

James Bracher, executive director of the containment board, said one reason for the increase could be traced to babies born to crack addicts. "That may be the place where some of those babies may be," Bracher said.

But he said health care costs in Florida are more dramatically affected by a large number of uninsured workers and indigent patients who have no money to pay their bills.

"We have a special problem in Florida relating to indigent care," Bracher said. He also said employees in the service industry have the least amount of health insurance, because they cannot afford to pay $100 a month on a $5-an-hour income.

Other variables influencing rising costs include changing technology, local competition for patients and geographic location.

Storer cable television reveals plan for Lake Mary rate increase

By NICK PFEIFAU
Herald staff writer

LAKE MARY — Storer Cable Communications in Altamonte Springs has submitted a letter to Mayor Dick Fess and the Lake Mary City Commission informing them of Storer's intent to enact a rate increase next month for not only basic service, but premium services as well.

In the letter of intent, Jackson I. Hatten, management consultant for Storer, said, "In an effort to control rising cable rates, we have delayed this increase as long as possible. Unfortunately, it is necessary for us to change the current rates effective July 1, 1990."

Storer officials said this is the first increase in 17 months.

Basic subscriber fees will go from $17.45 to $18.45 per month beginning July 1. Hatten added, "We will continue to implement efficient cost-management policies in order to keep rates at the lowest levels possible and still provide our subscribers with the best programming and customer service available."

AFL-CIO wants national plan for health care

By KAYE PARR
United Press International

MIAMI BEACH — Congress should enact legislation to provide a national health care plan for all families and to ensure job security for striking workers, AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland said Tuesday.

"The crisis in health care is no less than any other," Kirkland told about 1,500 delegates at the Fifth Constitutional Convention of the Amalgamated Clothing and Textile Workers Union. "We need national health care reform."

Following the speech, Kirkland said the costs of health care is "getting totally out of control."

"And there is a concerted effort on the part of employers to put more of those costs on the workers, in the form of fewer benefits and higher deductibles," he said.

As many as 37 million Americans are without health care insurance, and the issue has been the major stumbling block in negotiations between about 80 percent of striking workers and their employers, Kirkland told the delegates.

"There is a growing public consciousness about the problem, and it requires legislative action," he said.

Earlier, the Rev. Jesse Jackson, a presidential candidate in 1984 and 1988, addressed the delegates and also called for a national health care plan.

"It will cost less for preventive health care than after the fact," he said.

The AFL-CIO has not framed specific legislation on health care, but is launching a public education advertising campaign and conducting public hearings on the issue this fall, said Kirkland, who received a standing ovation, chants and cheers from union members.

A law that would provide job security for striking workers also will be pushed hard by the AFL-CIO this year, he said.

"Labor laws go a long way to nullify the right of collective bargaining," Kirkland said. "Employers have been advertising for scab workers before negotiations even take place as a method of intimidation."

The union is proposing a law "to restore the right to strike without fear of losing your job," Kirkland told the delegates. "That basic right — the very heart of freedom of association — is meaningless if employers can hire scabs."

Although Kirkland said striking workers at Eastern Airlines and Greyhound have not won their labor battles, they are making some progress.

"They have not won their objective," he said. "And we will continue our steadfast support. But there has been no victory for (Eastern Chairman) Frank Lorenzo and no victory for the management of Greyhound, either."

Lorenzo was considered an enemy by thousands of machinists, pilots and flight attendants who struck the carrier in March 1989, forcing the airline to file for Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection later that month. Machinists remain on strike.

Lorenzo has since been stripped of his responsibilities as head of Eastern by a U.S. bankruptcy judge and replaced by a court-appointed trustee.

"We have proved that this company was being run into the ground for the profit of one man," Kirkland said. "Lorenzo persistently and regularly lied. It took too long for the bankruptcy judge to realize that he had run out of credibility."

Organized labor is gaining ground in public opinion polls, and unions still will prevail over big corporations interested only in gaining profit, Kirkland said. "Let there be no doubt about our capacity and our conviction," he told delegates. "There is evidence that labor has turned the corner and will continue to make life better for the American family."

Schools find recruitment a rough road

By VICKI DeSORMIER
Herald Staff Writer

SANFORD — The Seminole County school district is still trying, often unsuccessfully, to attract females and minorities to many upper level academic classrooms, according to school officials.

They have also failed, in most cases, to bring males into classes that have traditionally been the domain of females, the officials said.

All school districts are required to work toward equity in class enrollments.

The underrepresentation of blacks in upper level math classes has been a problem for many years in the Seminole County school district, as elsewhere.

Recruiting minority youngsters at the school level proved less than successful in the past. Last year, the district appealed to churches in the black community to try to encourage their parishioners to enroll in the higher level classes. They also instituted a plan to give awards every nine weeks to the students who have the most improved grades over the grading period.

Neither plan has produced the desired results.

"There has been no evidence of success," said Clem Boyer, district coordinator of mathematics. "We don't know why yet, but it hasn't been working."

Boyer and his staff have modified their plan to include getting the top performing students in the upper level classes to go into the school and recruit minority students. They also plan to employ the school newspaper to help extol the virtues of the classes.

There have been problems recruiting students to other areas as well.

Home economics classes, for example, have never attracted many young men to their rosters.

Despite a district level memorandum to teachers and guidance personnel encouraging them to recruit males and a video that was produced to be shown to all students who show an aptitude for the subject, males are still not enrolling in home economics classes.

Fotopoulos wins murder trial change of venue

United Press International

DAYTONA BEACH — A judge has ordered the trial of counterfeitster Konstantin Fotopoulos, who is charged with murdering two people and trying to have his wife killed, moved out of Volusia County.

Volusia County Circuit Judge James Foxman granted a change of venue motion by Konstantin Fotopoulos, 30.

He is charged with two counts of first-degree murder and in a murder-for-hire plot against his wife that left her wounded but alive.

Foxman ruled Monday that widespread news coverage about the case made it impossible for Fotopoulos to receive a fair trial in Volusia County, where he lives.

Foxman did not name a new site for the trial, which is scheduled for Aug. 6, but he did lift a gag order that had banned everyone associated with the case from discussion

Video store owner charged with obscenity

United Press International

DAYTONA BEACH — Another video store owner in the district of State Attorney John Tanner has been arrested on charges of distributing obscene videotapes, officials said Tuesday.

Barry Fredlich, owner of the Granada Video Store in Ormond Beach, is charged with three misdemeanor counts of distributing pornography. And, as in at least two other cases in the district, the arrest came after he had demanded the tapes be returned.

Fredlich said early Tuesday evening that he had not received word of the charges, which were filed in the Volusia County clerk's office Friday but not disclosed until Tuesday.

He said he found it "very interesting" that he was not charged until after he held a press conference Friday to announce he had filed a federal suit against Tanner's office seeking return of his tapes.

He said his filing in Orlando federal court on Thursday also requested an injunction to keep Tanner from confiscating other tapes and records in the district.

"The chilling effect and intimidation and coercion marches on in Volusia County," he said. "I don't get this injunction to show this guy is stepping way over his bounds there is something wrong with this system."

Tanner could not be reached for comment on the federal suit against his office, which involves the seizure of the movies "Deep Throat," "The Devil in Miss Jones I" and "The Devil in Miss Jones II."

Tanner has been involved in a crackdown against pornography in Volusia, St. Johns, Flagler and Putnam counties since a jury in DeLand ruled in April that several videotapes and recordings were obscene.

The decision sought by Tanner, made it a felony to distribute the material to minors and a misdemeanor to sell or rent the material to adults. He maintains pornography causes people to commit serious crimes such as rape.

In other similar cases, Glenn Rose, owner of Mega Movies in Daytona, and Daniel Lee Miltstead, owner of Stardust Videos in South Daytona, have been charged with misdemeanor counts of obscenity after demanding the return of tapes confiscated by investigators for Tanner's office.

Marilyn Quayle calls campaign 'ugly chapter'

United Press International

WASHINGTON — Marilyn Quayle complained the 1988 campaign that often focused on her husband's qualifications to be vice president was an "ugly chapter in journalism and an ugly chapter in my life."

"1988 was a baptism of fire for the Quayles," she told a National Press Club luncheon Tuesday. "Before it was over, I felt at least a little singed. I hurt reading stories or seeing reports about a man bearing almost no resemblance to the one I love deeply."

At times, she said in prepared remarks, "I felt misunderstood, misrepresented, scorned, angry and terribly vulnerable."

But the wife of Vice President Dan Quayle told reporters she did not want to dwell on the past.

Aspirin can relieve osteoarthritis pain

DEAR DR. GOTT: I'm a 70-year old female with osteoarthritis. I take aspirin, Bufferin or Naprin yet am constantly concerned about the side effects of these drugs. What can you advise?

DEAR READER: Osteoarthritis, the gradual wearing down and thinning of joint surfaces, appears to be related to age. It is the most common form of arthritis in the elderly and causes stiffness, pain, limitation of motion and characteristic hard nodules around joints.

The symptoms of osteoarthritis are almost always helped by aspirin, ibuprofen or prescription drugs, such as Motrin or Indocin. These medicines are usually well-tolerated by patients, especially if they are taken with meals, food or antacids. The major side effect of anti-inflammatories is their tendency to irritate the stomach lining, eventually causing bleeding from gastritis or peptic ulcers. You are justified in being concerned about this serious side effect. However, in the absence of heartburn, gas and indigestion, you are probably not damaging your health by taking the medicine, under your doctor's supervision.

DEAR DR. GOTT: I've been diagnosed with carpal tunnel syndrome. I took over-the-counter aspirin for quite a period of time and recently switched to vitamin B-6, alfalfa tablets, vitamin B complex and some cod-liver oil capsules. I know that I might eventually need surgery, but I've heard it is not too successful, and the results are not long-lasting. Can you give me your comments?

DEAR READER: The nerves in the hands, which spread through the wrists in channels or compartments, are held in place by supporting structures, including bands of tissue, that encircle the wrists. For unknown reasons, these bands sometimes swell, putting pressure on the nerves and causing tingling, numbness and pain in the hands. This is carpal tunnel syndrome.

There are many folk remedies that proponents claim, will reduce swelling and relieve symptoms of the syndrome.

WIN AT BRIDGE

By James Jacoby

The person making a preemptive bid should hold his peace thereafter. Since the preemptor has described a hand with a long suit and limited defensive strength, it is right that his partner should decide whether a sacrifice is in order should the opponents bid a game. This concept is particularly crucial after a weak two-bid, showing a six-card suit and 6-10 high-card points. Despite all this, today's South allowed himself to be hoodwinked by favorable vulnerability into taking a phantom sacrifice. West simply assumed that his partner's raise to four hearts was based on having a minor-suit ace, and hoped that this would be enough to beat four spades. He was right. He was right. After he took the ace of hearts, the king and a diamond got him a ruff, so South was down one even before he played K-A of spades, picking up the queen. Poor North had to bite his tongue. He had bid three spades in the hope that East-West would foolishly bid four hearts, which he intended to double.

Then South demoralized his strategy by bidding on in violation of the principle governing pre-empts. Best defense against four hearts doubled is K-A of spades and then a club back for two club tricks. South ruffing the third club. Another spade lets North make the nine of hearts, and he will still score the heart king for 1100. Instead South was minus 100. He must have thought he was playing with an empty chair for a partner. In this case, to find that empty chair all he had to do was look in a mirror.

HOROSCOPE

By Bernice Bede Osol YOUR BIRTHDAY June 7, 1990

A loyal friend who has clout in several areas will seek a closer involvement with you in the year ahead. This could result in joint ventures in two exciting enterprises.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) You may be privy to some confidential information today that can be used to your advantage. Its effects could be lessened, however, if you talk about it to the wrong people. Trying to patch up a broken romance? The Astro-Graph Matchmaker can help you to understand what to do to make the relationship work. Mail $2 to Matchmaker, P.O. Box 91428, Cleveland, OH 44101-3428.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Try to associate with friends today whose views and objectives closely parallel your own. Valuable information could be exchanged through frank discussions.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) What you do today you are likely to do quite well, especially if you're confronted by a challenge that you can work out in front of an appreciative audience.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) It's important you treat team efforts seriously today whether they be in sports or business. Your associates will be playing to win and they'll expect you to do the same.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) If you've been anxious to get the consent of your mate about a change you'd like to make, this is a good day to broach the subject. Spell out all the details, even the unattractive ones.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) This should be a rather successful day for you, because you'll not only be able to conceive sound ideas, you'll also know how to implement them to improve present conditions.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Small gains have a way of adding up into something substantial, so don't be discouraged today if returns aren't to your expectations. Consistency will prove to be more important.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Spontaneous involvements aren't likely to be the ones that will afford you the greatest pleasure today. You're likely to find more enjoyment from activities which have been well planned.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Much of value can be learned today by observing how a successful friend handles relationships. Your pal's techniques can be tailored to you.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) You'll be welcomed today if you decide to visit an old friend without an invitation. This particular pal will be equally as glad to see you as you will him/her.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Small factors could have more significance than usual today in your financial and commercial dealings. Pennies you make or save in the present could be compounded into dollars in the future.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Your thoughts and suggestions will have a strong constructive impact on people with whom you'll be involved today, even though you may not be fully aware that your words carry so much weight.
