George Corley Wallace, governor of Alabama, was born Aug. 25, 1919, the son of Alabama farmers. He was graduated from the University of Alabama Law School in 1942, and served in the Army Air Force in World War II. He was assistant Alabama attorney general, 1946-47, and served in the state's Legislature, 1947-53. Elected governor in 1962, he tried the next year to block desegregation of the University of Alabama. His wife Lurleen became governor in 1966, but died two years later. As 1968 third-party presidential candidate Wallace garnered nearly 10 million popular votes and 45 electoral votes, campaigning against Vietnam War protesters, liberals, integrationists and Washington "bureaucrats." He was reelected governor in 1970 and 1974. During the 1972 campaign for the Democratic nomination, Wallace piled up strong vote totals in Midwest and Southern primaries, but was shot and partially paralyzed May 15. He then withdrew from the

U.N. Fails On Mideast

Nations Security Council has been climaxed in a way that could have been anticipated. With the Palestine Liberation Organization taking part, and with Israel boycotting the session, the council came up with a resolution so weighted in favor of the PLO concept of where justice lies that the United States could only veto it.

The United States tried and failed to advance the idea that Palestian national interests could be made compatible with the continued existence of Israel. The PLO refused to bend in its demand for support of a new "independent state in Palestine" based on "indienable national rights" of Palestinians, coupled with a demand for Israeli withdrawal from all Arab territories occupied

Since nations supporting the PLO know that such a position is wholly unacceptable to Israel, and could never serve as a basis for negotiations, we have to assume that they offered the resolution primarily for propaganda purposes. The Arab strategy at this point appears to be one of trying to endow the PLO and its ambition to dismember the Israeli state as much as possible in its defense of Whatever gains the PLO might have made in the way the Security Council exercise unfolded were surely diminished by what was happening at the same time in Lebanon. By loosing its troops to help the Lebanese Moslems fight the Christian Phalangists in that war of religious and political rivalry, the PLO gave no stirring example of how Palestinians and Jews might be able to share power in the kind of non-sectarian Palestinian state the PLO likes to talk about.

While the Lebanese crisis seems to have cooled for the time being, that touch-and-go sicuation on Israel's nothern border only demonstrates how easily a general Middle East war could be reignited. The Security Council did nothing to make peace in Lebanon and, as it turned out, has done nothing to bring israel and the Palestinians closer to an understanding.

It is in the familiar atmosphere of no-war, nopeace that Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin began a U. S. visit that will serve to reemphasize U.S.-Israeli ties, while President Ford hints at a forthcoming trip to the Middle East. The enigma still confronting all parties is how to bridge the barrier that now prevents any fruitful discussion about the fate of displace Palestinians in which both Israeli and Arab interests are given equal weight. Diplomacy at the presidential level may offer the only hope of breaking the dangerous stalemate which the Security Council has failed to

The Last Word?

The death penalty supposedly was wiped out by a 1972 decision of the U. S. Supreme Court, but the language of the And 35 states have enacted new laws conforming to what the many legislatures believe the justices said.

The 1972 ruling stated that the existing capital punishment laws gave judges and juries too much latitude in determining which individuals would die and which would live. Subsequent laws make the death penalty mandatory for specific crimes or set guidelines to be followed in consideration of mitigating

The new laws remain untested, although more than 400 men and women are now on death row with appeals in various stages

The Supreme Court will hear arguments in late March on appeals from five states involving six convicted murderers. This year, presumably, the final word will be handed down on whether the death penalty is cruel and unusual punishment or a justified deterrent to wanton violence.

Stupidity Of Airing Intelligence

through the kind of public airing of its intelligence apparatus as the United States has in the past few months. Such a thing would be totally unimaginable in the Soviet Union, and not much more conceivable even in the European

There is no question that in the kind of world we live in, the U.S. must maintain an effective. dependable - and secure - intelligence system. But while the Congress, the administration and the CIA ponder just how this is to be accomplished, while at the same time giving the people, through their representatives, better oversight and control over the secret undertakings of their government than they have hitherto had, it is essential that we keep this whole matter of intelligence in perspective. The best intelligence apparatus in the world is utterly useless if those empowered to act upon the information it provides fail to do so, or wish it away, or distort it to make it conform to desired policy or preconceived notions. Our own recent history provides more than a few examples of this.

Before World War II, the U.S. possessed that dream of all espionage agents, the ability to read the enemy's diplomatic code; in this case the potential enemy was Japan. Yet during the latter days of 1941, when it was

All Alone And Lonely

A: You're not alone in that feeling, by any means! Loneliness is said to be one of the most serious illnesses in today's world. From my dealings with many people. I have come to believe loneliness is probably our greatest sickness.

Singer Kris Kristofferson said, "If I could cure only one disease, it would not be cancer - it would be loneliness." We rub shoulders with people every day, yet we often feel a crushing oneliness. Wives say, "My husband is a mystery to me. He never really communicates." Husbands say, "I can't talk to my wife. because she doesn't understand me."

When you feel understood by one person, you are no longer alone. But you can be understood only as you reveal your real self is you fear other people, you fear being misunderstood, you fear being judged. And so you protect yourself by putting up a wall and

What, then, can you do? The main thing is to break out of yourself, because as you center in on self, you feel more and more solated. You can break out of the prison of self-concern by being deeply concerned for someone else. It will work because it is a great spiritual law under which we live.

What you give, you receive. You need friendship, so give ourself to another person. He's probably as lonely as you are. You can free him from his fear and allow him to open up by your opening up to him first. . . by telling him about your feelings. Yes, it does take courage to expose your deep feelings. But when you do this, you are pulling down your wall of self-protection.

As your friend unburdens himself, try to understand him serve the Navy men and their Rev. Marvin G. Buckner was in God's eternal law of supply, will come back to you multiplied in

People smile and turn around to look at them as they run down the street hand in hand. For this moment they are carefree with the exuberance of youth, with seemingly endless tomorrows stretching before them. But, life being what it is, there comes an end to this sort of thing. Just now they are in love. If they stay in love, if they marry, responsibilities will follow. If their love subsides, there will be the pain of separation . . . and perhaps a little heartbreak. Whatever happens there will be good times and bad.

Somewhere along the line they will need more than themselves. All of us do! If they have found the Church they will be lucky. Incidentally - have you found the Church?
