Teenager survives plane crash

DAHLONEGA, Ga. — A 14-year-old girl crawled away from the burning wreckage of a small plane and waited 15 hours near the bodies of four family members for a rescue squad to find her, authorities said.

"That little girl — she's real lucky just to be alive," Lumpkin County Sheriff Randy Pruitt said Sunday.

The girl, hospitalized in serious condition with a broken shoulder, was found shortly after 12:30 a.m. Sunday, covered with leaves to keep warm in the mountain cold. She was clad in a T-shirt and shorts.

"She was calling out for help and it was real faint in the background," said Lt. Lt. David White of the Civil Air Patrol in Atlanta. "We heard it off in the distance. We didn't think we were hearing anything at all."

Shuttle repairs progressing

CAPE CANAVERAL — Technicians worked through the weekend to replace a damaged fuel line and a faulty pump aboard the grounded shuttle Atlantis to ready the ship for a second launch try around the end of the week.

While NASA managers were not expected to set a new target date until after a series of briefings Monday, sources said if the repair work continued to go well, Atlantis could be ready for a second launch attempt at 1:42 p.m. EDT Friday, exactly one week after the crew's first launch try ended in failure.

Atlantis was grounded last Friday by a combination of frustrating technical glitches just 31 seconds before the ship's boosters were to have ignited to kick off the year's second shuttle flight, a showcase mission to launch a science probe to Venus.

The launch delay was blamed on a faulty liquid hydrogen pump in Atlantis' engine compartment, which indirectly led to damage to a 4-inch hydrogen fuel line running between the shuttle and its external tank. Both problems must be fixed before Atlantis can be cleared for a second launch try.

Easy Goer shines in Derby field

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — Rodney Dangerfield would feel right at home in the stakes barns on Churchill Downs' backstretch, where about a dozen accomplished Kentucky Derby horses are finding it difficult to get respect.

Because of the vastly superior credentials of 1988 2-year-old champion Easy Goer and, to a lesser degree, of Sunday Silence and Houston, horses like once-beaten Faultless Ensign and Remington Park Derby victor Clever Trevor are being brushed off as rainbow chasers.

It could be that at least a few of them are getting short shrift, that they are being unfairly compared to one of those "once-in-a-lifetime" horses.

Hank Allen, trainer of Maryland stakes winner Northern Wolf, raised that possibility Sunday when he was asked if it was his colt's misfortune to be part of Easy Goer's sophomore class.

"Was it unfortunate that Foreign was a 3-year-old in the same year as Secretariat?" Allen replied. "He came around to be a great horse."

SANFORD — Commissioners leaving the Sanford Housing Authority at the end of next month say they haven't received the public support or recognition they deserve.

"If the people who appoint you won't support you, then people aren't going to mess with serving on the board authority," Chairman Alexander Wynn said.

"When one gives time and effort to any of the boards without remuneration, I feel that he should be afforded the greatest respect," Wynn said in a letter to Mayor Bettye Smith.

Wynn asked the mayor in his letter if his replacement was a "personal vendetta because of my position on many controversial housing authority issues."

Wynn criticized city commissioners for failing to contact him about serving another term. He said that lack of support keeps other citizens from wanting to serve on the authority commission.

Housing authority commissioners should be asked if they wish to serve another term, Wynn said instead of reading in newspapers they have been replaced.

City Commissioner A.A. McClellan said, "I don't make it a point to go search out these individuals to find out if they want to serve. People who want to serve on these boards contact me and I satisfy myself that they are competent to serve."

In a letter to Smith last week, Commissioner Bob Ball Sr. complained that housing authority commissioners are unfairly ridiculed for their contributions to the board. He said in the letter he would not serve a second term if appointed.

"It has become apparent to me that I cannot continue to serve as a Commissioner and suffer the sacrifices to both personal dignity and to my business," Ball said in the letter.

Ball later said, "Unfortunately, it takes three or four years to get a grasp of things. By that time you're either burned out or the city commission votes you out."

The city commission last week named replacements for Ball, Wynn and Robert Fraizer Jr., whose terms expire May 20. Shirley Allen, Jim Valethon and Wain Cummings were unanimously approved for appointment without discussion.

Newcomers face challenges

SANFORD — The Sanford Housing Authority will welcome three new commissioners at the end of May.

The city commission last week voted to name commissioners as replacements for three board members up for reappointment. The new faces will join Commissioners Terri Buratti and Alberta Detreville during the authority annual meeting May 20.

During telephone interviews, the three appointees seemed undaunted by controversy surrounding the agency. Here is what they have to say:

• Shirley Allen, program supervisor of special education in Seminole County schools, said she has not decided if she will take the commission seat assigned to her but is leaning toward acceptance.

"Right now my plan is to do it, but I need to sit down with someone and see what my role would be," Allen said.

She said she was not intimidated by the housing authority's controversial image. It's time that everybody find out what the standard objective is and work toward it and get out of the business of making headlines," she said.

• City Commissioner Whitley Eickstein nominated the 49-year-old Sanford native to fill the seat created when Bob Ball Sr. refused to serve again.

Working to keep graduation celebrations safe

By VICKI DEBOURME
Herald staff writer

Wild graduation celebrations leading to disasters on the road have led parents in some places to prohibit student parties for fear of alcohol or drug abuse and the resulting accidents.

"Traditionally," said Major Robert Kirby of the Florida Highway Patrol, "this has been the worst time of year for students in auto accidents."

Several years ago, the Florida Highway Patrol, in cooperation with individual schools, began a program called Project Graduation. The goal of the project is to help students enjoy a good time in a drug- and alcohol-free environment.

First, the FHP offers a free 50-minute educational program detailing some of the horrors of alcohol- and drug-related auto crashes.

"It's pretty ugly," Kirby said. "But it gets their attention."

Once the lessons have been presented, the fun can begin.

County building official accepts lower position

By J. MARK CULBERTSON
Herald staff writer

SANFORD — Bill Culbertson, Seminole County building official, has stepped down to the deputy official's job one year after his appointment.

The county began advertising for a new director last week to replace Culbertson, 59.

"There is a negative, personal side to it," Culbertson said, without elaboration. "But there are some pluses. It will be a little easier on me. This job had a lot of pressure."

Culbertson will continue as director of the Seminole County Building Department until a new building official is hired. He also will continue to receive his yearly $33,924 salary, although he did not receive a raise during his annual performance review last month.

The county will accept applications until May 26.

Turning trash into cash helps local charities

LAKE MARY — The recycling center located near the 7-Eleven convenience store in the Shoppes of Lake Mary has been a hit.

Since its opening last December, the center, as of yesterday, has received 34,264 pounds of wastepaper, 10,643 pounds of glass and plastics, 502 pounds of aluminum cans and 348 pounds of steel cans. Larry Lucas, who established the center, said yesterday they also have received a "sack of feed, ocean crab and two pairs of men's trousers."

"I don't know what to do about the trousers. They weren't my size unfortunately," Lucas joked.

Lucas said he is pleased with the community's response to the drop-off center.

"It appears the public has widely accepted it. We've doubled here in about a month. So it's really on the move," he said.

Recyclable materials accepted at the 24-hour center include waste paper (no magazines or phone books), aluminum cans, clear glass, colored glass and plastics.

Kokomo Tool Company Inc. of Sanford and Southeast Recycling Corp. of Orlando buys the recyclable material and the money goes into a special fund set up by the Lake Mary Chamber of Commerce for charities in the Lake Mary area. So far, the chamber has collected about $361.70. For aluminum cans, the chamber receives 50 cents a pound; for glass and plastics, one

Two Lotto winners to share $10 million

TALLAHASSEE — Two winning tickets worth an estimated $5 million apiece were sold in this week's Lotto game, Florida Lottery officials announced Sunday.

The tickets were sold in Miami and Juno Beach, lottery officials said. By midday Sunday, none of the winners had come forward.

The lucky ticket holders will share a jackpot estimated at $10 million. The exact amount of the jackpot won't be known until Monday.

The winning numbers in this week's drawing were 14, 17, 27, 36, 39 and 46.

Lottery officials said another 392 tickets matched five out of six of those numbers to win a cash prize of $3,424 each.

Swamp fire declared under control

TAYLOR — A swamp fire that charred 13,000 acres of north Florida terrain, including portions of the Osceola National Forest was declared under control Sunday, but fire officials said crews would have to continue working today and into the week.

About 200 firefighters battled the fire near the Georgia border Sunday and reported no open flame, although some spots in the swampy terrain remained extremely hot and winds remained a threat.

Port navigation bill advances

TALLAHASSEE — Opponents of a bill governing how ships enter and leave Florida ports have run into opposition from professionals who pilot the vessels, but the bill has won legislative committee approval.

The bill would exempt a gambling vessel operating out of Panama City from requirements that a state-licensed harbor pilot be used as a shipper or exits state ports.

The Florida Department of Professional Regulation and the Florida State Pilots Association opposed the bill, contending that as written it exempts hundreds of foreign-flag oil tankers that regularly visit Florida ports.

More prisoners granted early release

TALLAHASSEE — The state Department of Corrections planned to grant early release Friday to 225 state inmates, the second group to be released ahead of schedule this week.

Corrections officials said they were forced to release the inmates in order to remain within a court-ordered limit on prison population.

They said 50 of the prisoners scheduled for release Friday were under retainer from other agencies and will just be transferred to other jails.

Prison health conditions remain lacking

TALLAHASSEE — Health care within the state prison system has improved but much more still needs to be done, according to a panel of state corrections officials.

The supplemental report is a follow-up to one issued in December 1987. It said cost effectiveness, overall diagnostic procedures and other programs have been improved since the first report.

But it also said the system's budgeting and expenditure reporting still is fragmented and in need of more coordination. It also called for voluntary screening of inmates within 90 days of release for acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

Man survives parking garage plunge

TALLAHASSEE — An 89-year-old Sarasota man was in satisfactory condition at a hospital after surviving a three-story plunge in his car from a downtown parking garage.

Police said Harold Weegham backed his 1984 Cadillac El Dorado over the wall of a parking garage and the vehicle fell more than 100 feet, landing on its top.

They said his only complaint was of some back pain.

Investigators said Weegham was trying to get out of a parking spot when he twice backed into a truck and then went over the 2-foot-high retaining wall.

First new guests chosen at Disney park

LAKE BUENA VISTA — The Walt Disney-MGM Studios Theme Park opened today near shortly after Disney Company Chairman Michael Eisner and comedian Bob Hope selected a family of four as the park's first guests.

Eisner and Hope scanned the crowd of several hundred that began forming before dawn in front of Disney's newest attraction, then selected Allan and Mary Gutierrez and their two daughters, Dawn, 14, and Gina, 16, from York, Pa.

They stood alongside Disney officials and Mickey and Minnie Mouse and proclaimed, "Lights, Camera, Action," to open the new theme park.

The family had been waiting to enter the park since 2 a.m., said Eisner.

Shuttle repairs progressing

United Press International

CAPE CANAVERAL — Technicians worked through the weekend to replace a damaged fuel line and a faulty pump aboard the grounded shuttle Atlantis to ready the ship for a second launch try around the end of the week.

While NASA managers were not expected to set a new target date until after a series of briefings Monday, sources said if the repair work continued to go well Atlantis could be ready for a second launch attempt at 1:42 p.m. EDT Friday, exactly one week after the crew's first launch try ended in failure.

Atlantis was grounded last Friday by a combination of frustrating technical glitches just 31 seconds before the ship's boosters were to have ignited to kick off the year's second shuttle flight, a showpiece mission to launch a science probe to Venus.

The launch delay was blamed on a faulty liquid hydrogen pump in Atlantis's engine compartment, which indirectly led to damage to a 4-inch hydrogen fuel line running between the shuttle and its external tank. Both problems must be fixed before Atlantis can be cleared for a second launch try.

NASA spokeswoman Lisa Malone said Sunday that technicians opened the shuttle's cramped engine room late Saturday and that the suspect pump was expected to be replaced early today. Engineers initially debated removing all three pumps, but Malone said that plan had been ruled out.

The damaged fuel line was scheduled to come out sometime Monday as well and preliminary schedules indicated Atlantis could be ready for the start of another countdown by Wednesday.

Atlantis' crew — commander David Walker, 44; copilot Ronald Grabe, 43; Mary Cleave, 42; Mark Lee, 36; and Norman Thagard, 45 — flew back to the Johnson Space Center in Houston over the weekend to get in an extra round of training aboard a computer-controlled shuttle simulator.

All five are expected to fly back to Florida later in the week for Atlantis' abbreviated countdown, whenever it resumes.

The recirculation pump blamed for the countdown cutoff was one of three required before ignition to push fuel through the engines to keep them "conditioned" to the minus 423-degree temperature of liquid hydrogen and to make sure the fuel entering the engine at ignition meets specifications.

When the pump stopped with less than a minute to go before launch, liquid hydrogen stopped moving through the engine and its temperature quickly rose to unacceptable levels. That, in turn, triggered an automatic "hold" in the countdown.

Engineers later discovered the problem with the 5-foot-long, 4-inch-wide fuel line between Atlantis and its external tank.

Commission

"Because of her love of kids, her love of community, I think Shirley Allen is the best person to serve on that commission," Eckstein said.

• Jim Valerino said, "Several people have asked me, 'Are you sure this is something you want to do?' I look at it as a challenge. I realize there's been a lot of problems, a lot of controversy."

Valerino, 42, said, "As an attorney, our firm does a lot of criminal defense work, so I'm used to controversial positions."

Valerino has lived in Sanford for three years. His law offices are located in Winter Park.

Don Howell made the motion to appoint Valerino.

"He's a $100-an-hour lawyer who wants to donate his time to the city," Howell said. "That's the kind of people we need on the board."

"I was making a change because we've got nothing but a controversy down there," Howell said.

Howell also said he took into consideration a letter from authority director Linda Williams saying commissioners are not customarily appointed.

• Wain Cummings will return to the commission after a four-year hiatus.

When asked if the controversy surrounding SHA bothered him, Che Seim (Univ. County mechanical inspector) said, "Where can you go from down?"

"In the past, the authority have used guidelines put out by HUD as a rule and you can't do that," Cummings said. "They need to keep away from government guidelines; they need to do better than government guidelines."

"If they start wasting my time like they did before, I got better things to do. But I'll work with them as long as I can."

Cummings, who has lived in Sanford 10 years, was nominated for appointment by Commissioner A.A. McChamian.

"I felt like he was as well qualified or better qualified than anyone available for that appointment," McChamian said. Cummings' previous housing authority service and his willingness to serve made him a good candidate, he said.

Housing authority commissioners are appointed to serve four-year terms. All three nominees were unanimously appointed Monday without discussion.

Parties

Seminole High School seniors will take to the water on the party boat Romance for dancing and eating as part of their June 9 party. The celebration will begin at the Sanford Civic Center at 11 p.m. and last through a 4 a.m. breakfast the next morning.

Parents and students have been working since January on fundraising projects and to secure donations of food and soda to ensure there would be no cost to the participants.

"We usually have 80 percent participation," said Sherry Kitter, a high school parent and organizer of this year's SHS event. "I guess we'll have just as many this year."

Bally Health and Fitness Club on S.R. 436 in Altamonte Springs will host the Lake Mary High School project.

"You have to be in good shape for our Project Graduation," said assistant principal Fred Tombos.

Beginning at midnight between a feast of donated food and drink, L.M.H.S. seniors will dance, swim, play volleyball and ride exercise bikes until 7 a.m.

Lake Howell students will gather at the Orlando Racquet and Tennis Club for a similar celebration, but because of the expense of renting the facility the students will be charged $15 each to attend.

Still, organizers are expecting more than 50 percent of the senior class to participate.

"One reason we're expecting so many kids," explained Amy Story, organizer of the event, "is that Jim Story's Auto Sales is donating a car that will be given away."

So far, they've gotten commitments from 350 of the 510 graduating seniors.

Students and parents sign contracts binding the students to the party for the duration and to

Frazier said he would not comment on the city commission decision to replace the three authority members.

School officials say lobbying a success

By VICKI DeSCOMME
Herald staff writer

SANFORD — School Board chairman Ann Neiswender proclaimed the trip to Tallahassee a success after the return of a lobbying group board members, teachers, bus drivers, students and the superintendent of schools.

"Everyone was very receptive to our ideas," Neiswender said.

The Seminole County group had unified over the issue of capital outlay funds, saying that the PECO (Public Education Capital Outlays) funds were inadequate to meet the needs of school districts, such as Seminole, that are expanding rapidly.

According to state law, every school district is supposed to receive an equal amount of financial assistance from the state, but amendments "for special circumstances" lacked on the plan over the years by southern counties has made the allotments unequal.

"It has become a ranking system," Neiswender said, "and Seminole County is ranked 63rd."

A move to once again make the distribution of the money equitable has earned extensive support this year among the legislators.

Even the southern consortium is agreeable to the plan. Neiswender says that is because they have become convinced they would not be harmed by an equalization plan.

This is a very difficult year for lawmakers," Neiswender said. "The word has come down from the governor: No new taxes."

Lawmakers are saying that local public officials have to do their part, but Neiswender said in Seminole County, "we have already done our part and we've got to have help."

The district has already done an educational plant survey to determine their direction over the next five years. They have taxed people to the maximum limit and they have no options.

left at the local level, according to Neiswender.

Neiswender said Rep. Bud Gardner, after looking at the figures presented in the district's educational plant survey, asked her what the district was going to do with 1,800 new students a year.

"That's why we're here," she said she told him.

In addition to working toward the equalization of capital outlays funds to districts, the lobbyists asked lawmakers to consider raising the maximum millage rate that districts may levy on taxpayers from 1.5 to 2.5 to pay for district projects.

While the lobbying group was in Tallahassee, a House committee passed an amendment requiring all profits from the state lottery be spent on school construction, a approach favored by the Seminole County group. Neiswender said the group won't get excited about the measure until it becomes law.

"We'll just have to wait and see," she said.

Some lawmakers were concerned about the cost of legislation to improve prison conditions. While Neiswender agreed all the social ills must be addressed fairly, she said she felt the schools could be used to prevent other problems.

I told them that if they didn't help the schools with money, they'd better put a lot of money into the prisons because they'd need it," she said.

While the group returned to Seminole County tired but satisfied with their work, Neiswender said the work is not yet over. "We have to continue to discuss our agenda with legislators and follow up on our visit," she said.

She plans at least one more solo trip to the capitol this session and assistant superintendent for business and finance, Cary Ferrell will be returning to Tallahassee, at the request of Rep. Gardner.

Setting the stage for banking failure

One of the reasons the savings and loan industry got into such a mess is because the thrift institutions failed to keep a safe ratio between capital and assets.

In his proposal to bail out the industry and prevent such problems from rising in the future, President Bush wisely proposed that savings and loans do as banks do — keep a capital fund equal to six percent of the institution's total assets.

But strange as it seems, the House Subcommittee on Financial Institutions has voted to cut that figure in half to three percent. Even more surprising is the fact that the subcommittee would allow such intangible assets as "good will" to be counted as part of the capital.

At a time when taxpayers are being asked to bail out an industry because its bad apples engaged in a number of questionable practices, it is inexcusable that members of Congress are taking steps that will insure that future problems will arise and still more tax funded bailouts will be needed.

Even Rep. Henry Gonzales, D-Texas, chairman of the House Banking Committee, was distressed at the actions of the subcommittee. "Time after time we have accepted industry arguments that we give them just a little more time, just a little more phony-baloney bookkeeping and just a little more capital and everything would be all right. We did those things and everything is not all right."

If Congress does not restore the six percent capital requirement proposed by President Bush, the bailout measure should be vetoed when it reaches the White House.

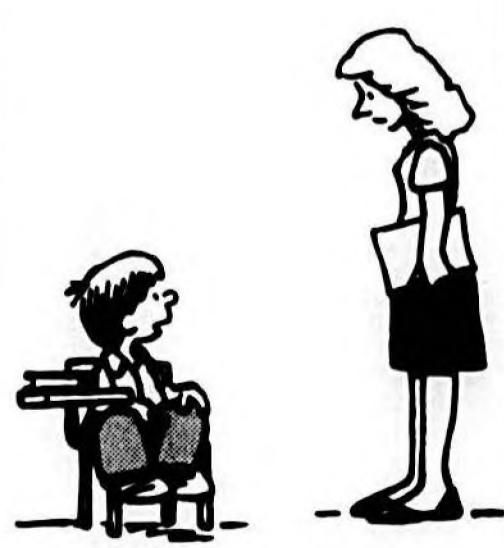

Mikhail's maulers

You would think anyone brought up in the land of Stalin, Brezhnev, the Gulag Archipelago and the KGB would have absorbed enough punishment. Think again. Soviet officials and the U.S. fight promoter have agreed to bring six Russian boxers to the United States for training and to fight here.

U.S. boxers won't be the only ones challenged by this. How is your average American ring announcer, accustomed to likes of Mike Tyson and Sugar Ray Leonard, going to deal with such names as Alexander Miroshnichenko and Rahat Umerbekov? Those are not — not yet — what you would call household names in this country, but they are two heavyweights expected among the Russians.

We can understand the Soviets' desire to win big bucks and bask in the U.S. limelight. But boxing is a lousy career for anyone, Russian or American. As for training, it seems to us those Soviet fighters could learn a lot from the political pugilists back home. It's hard to imagine any American trainer knowing more about infighting than Mikhail Gorbachev.

A fond farewell to National Review

I have been meaning to advise readers of my retirement as publisher of National Review ever since it became official at the stroke of midnight last Dec. 31. Normally I would have done so right around that date, but as it happened I was flat on my back at the time, recuperating from six bypass heart surgery. And when I did finally crawl back to my word processor, the Bush administration was under way and a lot of things were happening that seemed to require comment more urgently. Hence the delay.

But it was a big milestone in my life and certainly calls for a few valedictory comments.

I was trained as a lawyer and practiced as one for nine years. But I was fascinated by politics and by the ideas behind politics even more than by the game itself. So when Bill Buckley — then editor and publisher of the journal of conservative opinion he had founded in 1955 — asked me in June 1957 to take over as publisher I was powerfully tempted.

Most of my friends advised against accepting.

National Review's circulation was less than 17,000 at the time, and it was losing money at a rate that suggested it was not long for this world.

On the other hand, I had been a subscriber from the start and was convinced that conservatism of the Buckley brand was exactly what America needed — and what image that it would be a growing force in American politics in the years ahead. Finally I was single and therefore in a better position than many of my colleagues to walk away from an established career.

Within a few years it turned out that my basic hunch had been correct. Conservatism grew into a powerful intellectual movement and then into a serious political force. In 1964, with the nomination of Barry Goldwater, it took control of the Republican Party and has remained dominant in the GOP ever since. In 1980, with the election of Ronald Reagan to National Review subscriber status, conservatism could fairly claim to have become the leading political force in the Free World.

On a personal level, one byproduct of all this was a gratifying upswing in the market for my views. Bill Buckley was conservatism's chief spokesman, but he couldn't be everywhere at once. I was soon being invited onto radio talk shows and then TV panels. It turned out that there were live audiences ready to listen to me, even pay for the privilege! Eventually I began writing books and then a column.

Most of my friends advised against accepting,

But National Review remained for over 30 years the fair from which I ventured forth to inflict my opinions on the world. Why on earth did I finally decide to leave it?

Perhaps one never really knows the answer to such a question — any more than the trumpeter swan knows what impels it to fly from Canada to Texas every autumn. Certainly I never ceased to enjoy my job, but there did come a day when I felt deep down in my bones that I had done everything I could do. After Reagan's election and reelection, it was as if a great curtain had descended on a long and successful play. It was time for me to find new channels for my energy.

Fortunately, the Claremont Institute in California has designated me a senior fellow and I again have what Archimedes hoped for: National Review gave me for three decades a place to stand, so that always assuming I have fulcrum, I can move the world.

Say farewell, little magazine, and God bless you. We knew each other well.

Doctors find a way for legal kickbacks

WASHINGTON — Physicians have found a legal way to get paid kickbacks for their patient referrals. They buy into medical labs and hospitals, refer their patients there for expensive services and then take their profits in the form of legitimate corporate profits.

A 12-year-old Medicare Anti-Fraud and Abuse Law forbids physicians from receiving any kickback, either rebate, for a referral. That means a doctor can't refer a patient to another operator and expect money in return.

But federal investigators have unearthed a steady new trend toward what they call self-referrals. The doctor owns a share in a lab or clinic and refers patients there for tests or treatment.

Not every doctor with a financial interest in an outside business takes advantage of the law, but it's clear from ongoing federal investigations that many do. Doctors with a vested interest in outside medical clinics refer their patients for perhaps as much as 40 percent more services than doctors with no stake in a facility.

The scam not only costs the patient a fortune, but it possibly costs Medicare tens of millions of dollars in unnecessary expenses.

An estimated 12 percent of the nation's physicians have found their way around the anti-kickback law by investing in clinics, labs and hospitals.

Our associate Jim Lynch has learned that investigators from the General Accounting Office and the Department of Health and Human Services have evidence that the number of these self-serving arrangements has soared in the past four years. Here are some examples:

• A physical therapist in Colorado opened a clinic in an office building owned by doctors. The therapist soon found out that the landlords expected not only basic rent, but 12 percent of the physical therapist's gross revenues. The doctors could then profit by sending the physical therapist more business.

• El Paso, Texas, has 650 doctors and more than 20 percent of them have investments that allow them to make money every time they refer patients to clinics, labs and hospitals.

• At one medical center in California, 62 doctors own a share of the hospital and can expect a 900 percent return on their investment in five years. The doctors take half the hospital's profits and are a primary source of its patient referrals.

• Nephrologists who owned a CAT scanner at a North Carolina medical facility were ordering about 10 times as many scans for their patients as neurologists who used the same scanner but did not own it. Scans cost from $300 to $500.

One California consulting firm was formed five years ago to help develop medical facilities. The firm's literature makes no secret of its recipe for success: "The most economically successful centers are those where a large number of referring clinicians share in the economic risks and rewards."

A spokesman for the firm declined to comment to us.

Rep. Fortney "Pete" Stark, D-Calif., is angry enough about the evidence to sponsor a bill that would forbid doctors from referring patients to a medical center in which they have ownership. Stark's bill has broad support from lawmakers who want to cut the waste out of Medicare, but there is resistance, predictably, from the American Medical Association which thinks the bill punishes everyone for the sins of a few.

DAVID S. BRODER

Gingrich and his malarkey

WASHINGTON — Having succeeded in bringing House Speaker Jim Wright (D-Texas) to the bar of justice before the House Ethics Committee, Rep. Newt Gingrich (R-Ga.), the volatile new House Minority Whip, is trying for bigger game. He now wants to indict the entire House for what he is pleased to call "institutional corruption." He is overreaching to the degree that calls his own judgment into question.

When Gingrich filed the ethics charges against Wright last year, based on newspaper accounts of the Speaker's financial dealings, it appeared to be a fit of partisan mischief making. No one is laughing now, least of all Wright.

The unanimous report of the House Ethics Committee that there is reason to believe Wright may have violated House rules with his book sales and business affairs would seem to be all the vindication Gingrich would need — or want.

But the fast-talking former history professor is not satisfied by the prospect of nailing Wright's hide to the wall. In the succession of press sessions, he has been arguing that the scandal that has enveloped the highest elected Democrat in the land is just the tip of the iceberg. It's merely a symbol, Gingrich argues, of the "institutional corruption" that is endemic wherever Democrats have been in control for years — whether in the House of Representatives or in city halls from New York City to East St. Louis, and from Chicago to Jersey City.

It is all, says Gingrich, part of the "corrupt liberal welfare state," a phrase he pronounces like one word, as folks in his adopted state of Georgia once talked about "damn Yankees."

Like all conspiracy theories, this one works better as an outlet for frustration than it does as a tool of analysis. The same man who sees the Congress in which he serves as a cesspool of "institutional corruption and abuse of power" can find nothing "systematic" about the instances of illegality in the executive branch, whether it's the Pentagon procurement scandals or the Iran-contra affair.

But Gingrich has a problem in elementary logic. If the House has been as thoroughly debauched after 35 years of control by the same party as he asserts, it's hard to figure why the boss man of this corrupt institution is in such trouble. When Gingrich is asked how a complaint by a minority-party backbencher has he was when he filed charges against Wright could put the Speaker in such jeopardy, he answers, a bit lamely, "The system works."

If you're examining the record without the partisan, ideological blinders that Gingrich wears, the evidence suggests that the House has done a far better job of dealing with its bad actors than the White House and the executive branch have done in cleaning up their breaches of conduct.

In the past 10 years, the House has moved to expel four members for misconduct. Three of them resigned to avoid that humiliation and the fourth was, in fact, expelled.

It has formally censured four members. One resigned, two were defeated by the voters and one — Rep. Gary Studds (D-Mass.) — remains in office, having been judged more leniently by his constituents than by his colleagues.

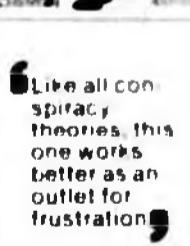

Rep. primaries or other forms of mild fault finding were voted on another dozen members, most of whom have subsequently resigned from the House, been defeated or have removed themselves to less exacting and more permissive surroundings.

That is hardly a pattern suggesting a calculated, callous indifference to the rules of conduct. And of the 15 or more members who have felt the sting of ethics investigations, only three have been Republicans. If the Democrats in control of that "corrupt institution" are trying to punish their adversaries and protect their own, they need glasses.

While Wright is the most important figure to face this kind of peer review, he is far from the first congressional power broker to learn that he is not above the law.

At the height of the 1984 campaign, the House Ethics Committee announced it was beginning an investigation of possible financial disclosure violations by the Democratic vice presidential nominee, Rep. Geraldine A. Ferraro (D-N.Y.). Ultimately, the "technical violations" that were found were of no political significance, but her fellow partisans in the House did not spare her the burden of facing that inquiry even as she was seeking the second highest office in the land.

Contrast that record, if you will, with the repeated instances of coverups, conflicts of interest and plain old-fashioned corruption that have come to light in the executive branch in the past decade. And think about the number of times that a President has rushed out to defend, rather than denounce, the culprit — to pronounce that, in his eyes, Charley the Chiseler is still a national hero or a good friend.

Like all conspiracy theories, this one works better as an outlet for frustration,

Weight Loss Pill Approved for U.S. Gov't. Patent

'Lazy Way' to Lose Weight Already Sweeping U.S.

BEVERLY HILLS, CA (Special) — An amazing new weight loss pill called "fat magnet" has recently been developed and perfected by two prominent doctors at a world famous hospital in Los Angeles that reportedly "guarantees" you steady fat loss and calorie reduction by simply taking their tested and proven new pill.

The U.S. government has just approved the doctors claims for a hard to get patent that confirms "there has never been anything like their fat-burning pill process before." It is totally new major scientific breakthrough and is revolutionizing the weight loss industry.

You Can "Fat Normally."

Best of all, you can continue to eat your favorite foods and you don't have to change your normal eating habits. You can start losing fat and reduce calories from the very first day until you achieve the ideal weight you desire without exercising.

Flushes Fat Out of Body.

The new pill is appropriately called the "fat magnet" pill because it breaks into thousands of particles, each acting like a tiny magnet, attracting and trapping many times its size in undigested fat particles. Then, all the trapped fat and calories are naturally "flushed" right out of your body because they cannot be absorbed.

Within 2 days you should notice a change in the color of your stool, caused by the fat particles being eliminated.

"Automatically" Lose Fat.

According to one of the inventors, Dr. William Shell, heart specialist and associate professor of medicine at UCLA medical school, "the new fat-burning process via "lazy way" loses weight because the pills alone automatically reduce calories by eliminating dietary fat. It is 100% safe and not a drug."

The fat-magnet pills are already sweeping the country with glowing reports of weight loss from formerly overweight people in all walks of life who are now slimmer, trimmer and more attractive again.

Now Available to the Public.

If you are trying to lose 20, 50, 100 pounds or more, you can order your supply of these "no-risk" highly successful fat-magnet pills directly from the doctors' exclusive manufacturer only (includes optional calorie-reduction plan for even better results). Send $20 for a 90 pill supply (+$3 handling), or $35 for a 180 pill supply (+$3 handling), to: Fat-Magnet, 900 Wilshire Blvd., Dept. W246, Beverly Hills, CA 90211. Miners return to picket lines after rally

WISE, Va. — Striking coal miners, refreshed from a weekend off the picket lines and rejuvenated by a noisy rally headlined by the Rev. Jesse Jackson, prepared Monday for another day of trying to block coal truck traffic.

At a Sunday rally, United Mine Workers union President Richard Trumka urged the 1,400 miners on strike against Pittston Coal Group to stick with the non-violent protest that resulted in nearly 1,000 arrests last week.

"Resistance does not have to be violent to be effective," Trumka told the roaring crowd of about 10,000 at Wise County Fairgrounds.

As union vice president Cecil Roberts put it, "We'll all go to jail if we have to."

Jackson, at the afternoon rally and a Sunday morning service at a packed and strident First Baptist Church in Big Stone Gap, agreed with the tactics.

Scientists pinpoint trigger for leukemia

BOSTON — Scientists reported identifying the genes a virus apparently uses to cause a deadly type of leukemia, a finding that should lead to new ways to fight the disease and perhaps other forms of cancer.

An international team of researchers said Sunday it had demonstrated the so-called "X region" of the genetic material in a virus known as HTLV-1 is the device that enables the virus to cause adult T-cell leukemia.

We're very pleased. What we've shown is this is the piece for sure," said Dr. William Haseltine of Harvard Medical School, who headed the research.

It's really a breakthrough we've been working on ever since we've known about this virus," said Haseltine, chief of the division of human retrovirology at the Dana Farber Cancer Institute in Boston.

Man with shotgun kills one, wounds 13 in British town

United Press International

LONDON — A young man armed with a shotgun fired indiscriminately along the quiet streets of a seaside resort, killing one man and wounding 13 other people, then calmly drove to the shore where he was tackled by a police officer, authorities said.

The woman said Sunday the gunman, dressed in black and carrying a hunting knife thrust into his belt, was "just shooting at anything that moved, just like he was Rainbow marching down with his pump-action shotgun."

The man, identified only as being 22 years old, apparently picked his victims at random, stopping several times and calmly reloading as he stalked the lanes of coastal Monkseaton, 200 miles north of London, on the North Sea, Northumberland Police spokeswoman Gillian Radcliffe said.

"We don't know what the motive was for it, it all fits in with it was similar to that incident at Orgreave [Colliery]. He just came onto the street and fired indiscriminately," Radcliffe said.

In the worst mass shooting in British history, Michael Evans, 27, walked the streets of Monkseaton, a quiet hamlet west of London, on Nov. 26, 1987, firing an assault rifle and a pistol,

BLONDIEInhaling cortisone won't help treat optic nerve

DEAR DR. GOTTL: A family member has asthma. In one column, you said that inhaling cortisone for asthma can bypass some of the unpleasant side effects. Would cortisone be a possible treatment for someone with an infection of the optic nerve who is treated orally with large doses of steroids and suffers all the side effects?

at night, when a person is asleep and unaware of the jaw clenching.

You could be helped by a bite plate, a device worn at night to protect your teeth. See your dentist for advice about this.

You might also want to address the stress and tension that might be causing you to grind your teeth. Perhaps

DEAR READER:

Inhaled cortisone is a valuable method of preventing asthma. As a general rule, inhaled steroids, of which cortisone is one, exert a local effect — in this case, directly on smaller breathing passageways to release spasms — and are not absorbed in quantity into the body. This is one of their advantages because cortisone and similar drugs (prednisone) will cause serious side effects when given systemically (by pill or injection).

By inhaling the drug from a hand-held spray container, asthma patients often achieve substantial benefits without the dangerous consequences, such as diabetes, bone brittleness, cataracts and susceptibility to infection.

Since inhaled cortisone is not absorbed into the body, it is useless in treating optic neuritis, an inflamed nerve in the eye. Sometimes steroid eye drops can be used for ocular diseases, but the optic nerve is well-protected at the back of the eyeball, so oral cortisone is usually more appropriate.

DEAR DR. GOTTL: I get my teeth in my sleep, have chipped my front teeth and am afraid I will have to have them capped. This would be costly, and I want to stop the habit. Any suggestions?

DEAR READER: Grinding the teeth can be a tough habit to break because it usually occurs

WIN AT BRIDGE

By James Jacoby

The battle for the part-score is seldom won with an opening bid of one of a suit. Look what most likely would have happened if South had made the normal one-club opening. West would have doubled for takeout, and East would have probably become declarer at two or three spades. Nine tricks would make with reasonable play on East's part, contingent upon his exhausting South of exit cards in the red suits before playing ace and a spade. But today's South deprived West of the ability to double one club for takeout when he opened one no-trump. That was unorthodox but extremely effective.

West, vulnerable with a balanced 12 high-card points, had no safe action over the no-trump opening. East, confronted with only nine points and no five-card suit, had to pass. So South became declarer.

When a low heart was led, the jack held in dummy. A club was played to the queen, and the club ace brought down the king. Declarer now played the king of spades. West won the ace and tried to salvage what he could by leading a low diamond. The defenders can certainly take three diamond tricks and the ace of spades. But East won the ace of diamonds and thought it right to return his partner's first lead. Declarer now took 10 tricks for an excellent tournament score, since at most other tables South either played a club contract or defended against East in a three-spade contract.
