Sing Seminolians, it's a sunny day

Herald Staff Writer

Seminolians, now is the time for singing so dash outside and lift your voices in unison. The lilting lyrics will walt their way skyward - "It's gonna be a bright, bright, sunshiney day." And it will. Gorgeous!

You've noted, of course, that the temperatures are pushing the 90 degree mark - and slipping over quite frequently. Nights, though, are breezy and nice with temperatures dipping into the 60s.

Now, while you're looking skyward whilst singing, note the position of the sun. Take an eyeball fix and remember that mark. Next step in your astronomic activity is to boogey out tonight and check Saturn and Uranus (You'll need assistance with Uranus.) Then check out the planet Earth, probably located somewhere below your feet. Notice what has happened? There is alignment! The line-up of the Sun. Saturn and Uranus had its advent about 10 days ago, and it was the first time in the past 44 years. Now the Earth joins the team. What about that? Exciting, bub?

Baby whale dies at Sea World

ORLANDO (UPI) - A orphaned pygmy sperm whale named Patrick, rescued from shallow water earlier this week, died Friday despite three days of treatment by marine biologists

Officials at Sea World in Orlando said the two-week old whale died at 2:15 p.m. in a tank where doctors had been monitoring its condition. Some antibiotics were administered earlier when the whale arrived:

Dr. Daniel Odell, a Sea World marine biologist, blamed the whale's death on a series of factors stemming from being stranded on the beach, but said the exact cause will not be known for weeks.

Marine biologists will perform an autopsy, then will send more critical tissues to the Kissimmee Diagnostic Lab. where more thorough tests will determine the exact cause of death for the two-week old mammal, officials said,

Child scalded as punishment

CLEARWATER, Fla. (UPI) A 21-month-old boy was inguarded condition at All Children's Hospital in St. Petersburg Friday with third-degree burns on his head and a severe body infection, and a young couple that cared for him were failed for aggravated child abuse.

Lunshun "David" Farrow, 25, and his wife, Clarissa, 18, were arrested late Wednesday after the child was found and taken to a hospital.

Investigators accused the two of holding Brandon Blackman under a scalding shower two weeks ago as a form of punishment and then failing to seek medical care for the child despite the severe burns.

Detective John Dean said Farrow allegedly punished the child for about an hour June 1 by holding his head under a hot shower, then locked him in the bathroom overnight. Dean said the scalding was a form of punishment, but he did not know what prompted it.

'He (Brandon) developed a severe infection throughout the entire body." Dean said.

'Skinhead' sentenced to life

TAMPA (UPI) - Dean McKee, a 16-year-old member of the violent neo-Nazi Skinheads, has been sentenced to life in prison with no chance of parole for 25 years for the racialmurder of a black transfent.

McKee, whose neatly groomed hair and coat and tie he wore in court were in stark contrast to the extremely short hair. T-shirt and tattoon he sported as a Skinhead, was found guilty Friday by an all-white jury of beating and stabbing to death Islah Walker, 41.

Prosecutors did not seek the death penalty in the case and Hillsborough Ctreuit Judge Harry Lee Coe immediately sentenced McKee to the mandatory life sentence.

McKee and his brother Scott McKee, 18, both of Clearwater, were arrested March 4 and charged with killing Walker, who they found leaning against a wall at the Tampa Museum of Art in downtown Tampa after a night of drinking Dec. 20.

Prosecutors said the youths, both members of the organization known for its violent hatred of blacks, Jews and homosexuals, were arrested after their father, Lowell McKee, contacted police and said Dean had called him and he and Scott had been in a fight with a man and he may have killed him.

Michael Martinez, assistant professor of political science. said voters may intrepret the selection of a running mate as a first appointment, but the decision is usually based on the presidential nominee's creden-

"If he chooses someone voters consider unqualified, they might lose faith that he'll make wise decisions if he gets into office," Martinez said.

Historically, nominees try to choose a running mate who will appeal to different factions within the party or broaden the Ronald Reagan's choice of runner-up George Bush in 1980 closed a rift in the Republican Party, while Lyndon B. Johnson's choice of civil rights supporter Rubert Humphrey in 1964 broadened his base by signaling minorities that "it was OK to come into the Democratic Party." Martinez said.

This year, Democrat Michael Dukakis faces a Reagan-Bush scenario, in which Jesse Jackson rolled up more votes in the primary but fell short of the required delegate count.

Choosing Jackson would virtually assure Dukakis of the black vote, but he would risk losing the independents who might object to Jackson's race. policies, or religious affiliation.

Party but be unable to broaden the party's base," Martinez said. He predicted that Dukakis will compromise by not choosing Jackson but giving him much input in his choice.

Dukakis could balance the ticket by choosing running mates strong in regions where he has come under attack, or to offset his background as a Northeastern governor.

Martinez mentioned Sen. John Glenn, D'Ohio, as a candidate to offset his lack of Washington experience, or Sens. Bob. Graham, D-Fla., or Albert Gore, DiTenn., to belp him in the South.

Bush's dilemma is similar to Dukakis' in that he will want to unify the Republican Party by If Dukakis went with appealing to the voters who Jackson, he might appeal to the supported the Rev. Pat Rob-

"The group of religious people who voted for Carter in 1976. Reagan in 1980 and 1984, and Robertson in this year's primaries on an ideological basis have never been enthralled with Bush." Martinez said.

Now is a key time because these voters will either choose to swing back to the Democratic Party or stay with the Republican Party into which Reagan brought them, he said.

But Bush more likely will concentrate on the Midwest. where he is weak because farmers have strongly objected to Reagan's economic policies. Martinez said.

Cyanide killer gets 90 years

SEATTLE (UPI) - Stella Nickell, the only person ever convicted of causing deaths by lacing an over the counter painkiller with cyanide, was given a 90-year prison sentence Friday by a federal judge who called her crimes "appalling."

Nickell, 44, who has maintained her innocence since her conviction last month, declined to make a statement. She stood motionless with the same stoic expression she showed through most of herthree week trial this spring.

U.S. District Judge William Dwyer rejected a 230-year sentence sought by prosecutors in the federal anti-tampering case but specified that Nickell serve a minimum of 30 years in prison before she is even considered for parole.

"It must be said these are crimes of exceptional callousness and cruelty." Dwyer said. "The jury has found the defendant guilty of appalling

Public Defender Thomas Hillier said the verdict and sentence would be appealed, but he expected the process to take at least a year.

King County Prosecutor Norm Maleng said he would spend the next three weeks reviewing the federal sentence before deciding whether to charge Nickell with murder, a state crime.

Nickell was convicted May 9 of lacing Extra-Strength Excedrin capsules with cyanide in a 1986 plot to kill her husband. Bruce Nickell, 52, so she could get out of an unhappy, debt-ridden marriage and collect $176,000 in life insurance

Authorities said she poisoned at least four other bottles of medication and placed them on store shelves in the Auburn, Wash., area in an attempt to make the tamperings look like the work of a random killer. One of the poisoned bottles was bought by Sue Snow, 40, an Auburn bank manager, who died from eyanide poisoning on June 11, 1986.

A task force of federal and state investigators spent 18 months on the case before arresting Nickell last December on charges she violated federal anti-tampering laws enacted because of the 1982 Chicago Tylenol poisoning deaths of seven people.

Nickell, who has worked as a security guard in the past, has been held in jail without bail since her arrest. U.S. Assistant Attorney Joanne Maida sought a

230-year prison term for Nickell. "It's unnerving to think just how many people stood to die because of this woman's greed." she "The death of these two human beings and the potential of countless others are crimes that won't be tolerated by the United States or the public." In his sentencing order. Dwyer gave Nickell 90 years on each of the two tampering counts involving deaths and 10 years on each of the other three, but ordered that all terms be served concurrently. He also denied a request by Hillier that the federal Parole Commission be allowed to determine the minimum amount of time Nickell should serve. In addition, Dwyer ordered Nickell to pay a $250 fine, but recommended that any compensation to the Snow family be settled through civil litigation.

"We expected it would be a tough sentence." Hillier said. "It was no surprise. She was prepared. for the worst.' Hillier also said he "believes in her innocence and will continue to do that."

The case took a unusual twist toward the end when it was revealed that one of the jurors had recently settled her own product-contamination lawsuit and had discussed writing about the case. Dwyer Thursday declined Hiller's motion for a second trial because of the disclosures

Bruce Nickell's death on June 6, 1986, was first attributed to natural causes. But after Snow's death five days later. Stella Nickell asked authorities to review his autopsy results. She then turned in two bottles of medicine, saying she was concerned about product tampering.

Judge OKs hippie festival

TYLER, Texas (UPI) -Although a federal appeals court in New Orleans still might turn the situation upside down, it appears the neo-hippie Rainbow Family will be able to hold its "Gathering of the Tribes" the week of July 4 if it complies with stringent health and sanitation requirements.

U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice outlined a compromise between the warring Rainhows and the U.S. Forest Service Thursday at the end of a two-day hearing.

The Forest Service had asked Justice to issue a permanent injunction preventing the Rainbow Family from holding its annual get-together in the Angelina National Forest in East Texas near Sam Rayburn Reservoir. Lawyers for the Rainbows pressed for unlimited access to the forest for the 10,000 to 20,000 people they expected.

Rainbow Family members, who hold the gather-ing each year at a different location around the country, describe themselves as a free-form group of environmentally conscious people with their roots as flower children of the 1960s.

Israeli, PLO representatives expelled by British authorities

LONDON (UPI) - British authorities, incensed over undisclosed Israeli intelligence activity in Britain, ordered the expulsion of an Israeli diplomat and a Palestine Liberation Organization representative in London:

The expulsion orders Friday came two days after Ismael Sowan, a British-based Palestinian who worked undercover for the Israeli Mossaid spy agency in Britain, was sentenced to 11 years in prison for hiding a PLO arms cache. including grenades, in his bathroom. Britain was angered, not only at the discovery of the arms, but also by Israel's failure to inform British intelligence services about Sowan, 28. Foreign Office officials said. The Foreign Office said it had decided to order Arie Regey, an Israeli embassy attache, and PLO press officer Zaki Al Hawa to leave Britain by the end of June "The Israeli ambassador Mr. Yehuda Avner has been told quite clearly of our concern and displeasure at the activities of these people," a spokesman said. He did not elaborate on their activities.

He said without the knowledge of British intelligence services, the Israelis employed Sowan to work undercoverwithin the PLO in Britain and spy on Abdul Rahim Mustapha, a member of the PLO's Force 17 team which protects PLO leader Yasser Arafat.

In Jerusalem, Israeli Foreign Ministry spokesman Alon Lief said, "We regret that her majesty's government has seen fit to take measures of the kind adopted.

Soldiers kill one, wound 17

JERUSALEM (UPI) - Soldiers sent to a West Bank village to destroy a resident's home fatally shot one Palestinian and wounded as many as 17 others after they were attacked with rocks and bottles.

Within a 24-hour period beginning late Thursday, soldiers demolished or scaled 18 Palestinian homes in the West Bank. The occupants were accused of anti-Israel violence ranging from murder to the throwing of Molotov cocktails, an army spokesman said.

The army said the large number of demolitions and closures was not a new policy, but a spokesman said they would serve as a deterrence against anti-Israeli violence.

Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin said the destruction of houses and orders allowing soldiers and civilians to open fire on people throwing Molotov cocktails was part of the army's campaign against violence in the occupied territories.

"Our intention is to deal very severely with the use of petrol bombs against Israeli vehicles or Arab vehicles traveling on the roads," Rabin told Israel Radio Friday.

Israeli settlers in the West Bank, alarmed by a string of firehombings in recent days, have called for tougher measures against Araba auspected of attacking Israeli current investigation of defense corruption is so huge it is expected to lead to as many as 70 criminal prosecutions nationwide, law enforcement sources say.

Officials say defense probe could lead to 70 prosecutions

Noriega linked to $1 billion marijuana deal

LAFAYETTE, La. (UP) - A tederal indictment has charged 170 people with conspiring to smuggle $1 billion of martjuana into the United States, and could have named Panamantan strongman Manuel Antonio Noriega if he were not already indicted in Florida, a prosecutor

The indictment, unscaled Friday, says the defendants conspired to smuggle 1,448,000 pounds of marijuana, making it one of the biggest drug rings smashed in the nation.

I don't know of any bigger case than this," U.S. Attorney Joseph Cage Jr. told a news conference.

"It would be about $1 billion if. sold on the street," said Drug Enforcement Administration agent Charles Sullivan

The indictment named defendants from the United States, Panama, Colombia, Jamaica and the Cayman Islands. Scores of the defendants were listed merely as "John Doe."

Cage said arrests were underway. The sealed indictment was returned June 6 in the U.S. District Court for the Western District of Louistana.

He said the charges capped a 2 Wyear investigation, codenamed "Operation Bulldog." The probe also "resulted in the indictment of 82 defendants in three other judicial districts" in Michigan, North Carolina and Florida.

A prosecutor said Nortegacould have been named in the indictment unscaled Friday if he were not already indicted in Florida

Asked about the Noriega connection, Judith Lombardino. lead attorney for the task force that conducted the investigation, said. "Based on the evidence gathered if it had been presented to this grand pury I feel there was sufficient evidence that he would have been indicted here.

She declined further comment because of the case pending against him in Tampa. Fla.

The indictment accusing the 170 people said 100 of the defendants traveled to Lafayette to take part in the smuggling of 280,000 pounds of marthana. It said about 250,000 pounds was successfully unloaded from a tugand harge near Bancker, La., but another 30,000 pounds apparently was abandoned.

FBI information officer Max Chastain in New Orleans said, "Allegedly, Nortega used some of his proceeds from the marijuana that was processed through Lafayette for his laundering.

"In part of the allegations that have been charged against him were these marijuana deals that were going on in through Lafayette," Chastain said.

Coup discussions being held during Duarte's absence

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (UPI) - San Salvador's military chief said deep divisions exist within the inflitary's ranks and that ultra-rightists and conservative military officers have discussed a possible coup.

In an exclusive interview Friday with United Press International, Gen. Adolfo Blandon also said he and other top commanders could be replaced soon.

President Jose Napoleon Duarte traveled to the United States two weeks ago for cancer treatment. Blandon said the country's military situation could depend on whether Duarte, 62, returns to power following a cancer operation.

"I am not sure there will be changes but they could happen," said the military chief of staff. "This would depend on how the events of the past weeks develop and if and when President Jose Napoleon Duarte returns to the country and the presidency."

Five-month sea ordeal over; Costa Rican fishermen

HONOLULU (UPI) - The Costa Rican fishermen who spent live months lost at sea say they survived on "fish, turtles and sharks" and rain they collected in a gallon container.

The five survivors, who stepped onto dry land Friday, were spotted in their 30-foot boat Wednesday and picked up a Japanese fishing boat after drifting nearly 4,000 miles at sea.

Government officials, families and friends shocked at news of their rescue - had given them up for dead.

During their 21 weeks adrift, Capt. Gerardo Antonio Obregan Orando, 33, and his four-man crew survived in their fuel-spent boat Cairo 3 by catching rain in cans and feeding on marine life.

We survived by throwing over batt which we had for out fishing trip." crew member Joel Omar Gonzales told Coast Guard authorities. "We ate anything that came near our boat, such as fish. turtles and sharks."

Others on the boat were George Fernandez Castillo, 27; Pastor Lopez Rojas, 30, and Juan Cernas Bolivar, 47.

They had to get up very early every morning to get the fish because the fish go to sleep very early," said Hilda Richardson, the Costa Rican consul in Hawaii.

The men had a gallon container and a smaller container and were ready to catch any rain that came along

"A couple of times, they ran out of water totally and they were so thirsty they were just licking the sides of the containers in order to get by." Richardson said. "They prayed for water every

The Costa Rican fishermen suffered from "a little malnutrition, but they're in surprisingly good condition for being at sea for five months. said Coast Guard Dr. Martha Hauk, "It's

They were taken to Tripler Army Medical Center for a checkup and were to depart for home

The fishermen left Puntarenas, Costa Rica, on Jan. 19 for what was supposed to be an eight-day fishing trip in local waters. A two-week-long storm struck on Jan. 24 and pushed them across the ocean toward Hawait.

Their motor boat ran out of diesel fuel, so the men rigged up a makeshift sait. But, they were unable to steer the boat and were so buffeted by storms and currents that they were unable to keep track of their position.

The men saw a few ships while they were near the continent but were not spotted. Once they got farther out into the open ocean, they saw no ships at all.

"Some days they lost hope, but some days they were very grateful because they had food, they had water, and their hopes rose again that they would go back home." Richardson said.

The worst part, Orando said, was thinking about their families.

"They had to have tremendous control of themselves in order not to go crazy, thinking of their families ... and worrying about how much they may have been worrying about them." Richardson sald.

Coast Guard Scaman Gizelle Rutz, "They were very grateful that no one went crazy - took out a knife or something and tried to kill each other or kill themselves because of the situation. They were helping each other a lot."

To keep their sanity, the crew members tried to keep busy all the time. They spent almost all their waking bours trying to survive, catching food and collecting water.

Orando said he was glad to be back on solid ground, but he might go to sea again. Asked what he wanted most to see, he said simply, "My wife and my children."

The 120-foot Japanese tuna boat Kinci Maru 128, which left Honolulu June 11, found the men by chance Wednesday afternoon about 700 miles southeast of Honolulu.

"They were screaming and waving their arms." Coast Guard Petty Officer Mason Cornish said. "Needless to say, they were pretty happy to see somebody after drifting 3,993 miles over a five-month period - about 26 miles a day."

Mecham says he may return to politics

his acquittal, former Gov. Evan Mecham was talking about returning to politics and launching a crusade against the "corrupt power structure" that impeached him but could not convict him on criminal charges.

A defiant Mecham also told a news conference Friday that he's considering creating a newspaper as an alternative to the state's biggest dailies - The Arizona Republic and Phoenix Gazette.

In a separate interview. Mecham said "there's always a chance" a return to politics could come in 1988. Among the offices up for grabs is the U.S. Senate seat now held by twoterm Sen. Dennis DeConcint. D-Ariz.

The Arizona Senate convicted Mechani in April for obstructing an investigation into a death threat allegedly made by one of his aides and for illegally transferring $80,000 in state funds to his automobile dealership. But the body voted against barring him from running for future office.

Gracey said Kirchhoff first found out he was staying on the island when he saw a photograph in a local newspaper of Gracey sitting on the front porch of the cabin. Bikers get help crossing bridge

Sanford Herald, Sanford, Fl.

By Wayne Mise Serald Staff Writer

The four bicyclists traveling from Sanford, Maine, to Sanford, Fla. met with a perplexing situation during Day Six of their 1,500-mile, 14-day trip - but with the help of a good Samaritan, it was overcome.

The four men, including three Sanford residents, are making the trek to benefit the American Heart Association (AHA).

After leaving Saltsbury. Md., Friday morning the bikers made their way down U.S. Highway 13 toward Norfolk, Va. in a light rain and eventually came upon the Chesapeake Bay Bridge-Tunnel, where bicyles are prohibited.

When a pre-arranged taxi ride across the bay fell through, the bicyclists were left in a quandary.

However, a friendly tollbooth official eventually found a motorist who had a vehicle large enough for the four bikes and the riders. who was willing to drive them across.

With that obstacle out of the way, the quartet of Jim Clark, John Lommerse and James Quian, all of Sanford, and Tom Clark of Manhattan. N.Y., met with another problem.

Jim Clark's bike lift a hole and damaged several wheel spokes. While still rideable. the 12-speed will need repair

Despite the problems, the men made it to Chesapeake, Va., by day's end, after traveling 118 miles.

Since leaving Maine six days ago, the men have traveled 657 miles by bicycle, which does not include ferry rides or other means of travel.

The bikers hope to arrive in Sanford, June 26.

Positions that will become available in Sanford will be blue collar positions, such as sheet metal workers, machine operators, welders, drafting techteians and assembly and wiring employees.

The company plans to hold an open house employment day June 25 at the Sanford plant.

Boveri manufactures switchgear, similar to a circuit breaker system in a house. They are used primarily in large industry, such as a rapid transit system.

A spokeman said that Bovert. which consists of four main divisions, has more than $1 billion worth of operations in the U.S. and $10 billion worldwide.

Martine, Zvereva advance to finals

EASTBOURNE, England (UPB - Martina Navratilova reached the final of the $250,000 Eastbourne women's tennis tournament Friday, lining up a rematch with Soviet teenager Natalia Zvereva, who ousted her from the French Open three weeks

Navratilova looked relaxed and confident as she downed American 16-year-old Mary Joe Fernandez 6-2, 6-3 in their semifinal match, while Zvereva was taken to three sets by Frenchwoman Pascale Paradis, winning 6-1, 2-6, 6-2,

An appearance in the Eastbourne final has been the precursor of all eight of Navratilova's Wimbledon victories. A ninth Wimbledon champtonship would break the record she shares with Helen-Wills Moody, and vindicate her claim that she is still the best woman tennis player to the world - despite the No. 1 ranking of Stelft Graf.

Schmidt ties Mantle on HR list Slugger's 536th homer lifts Phillies over Mets, 3-1

United Press International

Mike Schmidt continued his assault on Cooperstown Friday night, linking himself with two of the most prominent members of the Hall of Fame. Mickey Mantle and Joe. DiMaggio.

And Dwight Gooden, perhaps a future enshrinee, was an unwitting accomplice.

With one swing of the but - on a 3.2 fastball from Gooden - Schmidt tied Mantle on the all-time home run list. DiMaggio on the RBI list, and started the Philadelphia Phillies on the road to a 3-1 decision over the New York Mets.

'To be mentioned in the same light with those players means a great deal to me." said Schmidt, whose sixth homer of the season in the fourth inning gave Philadelphia a 1-0 edge and ended the longest homerless streak of his career - 111 plate appearances.

Some day when I'm four or five years removed from my playing career, it will mean even more. But right now I've got to be concerned with the business at hand: getting this team back into some semblance. of contention."

Gross, 8-2, scattered seven hits before Steve Bedrosian got the final out for his 10th save. Gooden, 9-3, allowed five hits over Schmidt's 536th career home run, which tied him with Manile for seventh place, triggered a three-run fourth. The RBI tied him with DiMaggio for 24th place with 1.537.

"Babe Ruth is the biggest name in baseball history," Schmidt said, "but after Ruth, you'd be hard pressed not to think of Mantle as the second greatest baseball man of all time. Granted, Henry Aaron and DiMaggio are among the top four or five, but 'The Mick' is a big one."

After Schmidt's homer, Gooden hit Chris James with a pitch. Phil Bradley doubled James to third, and Milt Thompson was intentionally walked. Steve Jeltz hit a grounder to second, and when Thompson stopped between bases. Wally Backman threw out Jeltz at first as James scored. Bradley scored from second for a 3-0 lead when Thompson remained in a rundown.

"The Phillies get up for us." Gooden said. "That one inning cost me. Schmidt got the good part of the bat on the ball. I ran a fastball in on James, and then the ground ball ...

Reds' Concepcion suspended

NEW YORK (UPI) - Cincinnati Reds infielder Dave Concepcion was suspended for two days and fined by National League President Bart Giamatti Friday for throwing a base in a June 11 game in San Francisco.

Concepcion was punished for his actions after arguing a called third strike in the fifth inning of a 7.2 victory. He appealed the suspension Friday, and will continue to play until he is granted a hearing with Glamatti.

Picking up a base and throwing it toward the stands. after heatedly and in a prolonged fashion arguing over a called third strike, goes beyond the New York Mets. bounds of the sensible or permissible or professional," Giamatti said in a stalement released by the NL.

"For indulging in this fashion. and helping to precipitate a predictably senseless reaction from a portion of the crowd. Dave Concepcion is suspended for two days.

Concepcion is the second member of the Reds to be fined and suspended by Giamatti this season. Manager Pete Rose received a 30-day suspension and was fined for shoving an umpire April 30 in a game against the

Jim Ferguson, vice prestdent-publicity for the team, said Concepcion had been fined earlier this year after he was ejected from games.

'It's not the first time this year he's been fined or thrown out of game for showing up an umpire," Ferguson said.

'I don't know what president Giamatti has said to him or whether (the suspension) is a buildup from other things. That could very well be a factor. I don't know what all he's (Glamatti) taking into considLynchites

Okamoto, Inkster tied at top

HERSHEY, Pa. (UPI) - Medical problems were set aside to play golf in the first round of the at the Hershey Country Club.

Defending champion Ayako Okamoto and Juli Inkster each carded a 5-under 67 Friday in a pair of bogey-free rounds to share the first-round lead in the 54-hole tournament.

Okamoto, returning to the LPGA Tour after three weeks off. credited her swing, which was slightly modified to alleviate a chronic back problem, for her SUCCESS "I didn't try to hit the ball hard," she said. "I just tried to swing easy. I didn't want to think too much about my golf swing." Despite her good round. Okamoto seemed to feel she could play better.

The greens were a little wet. she said, "and I wasn't hitting close enough for birdies." Okamoto had no trouble LPGA

$300,000 Lady Keystone Open sinking birdle putts. She dropped a 25-footer at two for her first birdie, sank a 15-footer on 11 and a 30-footer on 13. She also birdied the seventh and 16th hole

> Inkster indicated she was feeling much better Friday. She had collapsed during a practice round Tuesday, a victim of the oppressive heat and humidity that plagued the area early in the week.

> "Yesterday afternoon, I didn't feel at all well and was thinking about going home," she said. 'but I didn't feel bad out there. just weak. I just kind of walked and hit it, walked and hit it."

Inkster posted her 67 when she went on birdle binge that saw her pick up three birdies in a four-hole span from four to seven. She started her round off the 10th tee and played the back nine, usually considered the easier side of the course, in one-under. Inkster picked up her lone birdle on the 18th hole.

But after playing the first three holes on the front side in evenpar. Inkster dropped a 12-foot putt at four, played a 6-fron to just one foot away for another birdle on five and, after a par on six, pitched to within one foot at seven for another birdle. She completed the round by sinking a 10-foot birdle on nine.

"I didn't birdle any of the easy holes today," Inkster said, "but I just didn't get it going right away."

One stroke behind the leaders at 68 were six other players -Colleen Walker, Connie Chillemi, Laurie Rinker, Marci Bozarth, Betsy King and Shirley Furlong. Five more players. Susie McAllister, Sandra Palmer Sherri Steinhauer, Ok-Hee Ku and Patty Jordan, were two strokes back at 69.

Gilder in comfortable position

BROOKLINE, Mass. (UPI) - To hear Bob Gilder tell it, he's a lot more comfortable trailing the leader than being in front. "It's tough to lead, tougher than being one or two back." Gilder said Friday after a 2-under-par 69 left him two shots behind leader Scott Simpson at the halfway point of the U.S. Open. "It's a different feeling, a different psyche, to be up front.

"When you're leading people expect you to win, you expect yourself to win. There's nowhere to go but down."

Gilder had a roller-coaster round with six birdies and four bogeys, leaving him at 5-under 137 after 36 holes.

U.S. OPEN

His round was helped immeasurably when he holed a pitching wedge from 108 yards for a birdie on the 11th hole. He gave that back by missing a 4-foot putt on the final hole.

In his position, Gilder said he won't feel any pressure, adding, "My chances are as good as anyone, in my opinion. I won't back down.

Gilder, winner of six tournaments since 1976, said a delicate combination of aggressiveness and patience was necessary to win the Open.

"You can't play defensively." said Gilder, who was part of a three-way tie for the lead after one round. "Defensive golf will make bogeys. But you also have to be patient, you can't go for everything. You have to respect a golf course like this.

'If you try to stand by and protect your score, others won't be as defensive and they'll pass you by. Gilder, whose best finish in 13 previous Open appearances was 16th in 1979, stormed to the defense of the man he will be chasing this weekend when it was suggested to him Simpson has a boring game. What's a boring game?" he said. "When you shoot golf scores lower than anyone? If that's a boring golf game, give it

Norman withdraws from tourney

BROOKLINE, Mass. (UPI) Greg Norman withdrew from the 88th U.S. Open Friday, after possibly tearing a ligament in his left wrist when his club hit a hidden rock in the 9th hole rough. The Australian, one of the early favorites to win the tournament, said after a telephone consultation with an orthopedic surgeon in Orlando. Fla., that the problem probably was the aggravation of an old football injury.

For the past 13 to 16 months. Norman has been taking medication for chronic tendinitis

"I hit my third shot at the ninth and there was a rock under the ball." explained Norman, standing on the back porch of the clubhouse at The Country Club with his wrist wrapped in ice and his left arm in a sling.

"What I have done is appar-

"I hit the rock and the ball at the same time and something had to give," he said. "I guess it was going to be me and not the

On the 9th hole, Norman's second shot landed in water beyond the right rough. He green but "when I hit my 7-iron shot I hit straight down on top of a rock."

After two shots on the 10th hole. Norman realized it was futile to continue and walked off the course.

"I've obviously popped some-thing in there," he said. "I wasn't going to try and persevere on and hurt the rest of

His wrist was examined at a nearby first-aid station by Dr. Chris Kryder, an internist hired by The Country Club for the Open, lee was applied as the dropped a ball and pitched to the injury had already started swelling and a make-shift sling put on his arm.

dic surgeon, Dr. Norton Baker. Norman was four shots over par at the time he withdrew.

survived the cut at 146. Mize holed four birdies in a six-hole stretch on the back nine, but like Simpson bogeyed the 18th hole.

"I was satisfied with all parts of my game today," said Mize, the 1987 Masters champion. "I felt comfortable with everything I did.'

Having successfully withstood the pressure at one major. Mize is now less nervous playing in majors. Asked what winning another of the Gland Slam events would mean, he responded: "Two down and two to go."

Strange fired a 67 with five birdies, but bogeyed Nos. 15 and 17. Gilder's round of 69 was highlighted by the 108-yard wedge shot he sank for birdle at the par-4 11th.

MIZE FLOURISHES

BROOKLINE, Mass, (UPI) -Unfazed by the withdrawal of playing partner Greg Norman and encouraged by his putting success, Larry Mize is flourishing at the U.S. Open.

Winner of the 1987 Masters, Mize posted a 4-under-par 67 in Friday's second round of the 88th U.S. Open, bettering his first round by two shots.

Norman suffered a hand injury on the 9th hole when his club struck a hidden rock in the rough.

"It wasn't a distraction." said Mize of Norman's departure. which left him to play the back nine with Craig Stadler. Normally, twosomes are only used for the final two rounds of a major tournament. As Norman walked away at the 10th. Mize said his first thought was: 'Here's the weekend already.''

Mize had six birdies and two bogeys over the 7.010-yard

Brock making major impact

Herald Sports Writer

CASSELBERRY - One of the greatest suprizes to the Orlando Jai-Alai Fronton this season has been the play of a 19 year old backcourter named Brock. Many people in the Longwood area know him as Brock Blackmore, a 1987 graduate of Lyman High School. His stepfather. Cucho who was a fine backcourt player and who also played at the Orlando Fronton, has taught this young man the game of Jai-Alai.

Orlando General Manager. Santi Echaniz signed Brock to a contract last year and sent him to play at the Big-Bend Fronton to gain experience. After a month into the season he is playing in the feature singles games here with Bob, Eduardo and many other seasoned veterans on the roster and is currently in second place in overall wins, just one game out of the lead. Our player managers. Atano and Tomas both feel Brock has a brilliant future ahead of him and will improve with age.

The crafty veteran Eduardo is lead as last week he led the way with 14 wins to raise his total to 43 on the year to go along with being in the money 29 times. Urquidi and Ricardo are also making a run at the leaders with some outstanding play, Reyes, the "Thrilla from Manilla", was in the money 31 times out of the 60 games he played in.

Eduardo's 14 wins led the way for the week with Urquidi registering 13 victories and Brock winning 12 games. Pinson leads the most wins on the year with 49 with Brock right behind with 48. Liam is a close third with 47 victories. Liam leads the in the money percentage with a 474 (47-60-43/ 325 games played), with Bob second at 430 (32-34-38/ 249 games played) with Brock in third at 421 (48-32-29) 266 games played).

The feature singles games still find the "Little Giant" Urquids leading with 16 wins, followed by Marshall with 13 and Ricardo with 11. In the feature doubles. Eduardo is picking up steam and leads the frontcourters with 10

Billie Jean picks Martina

(Editor's note: Billie Jean King, winner of a record 20 Wimbledon titles including six in singles, will provide frequent commentaries for UPI during the upcoming championships. Today, she looks at the leading contenders for the women's crown.)

> By BILLIE JEAN KING Written for UPI

WIMBLEDON, England (UPI) - Martina Navratilova will win the women's singles title at Wimbledon for the seventh straight year and become the all-time singles champion.

Why her and not Stelli Graf? Because I know the all-time record for most singles titles means a lot to Martina. She currently stands tied with Helen Wills with eight Wimbledon singles titles. A victory in this year's tournament will make her the record

I know Martina wants to get in the history books, and this is a good way for her to make It. She was extremely disappointed in losing to Natalia Zvereva of the Soviet Union at the French Open and, as a result, will be more motivated to do well at Wimbledon.

She learned a good lesson at the French: she must take one match at a time and not look ahead. She has to play each point at a time and not look to the end of the match. I'm sure that the devastating loss to Zvereva caused Martina to refocus in a positive way.

Here's a look at the other contenders:

Steffi Graf

Graf was completely overpowering at the French Open. She cruised to the finals without difficulty, except for her match with Gabriela Sabatini, and delivered a knockout punch to Zvereva with a crushing 6.0, 6.0 triumph to take the title.

She is running better, littting the ball harder and her lethal forehand is sharper than ever, Last year she only lost twice - at Wimbledon and the U.S. Open, both times to Navrattlova.

Graf and Navcattlova have not met since the 1987 U.S. Open. If they meet at Wimbledon this year, you can be sure that Steffi will want to even the score, and that Martina will be out to regain her No. 1 ranking. It is important for Steffi to do well at Wimbledon this year.

Pam Shriver

Pam has always been a great grass court player but never has reached her potential at Wimbledon. This year, Pam is probably in her best frame of mind. She has lost 12 pounds in the last month, and has been doing a lot or running and conditioning Everyone says she looks the best and is the most positive she has ever

I think Pam is really looking forward to reaching her full potential at Wimbledon this year. What that means is that she'll probably make it to at least the semis. Having never won a Grand Slam event. Pammost likely feels this is one of her best chances. However, a grotn pull, which forced her to withdraw from the Eastbourne tournament this week, may be a factor

Chris Evert

Chris has been hampered a lot by the bone spur in her right foot, and I don't know if she's had a lot of match play. She said she is pain-free for the first time in six weeks, and that she is taking a lot of precautions.

After an impressive victory at the Virginia Slims of Houston, where she defeated Martina in a straight-set final. Chris was forced out of the Italian Open early because of the hone spur. Several weeks later at the French Open she was again bothered by the nagging injury, which required ultra sound treatment and cortisone injections.

She is definitely suspect because she hasn't played enough recently, However, I think her current attitude in excellent. She is pretty happy right now. I think she'll play as if she has nothing to lose.

Grass is her worst surface. but I think she'll play really well. Chris has won three singles titles on grass, and for your weakest surface, that's unbelievable.

Gabriela Sabatini

Gaby is still improving. She has had two impressive wins this year - the Virginia Slims of Florida, where she defeated Stell in the final, and the Italian Open. She also defeated Graf at the semis in Amelia

Static She is getting much better about playing the net, and has become a much better thinking player since going to Angel Giminez, her new coach, I think he has been a great coach, and has done all the right things for her. She doesn't get as tired as she used to, but I still think her stamina

Her first serve has also improved. Overall, Gaby is a much more cabable player than she ever has been.

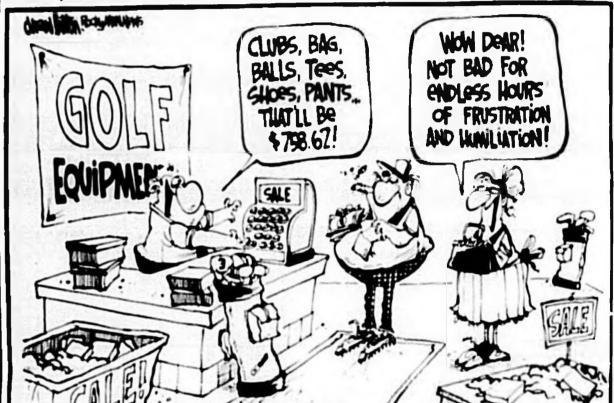

is suspect.

Hana Mandlikova

Hana is the same, a question mark. You just never know with Hana. One day she's at the top and one day she's at the bottom. She's had quite a few injuries and doesn't seem as consistent as other players.

People still forget that she has won the Australian, the French and the U.S. Opens. However, she has never reached the finals at Wimbledon

Johnson upsets world-ranked Pedroza

LAS VEGAS. Nev. (UPI) Mike Johnson upset previously unbeaten and world-ranked Engels Pedroza, scoring a technical knockout Friday at 2:07 of the ninth round of a junior-welterweight light.

Johnson, 16-1-1 with 11 knockouts, floored an exhausted Pedroza, 19-1 with 19 knockouts, three times in the ninth round to end the scheduled 10-round bout under Nevada State Athletic Commission rules.

Lack of stamina sank Pedroza. It was the first time he had been past the fifth round and only the third time past the second round.

Johnson, of Ann Arbor, Mich., was losing big on all three judges' scorecards through eight rounds and had little behind his punches in the ninth. But a tired Pedroza had his hands by his

Italy claims 2-0 win over Denmark

BONN, West Germany (UPI) -Alessandro Altobelli, the veteran midfield holdover from Italy's 1982 World Cup champions. scored within a minute of coming off the bench Friday to spark Italy to a 2.0 victory over Denmark and move the Italians into the semifinals of the European Championships.

Italy, completing its Group One play in Cologne, joins host nation West Germany in the semifinals, which will begin next week in Stuttgart.

West Germany, behind two goals from Rudi Voller, defeated Spain 2-0 in Munich to secure first place in Group One. Spain, the beaten 1984 finalist, had eliminated West Germany from the European Championships four years ago.

The semifinal berths for Group Two will be decided Saturday, with the Soviet Union and surprising Ireland the favorites to advance. The Soviets play winless England and Ireland faces Holland.

At Cologne, Italy received goals from two substitutes, Altobelli at 66 minutes and Luigi De'Agostini with three minutes remaining. Altobelli, who has a penchant for scoring off the bench in big games, replaced Roberto Mancini midway through the second half.

His goal came after striker Gianluca Vialli made a strong rush down the left flank. Altobelli anticipated the low cross and evaded Bjoern Kristensen before beating goalkeeper Peter Schmeichel.

Italian Coach Azeglio Vicini said he substituted Altobelli because Mancini was tired.

"Mancini was a little bit exhausted from playing the type of game we play." Vicini said. "Altobellt is a player capable of getting into the game very quickly as he showed, so there's no problem. That's our tactic."

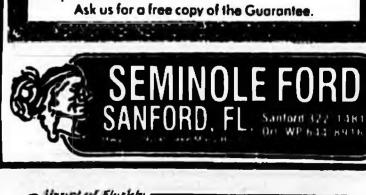

Like Altobelli. De'Agostini scored shortly after entering the game for midfielder Roberto Donadoni. Giuseppe Bergomi. Italy's star defenseman, made a cross pass from deep on the right flank and De'Agostini scored from near the far post.

start getting us dressed for school. He would patiently tie and untie the bow on my dress until he got the bow just right. Daddy even braided my hair as best he could until a neighbor volunteered to do my hair.

When I was small, Daddy was there to wipe away the tears, to console me when I was sad and to talk to us and give loving advice. He always encourages us to do our best in whatever we try to accomplish. Being a father with three young children must have been a very hard task for him.

"Daddy was strict and his rules were followed because he firmly believed that sparing the rod spoiled the child. As a child, I thought that Daddy was very mean, but as an adult, I understand why he was that way. Daddy worked hard and all the time, but he always found the time to be with us and to take us to different attractions—to keep our minds occupied and to make us feel that we were/are still a family

Today, Daddy is still one in a million. The love and attention he gave when we were small is still in force as we are all adults. We feel that there are not words enough to say how very special our father, Derry McGill Sr., is.

McGill, who is retired from the plumbing business, has lived in the same home on 13th Place in Sanford since 1941. He was born in Tallahassee and his mother moved her family of five sons to Sanford when McGill was six.

In 1933 he married Magaline Hamilton McGill and they had four sons, Derry Jr., Rue Lee, Elijahn "Barney", and Johnnie Tex." before the daughter Mrs. McGill always wanted. Nadine, was born.

Mrs. McGill died as result of a stroke in 1958, and years before McGill had promised "If she should be the shortest liver, I'd. take care of the kids. he said. 'She would have done the Same."

Because Nadine's mother so wanted a daughter, and because Nadine is his only daughter, and the baby of the family. McGill said, "She's extra special to me. She's everything to me. She's just like her mamma was."

McGill never remarried, he said, because I had a stepfather. The way my stepfather didus. I said if I ever had children. I'd never put a woman over them. It worked out I had a couple of neighbors who helped me with Nadine."

But rearing Nadine, who works in the hookstore at Scininole Contaminaty College: was McGill's biggest problem. None of his children have ever been in trouble he said, but many times. "Nadine hindered me a lot. I had to carry her a lot. of places. I had no place to leave

McGill wanted Nadine to look perfect in her little dresses, so he tried her patience when he tried to tie her sash or add bows to her hair, like her mother always did.

"That's always special to me. I. remember him sitting in the kitchen tying those bows," Nadine said. He wouldn't let her date until she was 16 and then insisted that her boyfriends get his permission to take her out. McGill said.

All of McGill's time was devoted to work and caring for his children. He made a point of taking them to church and Sunday school and also on regular family outings to area attractions such as Six Gun Territory and to the beach.

McGill spends his time in retirement fishing and visiting attractions, which he still enjoys.

Couple shares counseling careers

By Breena Kent Paine Special to the Herald

NEW ORLEANS - When the Donaldsons said "I do," they did. They chose the same career, they shared the same dream, they studied for their muster's degrees at the same time, and they both recieved their doctorate degrees on May 21 from New Orleans Baptist Theological Seminary.

But, most important, Patrick Donaldson of Lake Mary and Mary Beth Williams Donaldson of Sanford both believe in leading others to Christ through their

The Donaldsons' long years of pursuing degrees are over now that they both have received their Doctor of Education degrees in psychology and counseling. But, it has not been easy

We've had some strange schedules. I think the only reason it was possible for both to study and work at the same time) was that both of us were studying in the same area. That helped us persevere. It wasn't always an up situation, we had ups and downs. But, because we had common goals, we were able to work together." Patrick said:

He is prison chaplain at Cross City Correctional Institution in Cross City and Mary Beth is school psychologist for layer District schools in Cross City Their dream is to open a constrainty counseling center together.

As both have chosen the counseling field for their ministry, they use each other as "sounding boards." We ask one another for advice about how to deal with different situations." Patrick said, "We search one another and find out new ideas on how to help people in different situations." The Donaldsons are also very active in their church. "I'm able to help my church, even while out ministering in the prison." Patrick said. "I don't have any qualms at all in giving back to them, helping in outreach, Church Training, because they helped support me through seminary through the cooperalearning from the professors. I didn't have to use people as an experimental ground. If you have to learn using people, ...you could end up burting people, and even turning them off to the gospel. Hut, by using the professors' (experience), you can avoid a Seminary also "helped me grow as a person, it helped me to relate to other people better. I have more of an understanding for people - and realize that Godloves them just as much as He loves me. And that's helpful in the prison setting, because knowing what the people are there for, it would be easy not to love them. But, I can love them through Christ," he said.

Patrick chose to study for his doctorate in psychology and counseling at New Orleans Semmary because I had a good experience with my master's degree, and I knew the professors and felt they were men of God I could learn a lot from." He received his Master of Divinity degree from the seminary in 1984: Mary Beth received her Master of Religious Education degree in 1985.

I chose to pursue the doctorate because when I finished the master's. I felt like I learned a lot about counseling and helping others. I wanted to gather all the skills I could, and I felt like the doctorate would be valuable," said Patrick.

Mary Beth has had ample opportunities to implement what she has learned. For example, in the fall of 1987, "some of our special education students were on a school bus and had an accident; several died. The crisis counseling and some of the experiences I had had here (at the seminary) helped me not to be scared of it." she said.

One family Mary Beth counseled was very poor. She had never been to a hospital before, and when I went to see them, they had saved all the food on the tray so they wouldn't be without.

Through her counseling, many "doors have been opened." and children and their families have come

Mary Beth has also ministered with her husband in the prison. "It's a way I can feel active in his ministry," she said.

Sometimes guys will tell her things they don't feel comfortable telling me," said Patrick, who also has made sharing Christ an important part of his

There have been two or three occasions where I've led fellows to the Lord who were real prison tough guys-cussing and violating the rules, and wouldn't have anything to do with church or God."

He shared Christ with them, they made commitments, and he was able to help them in Bible study. I even helped them through some tough times. family problems, and times when their faith wavered

Through those times, "they have come back to the Lord and found out that God forgives. That's an important lesson for them to learn, especially in prison, because it's a real pressure cooker environment," said Patrick.

Changing the quality of a day

Most of those in the highschool graduating class I was addressing would not. I knew, be going on to college. Some might attend a business or vocational school, but the majority would begin job hunting in a week.

I felt this was not the occasion for one of those "the future is inyour hands" commencement speeches. Yet even if these particular graduates were not ready to change the world, a greater opportunity lay before them. They could change the quality of each day. "To change the quality of a day - that is the highest of the arts," said Thoreau.

Maybe it is good to aim high in life and to have lofty goals. But there is something we need even more — to see the possibilities in each 24-hour day. in our lives. Thousands can sit and dream of the future. But to change the quality of a day that takes an extraordinary person.

Yet anybody, regardless of background or IQ, can do it. I decided to tell these graduates sitting before me what a wonderful opportunity was theirs if they would remember just three things ...

There is something greater than greatuess.

People who aspire to greatness can become blind to the fact that greatness isn't the greatest thing in the world. It may change the world, but it can't change the quality of a day.

Goodness is one of those things that is greater than greatness. When we think of the people who have meant the most to us, we are ready to admit they have not been the most successful, or the best-read or the wittiest, or the best conversationalists

Certainly they have not been. for the most part, people the world would call great. Yet we wouldn't trade them for all the great people in the world because they are the ones who brightened the days of our lives. They were good people who cared. We can strive to be like them.

• Little things mean a lot. Little things like kindness and patience and honesty. Little things, like saying "I love you" - three little words that have changed the quality of more days than any others. One of the reasons so many marriages fail today - or fail to be what they might be - is that we have forgotten to say those three little

When I was serving as foreman of a grand jury. I daily heard criminal cases involving people who saw nothing but crime and degradation all day long every day. And from what they saw, they put together a life of their own that turned out to be, unfortunately, very much like what they saw around them.

By this time I was hoping my young audience was getting my drift - that, while it might be out of their power to change the world, it was in their power to change the quality of a day.

FUNNY FARM (PG) Chevy Chase's comic persona is that of the nice wiseguy - a put on style that has proved a bit problematic for the movies. Acting requires identification, whereas Chase is most adept at a kind of drip-dry detachment. Even at his best, Chase can sometimes seem to dissolve in self-mockery-his big and somewhat lumpy body sending out the message "Getme out of here!"

The new summer comedy "Funny Farm" finds Chase looking nonplussed in a hundred different, mostly gental, ways. He plays a sportswriter who drops out of the Manhattan rat race and moves with his wife (the charming Madolyn Smith) to the country, Intending to write a novel, the man instead spends most of his time adjusting to the peculiarities of rural life. There's the crazy postman. weird neighbors, and a sheriff without a driver's license who relies on the local taxt service. Meanwhile, the wife turns out to be the star fiction writer of the

Seminole's cocaine problem

CCIB agents putting squeeze on local dealers and users

By Klonie Jordan Herald Staff Writer

SANFORD - The nation's drug dilemma has received much attention. recently, especially with accusations and counter accusations being traded among presidential candidates and Mes-Reagan's active involvement in her. Just-Say So program.

It is broad in scope aid costs the taxpayers millions of dollars cach year. It. is more than a problem, it is a coast to coast, epidemic that, results, inloss of life, runned careers and wanton. destruction at every norm

Settimole County is not unlike New York City of California when it comes to being afflicted with the wors of narcotics: There are cocatne and maripiana transactions being conducted every day, some in broad daylight, right in our own back

Lieutenant Don Eslinger, who heads the City-County Investigation Bureau in-Seminole County, knows it's a problem. that won't go away. He scowls when asked if there is a solution to the localepidentic, their glances floorward and shakes his boart.

We know we can't stop it complete. by the admits. But we can establish a deterrent. I honestly believe we're doing good. We re on our way of reaching our goal - to establish a deterrant to the drug problem in the area.

Eslinger has headed the CCIB — a drug task force made up of sheriff's deputies. and city officers from Santord Casselberry and Altamonte Springs since July of last year He has been involved in county law enforcement for the past 10 years.

Tackling the cocame problem is noeasy task, but Eslinger accepts the challenge with a look of determination inhis eyes and a hill fire and brumstone

The objective of the force is to work street level, and, mid-level, narcotics, as well as vice-related crimes, the said-Cocame beour mainter one enforcement. priority. Cocame has a great effect, both directly and indirectly on the whole county. Drugs and drug triated crimes

During 1987 11 of 19 homicides in Seminole County were directly linked to the use of cocaine in addition there were eight known taralities attributable. to cocamic overdoses. The CCIB has thus far this year recorded 239 arrests for dring or vice related crimes. The task force has seized 433 marijuana plants. five pounds of processed manipatra and 28 pounds of cocause.

Why is the problem so widespread? this simple. Estinger said. It's just a matter of supply and demand.

There are people out there who will spend every dancethey get their hands on to buy cocume the said. When you have that kind of demand, you re going to naturally find parties who will take advantage of it.

Cocame in its powder form is called cocame hydrochloride Eslinger said A spinott of the product - more commonly known as crack - is cheap to produce and provides more profitable sales than the powder form.

It's just a way to make a living to those guys (the dealers). Eshinger said-Like any other business, they recognize the fact there will be occasional serbacks. Politics can dim perspective

Charges and countercharges of improper campaign contributions seem to be an endless and unavoidable ingredient of our political process. The latest is the allegation that a developer's giving to the campaign account of Barbara Christensen influenced her county commission vote in a matter related to the same developer. Mrs. Christensen is a candidate for the post of tax collector for Seminole County. The established facts in the matter are that the contribution was made, and the vote was cast. The decision on whether any action was improper rests with the public.

During the late stages of the most recent session of the Legislature. Senate President John Vogt announced his candidacy for state treasurer and insurance commissioner. He readily sought contributions for his campaign from lobbyists and PACs interested in pending legislation which resulted in an avalanche of criticism of the senator. Much of the criticism came from political opponents and was based on the appearance rather than any actual evil of political pandering.

One of those critics of Sen. Vogt was Sen. Ken Jenne, D.-Ft. Lauderdale who has now announced his own candidacy for the Democratic nomination for insurance commissioner, competing against Sen. Vogt and probably at least two others. Sen. Jenne's latest remarks against Sen. Vogt should be viewed in light of the fact that he was the apparent next president of the Senate until a conition of Republicans and conservative Democrats wrested control and elected Sen. Vogt to the post. Sen Jenne has announced this week that he will accept campaign contributions from individuals and firms regulated by the insurance department.

Voluntary contributions by supporters, with detailed reports of the income and expenditures open to public scrutiny, are a vital part of the election process. Such disclosures can open questions of propriety and judgement.

As to the appearances, candidates seem to fall into that Catch-22 of Caesar's wife: They must be spotless in all matters, disdaining even the appearance of evil.

Most candidates for public office, especially in areas such as Seminole County and its cities, are civic-minded individuals convinced they can make a significant contribution to the betterment of the area and their constituency. Most succeed in varying degrees. All are open to criticism in whatever they do, and most succeed in getting it to some extent. We commend candidates for their fortitude, and caution them to exercise judgement at all times. Remember Caesar's wife.

Penny wise?

It is always good news that an act by an arm of government will save tax payers money. Action by the county commission on the construction of the wastewater treatment plant at Yankee Lake is no exception. Commissioners agreed unanimously to award the construction bid for $9.8 million for the 2.5 million gallons per day plant. Construc-tion will take approximately 18 months. The contract amount is $1.2 million less than the original estimates of cost of construction and about $3.2 million less than the lowest offer when bids were received three months ago. Thus the citing of a $1.2 million savings with reasons attributed to reducing the size of the plant from 5 mgd to 2.5 mgd, plus an increase in bidders.

However, a sobering thought amid the saving celebration is the county administrators caution that upon completion, the plant will be functioning at capacity, so construction must begin immediately on a 2.5 mgd addition. This also will take about 18 months to complete.

The county is saving 20 percent of the lowest bid to build a plant with a 50 percent reduction in capacity. Let's hope that expansion in 18 months will not push total costs so high that the joy in savings now, becomes anguish later.

Baker's leaving ushers in lame duck era

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The lame duck era may be setting in at the White House, but President Reagan would be the last to admit it.

The president still feels he has goals to achieve before he leaves office on Jair. 20. But the impending departure of White House chief of staff Howard Baker appears to signal a winding down.

Baker changed the atmosphere and paved the way for better relations with Capitol Hill while the White House was still rocking from the Iran-Contra scandal. He also stepped in to help the president through his most trying crisis after chief of staff Donald Regan was given his walking papers.

Baker, could but says he won't write a "kiss and tell" book about President and Mrs. Reagan, something his predecessor did with a ven-

But it is difficult to believe that Baker, the political war horse, is ready to be put out to pasture. Republican Party loyalist that he is, it's expected he will do his share politically in the campaign, and if the second spot on the ticket is offered to him by Vice President George Bush, he will not turn it down.

Baker did not get into the nitty-gritty of running the White House. He left that to his deputy. Kenneth Duberstein, who has been anointed as Reagan's fourth chief of staff as he bows out after eight years in office.

Duberstein is a man for detail, and while Baker ran the show, "Duberdog" as Baker calls him, handled the heavy paperwork.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater seemed to personify life in the dwindling days of the Reagan administration when he discussed the future plans of other staffers, whether they would be jumping ship or staying on.

Asked if he had his resume circulating. Fitzwater said:
"My resume is always ready. I never go out without it."

First lady Nancy Reagan seems to be always saying goodbye these days. Her recent speeches indicate that she already has one foot out of the White House and into her new life in Los Angeles.

She also is getting bolder about baring her true feelings about living in the White House. She says her successor will experience "great thrills and great heartaches" in the goldfish bowl.

Mrs. Reagan's recent speeches may be a forerunner to her memoirs, which will be written and published after she leaves the White House. In that respect, the human side of the Reagan White House will be told.

It's too bad that the public will not be able to tour Blair House, the president's guest house, which has been renovated to the tune of $8.7 million in federal funds.

The house, actually a complex of four townhouses, has been transformed into an opulent mansion fit for a king. The furnishings, oriental rugs, crystal chandellers, silks and damasks as well as priceless furniture, put the White House in the shade.

Bush vs. Dukakis changing

WASHINGTON (NEA) — Voters may be in for one very nasty presidential campaign in 1988. Responding to polls that show George Bush trailing, the GOP has switched into the "attack phase" against Michael Dukakis.

The strategy is clear: Paint Gov. Dukakia, the Massachusetts Democrat. as just another heavy-taxing, big-spending liberal who is soft on crime and communism—and who, with little foreign policy experience, is incapable of facing down Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev across the bacterious table.

bargaining table.
This strategy consists almost entirely of "negative campaigining."
What the vice president and his

What the vice president and his GOP advisers are saying is that, in order to counter the gap in the polis, they will concentrate not on telling voters why Bush should be president, but rather on why Dukakis should not be.

Polis taken over the past six weeks all pretty much agree: If the ejection were held today. Dukakis would win! Depending on the poll, the Democratic candidate is anywhere from six to 12 points ahead of Basels.

The recent polls consistently indicate a key fact: The reason Bush trails is that President Reagan's popularity with large segments of the Democratic constituency has not translated into popularity for Bush.

If the current trends continue, blue collar workers and white middle class Southerners — who overwhelmingly backed Reagan in 1980 and 1984 — will return to the traditional Democratic fold in November.

Key political operatives in the Bush campaign blame themselves for this state of affairs. They believe they erred during the primary season by more or less ignoring the Democratic contest and Dukakis.

"We should have gone on the attack as soon as it became apparent he was going to win," says one top-level Bush adviser. "But instead, we let him define himself. We should have been telling voters who Michael Dukakis really is, but instead we let him do that. That is a mistake we are going to quickly correct."

Most political observers believe Dukakis was fortunate that more conservative opponents, like Sen. Albert Gore Jr., dropped out of the campaign quickly, leaving only Jesse Jackson. Pitted against the most liberal candidate in the field, Dukakis came off looking very moderate.

Dealing with failures

COSTA MESA, Calif. (NEA) — Ignoring the scandal that has engulfed the nation's thrift institutions, the savings and loan industry persists in invoking memories of a long-gone era of responsible, conservative S&L management.

In an ambitious television advertising campaign long on nostalgia but short on reality, the U.S. League of Savings Institutions, the industry's largest trade association, claims that S&Ls are "your partners in the American dream."

"Our relationship with you, your parents and your grandparents before you goes back over a century. We were there, reaching out to help Americans realize their desire for home ownership," says a typical backward-looking commercial in the league's new $5 million promotion effort.

"For over 150 years, individuals and families have turned to savings institutions for a home loan or a safe and secure place to tuck away savings for a rainy day, a child's education, a retirement nest egg." adds the league's president.

Contrast that syrupy rhetoric with the real-life situation at two typically troubled savings institutions here in the Los Angeles suburb of Costa Mesa, where depositors recently required $1.35 billion in bailouts from federal regulators:

(BU) American Diversified Savings Bank was operated by a former pilot in the Indian Air Force who specialized, not in financing home mortgages, but in putting together limited partnerships to entice wealthy individuals into making real estate investments.

The savings bank's ventures in 22 states included two ethanol plants, three wind farms, a cable television system and a contract to collect manure for a co-generation facility.

(BU) North America Savings and Loan was operated by a dentist and his girlfriend who specialized in making investments for other dentists and doctors. More than a quarter of its assets did go into home mortgages — in Alaska, where almost half of the investments went sour.

When California regulators seized North America Savings last year, they described it as the worst case of S&L fraud in the state's history. Federal regulators have filed a lawsuit to recover as much as $40 million they say was unlawfully siphoned out of the S&L.

Those federal regulators prefer to merge alting S&Ls into healthy institutions, but the two thrifts here in Costa Mesa were in such terrible financial condition that no reputable firm could be persuaded to take them over.

Of the 235 S&Ls that have failed since scandal began swirling about the industry in 1981, only 10 have been resolved through a straight payoff to their depositors.

Moreover, the $1.14 billion required to compensate American Diversified depositors was almost four times larger than the previous record-setting payout — $300 million to customers of a Texas savings institution. (The North America payout was a more modest $209 million.)

Although the interest offered on S&L deposits averaged just over 7 percent nationally, both of the failed Costa Mesa thrifts were paying more than 8.5 percent before they were closed. Those rates attracted short-term deposits, arranged through brokers and invested in highly speculative ventures.

The S&L industry, however, refuses to acknowledge that the thrifts here are typical of hundreds throughout the country in very real danger of collapsing because of irresponsible management, insider fronder restanglement, declines fraud or regional economic declines.

Psyche behind grabbings

By Rebecca Kolberg UPI Science Writer

WASHINGTON (UPI) — In 1963, an engineering student named Robert was driving home to Chicago after visiting his girlfriend when he got lost unaccountably on a familiar road, saw strange lights and his car stopped working.

The next thing he remembered was waking up, driving into Chicago two hours later. When Robert took a shower he noticed an odd mark on his shoulder, and the experience left him with strange

Although Robert thought his experience may have involved an extraterrestrial phenomenon, it occurred before other alleged alten abductions gained widespread publicity and he tried to shrug it off.

But in 1981, after nearly two decades of anxiety and personal problems, he underwent hypnosis, and an investigation that involved conscious recall and questioning of acquaintances.

Under hypnosis. Robert said that after his car stopped, a little creature appeared in the back seat. The aiten — small, with a round, hairless head, big, black eyes and a skin-tight uniform — led Robert into a UFO, where he was subjected to a physical examination and shown strange, movie-lace mages.

The altens, who Robert said communicated by telepathy rather than speech, eventually walked him back to his car, saying it would be to his benefit if he could not recall the encounter.

Robert's experience is typical of at the least 300 instances of alten abduction that have been reported worldwide, primarily in the United States, England and South America.

But one controversial theory, proposed recently by a psychologist, holds that Robert and the others were not the victims of weird little creatures from outer space, but rather are victims of "fantasy-prone" personality, a still poorly understood psychological state.

"Fantasy-prone people are not psychotic, not crazy, not even neurotic. They're just a little different than the rest of us," said Robert Baker, a psychology professor at University of Kentucky.

"What lies behind most of socalled alien encounter reports is a problem with people who are suggestible being told these things," said Baker.

Contingency plan ready if big banks fail

By Jack Anderson and Joseph Spear

WASHINGTON — The U.S. government has a contingency plan for a national emergency should the giants of the banking industry come to collapse.

Recent nationwide attention has focused on the savings and loan crisis and maneuverings by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board to bail out thrifts that are near bankruptcy.

But a collapse of commercial banks is potentially a greater threat. Should one of the large institutions go under, it would cause a tidal wave of destruction to roll across the financial system.

Federal banking officials have decreed, behind closed doors, that before they would allow the top 10 banks in the country to go broke, the feds would make them wards of the state.

A Reagan Administration interagency task force drafted the plan for, in essence, nationalizing America's biggest banks in a financial crisis. Represented on that task force are the Treasury Department, the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. (FDIC). Their plan was motivated by the possibility that Latin American nations could default on billions of dollars in loans from American banks.

The task force concluded that a collapse of major banks could not be handled the way most minor bank failures are taken care of — with a merger or by paying off depositors. Finding a merger partner or buyer for a mega-bank in dire straits would be difficult, if not impossible, in a crisis. And the payoff of insured depositors would be a horror story, with deposits tied up for months.

"It must be recognized that the traditional methods of handling bank failures are probably unworkable in the case of a banking crisis." says the closely guarded report of the inter-agency task force.

The traditional methods "result in the disruption of services and would fuel the public perception of financial disaster." the report explains. "Assuming that one or more of the banks in jeopardy is among the nation's top 10 banks, the typical ... transaction with another operating institution would not be feasible due to a dearth of eligible bidders (and) the necessity of raising a lot of money under the darkest financial

Ideally, the federal contingency plan would kick in while the bank could still see the light. The plan calls for the Federal Reserve Board to use its statutory authority to lend unlimited amounts of money to failing institutions. Federal reserve banks would collect old currency and distribute new bills. According to confidential documents, those federal reserve banks have about $19 billion in unissued currency. The Federal Reserve facility in Culpepper, Va., has another $2.6

billion in currency to use during an emergency.

The job of the FDIC would be to create a new bank from what is left of the old one by forming a holding company and giving it capital to operate.

The government is wise to have a plan for the unthinkable. Should one of the titans of banking collapse, the resulting financial turmoil would rival the Great Depression. There are about 15,000 commercial banks in the United States, handling more than $600 billion in transactions every day.

A run on one large bank would probably spread like wildfire to the other large banks. The vast majority of deposits in the biggest banks are uninsured and come from foreign sources. If the money managers in those foreign accounts smell trouble, they can yank their money out with a few keystrokes on a computer, leaving the bank an empty

Maybe. my mama taught me right. Or perhaps I just can't conceive of a social gathering or public event as a place to show off or pick nits with someone else.

If cornered and forced into a discussion on some sticky issue. by someone who had a negligent mama, l'Il talk about it that I won tembarrass my hosts or employer, or ruin the good time of whoever picked upmy hotel room and bar bill. I admit that not only am I mystified by etiquette, but also the social importance of one upsmanship, of jockeying for position in the limelight.

So. I guess you could expect me to be floored by the cool war waged by Nancy Reagan and Raisa Gorbachev

Their countries are picking up a whopping tab so their husbands can travel across the world and talk about keeping usall out of The Last Big Fight. and these two women are showing up late and scrapping over microphones. If arms talks were up to Nancy and Raisa. our armies would be on red alert right now.

Still perplexed at the first ladies' behavior, I watched the orrespondents on the Public Broadcasting System's "The McLaughlin Group" chewitover. Columnist Pat Buchanan cried. "I pick Nancy!" and Newsweek's Eleanor Clift asserted, "I think Nancy's put up with enough from That Woman!"

Thanks, guys, that was really enlightening.

Helt like I was watching mothers at a Little League game. defending a first-base fistlight. I longed for the good old days. when Ludy Bird or Pat or Rosalyn went somewhere and were just nice. Or at least if they weren't nice, we didn't know about it. No late arrivals, no no shows, no vying for reporters' attentions. Everyone seemed to get ready on time, be there, and be polite.

But I will be asked on occasion to represent my employer at functions where someone else is moving and shaking. Not being one of the movers or shakers. I will probably not consider it important if someone else makes a more fashionably late entrance than 1, or gets there at all. And I will probably be thankful my mama taught menot to start a fistlight on first base when somebody else is batting. With my luck, my employer would dun me for my travel expenses.

Any mate I was helping would send me back home on a Greybound and yank my designer dress allowance. I don't know how many of my tax dollars helped jet Nancy to Russia to wine and dine. But for my money, I'd like to see her fined for clipping. Perhaps the cost of one expensive bottle of chablis, or the jet fuel bill for Air Force One to take her over there and back.

Or cut off her long-distance calls to astrologers. Maybe that's where the whole problem Marted, when Joan Quigley told Nancy. "You will be insulted by a queen from an Evil Empire. and will stand up to her. Not a good time for social engagements or world peace." Interest rates and the resilient economy

By David F. Scott, J. University of Central Plorida

Whether business people or consumers openly admit it, global commercial activity in 1988 is being directly affected by the momentous stock market correction that culminated last October 19. On that day a bit over 604 million shares traded hands on the New York Stock Exchange and the Dow Jones Industrial Average declined 508 points to close at 1739. In only five trading days, the Dow lost 30% of its value and "the crash of 1987" took its place in history.

An aftershock of the October 19 retrenching is a sharpened awareness of the crucial role that interest rate levels and adjustments play in affecting economic activity. Paying attention to interest rates is good for business, your wealth, and probably-your health. Presently, the Federal Reserve System (the central bank of the U.S.) under the leadership of its Chairman, Mr. Alan-Greenspan has tightened credit in the financial system and, thereby, pushed up short-term rates. What this means for the economy, and you as a participant in it. will be reviewed.

The discussion can be simplified by focusing on four important rates, all of which are regularly accessible in local papers. Specifically these are the (1) federal funds rate, (2) commercial bank prime lending rate, (3) 3-month U.S. Treasury bill rate, and (4) 30-year U.S. Treasury bond rate. The movement in these nominal rates (i.e., they are not inflation adjusted) over the past eighteen months is displayed in Exhibit 1:

Embedded in these numbers are some severe facts and tendencies. Some of the tendencies are disturbing. First, interest rate levels at the moment are only a bit lower than where they were a week before the October 19 market adjustment. Second, the structure of rates was notably lower in both January 1987 and 1988 than at the midpoint of these respective years. Third, the Federal Reserve took overt action in the first half of both 1987 and 1988 to raise shortterm rates. This is reflected in the rising tederal funds rate—a rate directly affected by Fed monetary policy actions.

When the federal funds rate rises and the rate on short-term treasury bills also rises, it is inevitable that the commercial bank prime lending rate will also go up.

An increasing treasury bill rate pushes up the rates that banks must pay on certificates of deposit to attract ionnable funds into their operations. Thus, the prime rate jumps on loans made by banks to protect their profitability. Exhibit 2 contains the changes in the prime rate from January 1987 through May

Note that the prime rate increased in 1987 on five occasions before the October 19 debacle. One increase occurred on October 7-only eight trading days prior to the crash. That October 7 increase followed on the heels of the Fed's half-point hike in its discount rate to 6% on September 4. A prime rate increase also occurred on September 4. Right up until the crash then, the Fed was signalling, ever so clearly, that it preferred higher interest rates. The prime rate decreased in three increments after October 19 to a level of 8.50% Then on May 22, 1988, once again in response to a Fed tightening, the prime increased by 50 basis points to 9%. Since so many adjustable rate loans are tied to either treasury bill rates or the prime, it is obvious that households as well as businesses are directly affected by such movements in rates.

The increase in key rates has not occurred in a vacuum. In other words the Fed made some tough choices in pushing up short rates in 1987 prior to October 19. The objectives were to strengthen the dollar in foreign exchange markets and to signal a dissatisfaction with renewed inflationary trends.

The dollar could not be boistered too much, however, or the burdensome trade deficit would be exacerbated. But, to let inflation run unchecked would cause long rates to leap, placing a severe drag on business investment spending. Indeed, long rates as typified by the yield on 30-year Treasury bonds were in the vicinity of 10% at the time of crash.

These beliwether bonds and their private sector counterparts-high grade corporates-became attractive alternatives to equity investments last October and contributed to the flight from common stocks. By February 1968 the yields on 30-year Treasury bonds had retreated to about 8.3%. A renewed concern over inflation coupled with the Fed action at the short end of the yield curve pushed these rates back over 9.% during May.

in a nutshell economic policymakers at the federal level are faced with these

1. To improve the trade deficit the value of the dollar in foreign exchange markets should fall. Devaluing the dollar too much, though, invites inflation as imported components cost more.

2. To attract foreign savings to finance the U.S. federal deficit Interest rates should rise. Higher rates do attract foreign investors; this increases demand for the dollar which raises its value and worsens the trade deficit. Increasing the value of the dollar and raising interest rates go hand in hand.

3. Rising commodity prices and rising consumer prices argue for higher interest rates. Interest rates that are driven too high will abort an amazing domestic economic expansion that began in November 1982.

Fortunately some benchmarks are out there to mitigate the anguish associated with conflicting policies. In addition to the natural uncertainties that accompany the bellowings inherent to a presidential election year, it seems here that we should be concerned with (1) the prospects of another financial market crash. (2) unreasonable inflation. (3) the onstart of the ninth recession since World War II. and (4) negative random shocks to the domestic political and economic systems.

With regard to random shocks, such as firing missiles at oil platforms in the Persian Gulf, we can do little more than hope. Inflation is a different matter, it is worse than 1986 when consumer prices rose by a scant 1% relative to 1985, but nothing like 1979 when prices leaped by 13.3%. For the twelve months ended April 1988 consumer prices rose by 3.9%. Thus, the rate of inflation is not frightening. This favors holding a steady course on interest rate levels.

Likewise, avoiding both a negative major market reaction and the onset of recession favor either steady or lower nominal interest rates. Two indicators buttress this policy course: (1) commercial bank loan demand over the past year has grown at only a 3.4% annual rate and (2) real economic growth while good. is not of boom proportions. In 1984 compared to 1983 real gross national product rose by 6.8%. Growth in 1987 was in line with long-term norms and came in at 2.9%. Prospects for this year look to growth of 3.3% to 3.5% compared to all of 1987. That's much better than a recession and we will all benefit if it is sustained rather than dampened.

In light of current economic conditions further monetary restraint on the part of the Fed is not to be encouraged. Such restraint would take the zing out of the resilient economy. The result would not be good for you or the rest of Central

Speeder thanks police for enforcing law

The Good Book says your sin shall find you out.

For two years, four months and 15 days I have, along with my dear wife and son, been a resident of the great city of Sanford. I have had the highest respect and love for this city. and indeed for the police of the city.

For a goodly percentage of the time we have lived here I have said that I wish the police would crack down on speed violators, especially in residential areas. I have always considered myself to take speed limits very seriously and have tried, for the most part, to keep within the speed limits. Well, a few days ago I noticed our dutiful city police on side streets off 20th Street and Country Club Drive stopping speed violators, and I thought "Good! Maybe the word will get around the city police mean business in cracking down on speed violators!" I observed our police force day of the Lord for me. I had just dropped off my church notices for our church at the Sanford Herald and was on my way home (I was later than usual) and I was rejoicing that all was right with the world. Suddenly, as I was sailing upholding the speed laws in our residential area on at least a couple of occasions before the coming of the down 20th Street west, one of three men with a badge was waving his hand to pull me over. Never let it be said I do not obey the law enforcement men of Sanford. I screeched on my brakes to see what was on his mind. In a very professional, impersonal manner the officer informed me that I was going 42 miles per hour in a 25 mile zone. He then told me to turn the corner and park behind another lady, also caught in the act of

He wrote out the ticket while telling me my rights. I hadn't planned on this: our budget didn't allow for this either. Me, the great advocator of admiring the police for cracking down on speed violators was letting them use me as a public example of how well they do their duty. My sin cost me $86. Terms: one month, and I can't pay it off in weekly installments either. The police did their duty; I was caught fair and square, and I have learned a lesson I shall long remember.

At first I sulked in my beer and thought I was a victim of the law of averages going against me. But let me go on record still having the highest respect for the Sanford police. Those three men were doing their job efficiently, professionally and without distinctions of age, race, color, religion, sex, or social class.

Now one point I would like to make. if I may as a (normally) law-abiding citizen. I would be grateful if Sanford bicycle riders would please ride on the right side of the street, with the flow of traffic, as safety rules require. When I was a kid this was really stressed, but I note at least half of our cyclists of all ages ride facing traffic. and then you get the finger if you protest to them. But who gets the book thrown at them if an accident occurs with a person on a bicycle? Observe professiona bike riders and they always ride on the right side of the street.

Praise for Reagan at the summit

I liked your editorial "Not Rushing into INF Treaty is Wise" (The Herald. June 10). If more people would read editorials instead of listening to television, we'd have wiser voters.

I was proud of our president's behavior in Moscow. He was willing to negotiate but remained skeptical enough. It made me feel a lot more confident that he came home in a good humor and left Mr. Gorbachev angry and frustrated. I am satisfied that Mr. Gorbachev got paid in full for his arrogrant behavior in Washington.

The liberals can no longer claim Mr. Reagan does not want peace. That's fine as long as he doesn't wear rose-colored glasses.

James Kilpatrick, Jeffrey Hart, Ben Wattenberg, Jeanne Kirkpatrick. George Will and Henry Kissinger are skeptical about any great changes in the Kremlin. Anthony Harrigan in his column "Glasnost and Reality" (Sanford Herald, June 8) says, "It is yet to be established that Gorbachev plans more than token reforms and these may be applied only to the Russian population. The non-Russians in the Soviet Empire may well continue to suffer...

The article on this subject that I have found most interesting is by the historian and co-author of Encounter Magazine, "Is Russia Really Changing?" Condensed for the Readers Digest's June edition, it traces other "changes" from the early 1920s to the present. None has been real and in all, the West was guilible.

The most interesting changes were Stalin's. There were so many. The first was during the 20s. It was economic, allowing "a limited free market and measure of private trade." The West rejoiced.

But it did not last. In a short time Stalin was starving millions of farmers in the Ukraine to force them to accept collectivizaton.

Then Stalin changed again. He gave the country a new "democratic" constitution. The West was sure the Soviets had given up world domination. Stalin was called "a great statesman." The Soviets were supposed to be working for world peace fighting facism in Spain.

Then there was another change. Stalin and Hitler became friends and divided eastern Europe. But at that time, the Ukraine was called "the Bread Basket of Europe". The Nazis needed bread. Hitler invaded Russia and Stalin joined the allies. The West praised Stalin. He was called "brilliant." and "kind."

After World War II, Stalin surprised his allies by driving them out of Romania, Hungary, Bulgaria and Poland. The West was "alarmed". There was another great "change"

under Kruschev.

I for one will have a lot more confidence in Mr. Gorbachev's sincerity when Russian support is withdrawn from Nicaragua and Cuba, not just Afghanistan.

Proud of Sanford's police department

Accustomed as we are to watching actors dramatically solve the most complex of murders in a 30 or 60 minute TV time slot, it's easy to forget there are real police officers working long, tedious periods of time on the most minute of clues to bring in some social scum charged with

The citizens of Sanford are blessed to have a police department which I believe is second to none. Since I moved to Sanford from Washington. D.C. less than a year ago, I have followed the daily exploits of the various Seminole County police departments in the newspapers. Currently, Sanford Police Chief Harriett and Officers Sheafer and Tate have performed in the highest traditions of professional police work. In just over a month, they have identified a suspect in the mysterious brutal slaying of businessman Mr. Litch Yu.

Every citizen of Sanford should be proud of our police department. Each time you meet a police officer in daily life, take the opportunity to tell him or her you appreciate the fine job they are doing. Even if the officer is giving you a ticket for careless driving, keep in mind that he or she may have just saved you from a far worse fate.

Average American gaining in height

New data from the National Center for Health Statistics show an apparent increase in the average height of adults in the United States.

When researchers measured men in 1960 to 1962, they found the average height for those 18 to 74 years old was 5'8". But from 1971 to 1974 and from 1976 to 1980, the average was over 5'9"

Fatal gas guards Greek gate to Hades

A researcher believes he has solved the ancient mystery of lethal fumes at the Temple of Apollo in Turkey.

Ancient Greeks and Romans believed the Temple of Apollo - located near the ruined city of Hieropolis — was an entrance to Hades. But a New York biologist has suggested a more mundane solution: carbon dioxide generated by underground hot springs.

Dense fumes, according to legend, rose from a gap in the temple's rock wall. Animals venturing inside died almost instantly even though human daredevils managed to descend into the opening and emerge unharmed

In a recent article in the British journal Antiquity. Sheldon Aaronson of Queens College in New York wrote that after investigating the temple site, he believes the fumes came from underground hot springs rich in calcium bicarbonate and carbon

He said as long as the temperature remained above 454 degrees Fahrenheit and the springs were surrounded by rocks, carbon dixoide remained in a supersaturated state because of steam

Currently, only the floor of the temple remains, but fumes are emitted from a nearby

Eat hearty but healthy for your heart's good

By Carol Rumsey Herald Staff Writer

Students in a beart healthy class at Central Florida Regional Hospital are learning how to prepare meals low in fat. cholesterol, and sodium, In so doing, they are not only becoming wiser consumers, they are also reducing their risk of developing heart disease.

For nearly two years, Mari-Feick, a CFCC registered dietitian, has been teaching the class to patients in the hospital's cardiopulmonary rehabilitation gram. The class is now open to the public.

The students from the rehab program are usually a little scared," said Feick, "They are very eager to learn and want to do everything right, I try to lessen their worries and show them that meal planning can be fun and the foods are not only healthy but tasty."

She believes students from both groups will learn from one another. Even with the current explosion of diet and nutrition books on the market. Feick says most Americans are still overweight and eating a diet heavily concentrated in fats.

Many young people. especially men, are still eating more than three eggs a week." she said. The difference is instead of home-cooked breakfasts of grits, pork sausage and fried eggs, they stop off at the nearest fast-food restaurant and purchase an egg, sausage and cheese biscuit.

When Feick sees a young person suffering from heart disease, she tries to be extraenthusiastic about good eating habits. Feick explained it's easier for young people to change their lifestyles, and their chances for recovery are so good.

Protein identification key to early juvenile diabetes detection recently discovered in the body's pancreas is enabling scientists to predict long in advance which young people will later develop juvenile diabetes, a University of Florida pathologist said Tuesday (June 14) at the American Diabetes Association's annual meeting in New Orleans.

Dr. Mark Atkinson, a clinical research fellow at the UF College of Medicine, told the 6,000 convention delegates that the protein, which researchers have dubbed 64-K, is the key element in a UF-developed test that can predict diabetes in young people as long as seven years before

Eventually, a young patient's life becomes injections to keep blood glucose levels from spiraling out of control. Replacement of insulin injection

By Jennifer Lanthier

TORONTO (UPI) - Researchers hope transplants of insulin-producing swine cells may someday end the need for daily insulin injections and prevent complications in more than I million North American diabetics.

Researchers at University Hospital in London, Ontario, and Connaught Laboratories in Toronto are testing transplants of live, insulin-producing pig cells coated with a synthetic membrane to protect against rejection.

Tests on animals are scheduled to end soon with human testing tentatively slated for later this year.

"If in fact it works, it's a cure," said Dr. Paul Atkison, one of the hospital researchers. "If you transplant the actual cells that will respond minute-to-minute to glucose in the blood, we would hope it's a cure.'

In type-one diabetes, the most serious form of the disorder which usually begins in childhood, the pancreas produces insufficient amounts of the hormone insulin which normally would maintain blood

Diabetes is a leading cause of blindness and diabetics have a lifespan about one-third that of people without the disease, scicutists say.

Blindness did not occur in diabetic laboratory animals that received the transplant "because you've got a little machine in there that's cranking out insulin daily as the glucose levels demand," said Dr. John Vose of Connaught.

Human diabeties who rely on injections can develop lifethreatening complications because insulin is released in a "great big boost" instead of being meted out in regulated amounts. Vosc sald.

The tests show that transplanted cells have functioned in animals for as long as two years. Atkison said.

Health plan is catastrophic

By B.D. Colen

The new federal legislation on catastrophic health insurance would be a cause for celebration if it truly protected all - or any - Americans from the economic crisis that so often follows medical disaster. Unfortunately, the act may prove to be a setback for those who believe that this country is in desperate need of a comprehensive national health insurance program. The new leislation, an amendment to the existing Medicare program, seems to go a long way toward protecting the elderly from having their lives destroyed by the costs of medical care.

However, consider what the legislation really does: It provides unlimited hospital care after the payment of a $564 annual deductible; • The program pays doctors' bills after the patient rates: • Starting in 1991. Medicare will pay 50 percent of prescription-drug costs after the patient pays $600. By 1993, the program would pay

pays $1,400 at the Medicare

80 percent - but the patient still pays the first $600; Medicare will pay for 150 days of nursing-home care without the patient first having to be hospitalized: • It will provide home health care for 38 days per vear.

Before you get too excited about these new benefits, do a little quick addition.

If you are covered by Medicare and become seriously ill, you will be paying at least $564 to a hospital. $1,400 to a physician, and $600 for medications. That's an out-of-pocket minimum of $2.564.

What's paid to the physician only covers the Medicare approved charges - and many physicians charge far more than the Medicare allowable charges. So let's say that the physicians' bills will probably total $2,000. Now we're up to $3,164 that you have to pay. Additionally, if you have $100 a month in prescription bills, in the first year of the plan you will have to pay $300 of the second $600. So now you're up to $3.464.

Medicare will pay for the first 150 days of nursing-home care. But what about the remaining 215 days, and all the days after that? Oh, you can be cared for at home and don't need to go in a nursing home? Who pays for that after day 382

Let us assume you are able to return home and don't need home health care after your hospitalization. Then, as the supporters of this program sec it, they have protected you from catastrophe.

But that all depends on how you define catastrophe. You will be sitting at home with at least $3,464 in unexpected medical bills. That works out to an extra $66.62 per week for a year. How many elderly individuals do you know who could pay $66.62 a week in unexpected bills without cutting back on something else like heat or food?

But there is an even bigger problem with this catastrophe of a program: It does absolutely nothing for the more than 30 million Americans who have no health insurance whatsoever. Nor does it do anything to provide protection for the millions who are underinsured.

So instead of celebrating, start saving. Because if this is the best program Congress can come up with, you're going to need every penny for Medicare deductibles.

Role of air pollution in breast cancer weighed

NEW YORK (UPI) - Air pollution appears to be a bigger culprit in the development of breast cancer than previously thought.

In the past, air pollution has been tentatively linked to breast cancer through laboratory tests and through geographic studies that found women from some regions with worse air pollution were more likely to get breast cancer than women from areas with cleaner air.

While it is still not entirely clear how air pollutants might cause breast cancer, a new California study indicates that one common pollutant has a significant dual role in damaging the DNA of breast cells.

We wanted to look at cells before tumors set in and learn about the consequences of damage that precedes cancer." said blochemist Jack Bartley, describing a recent study he performed with biologists at the Lawrence Berkeley Laboratory in Berkeley.

Bartley and other scientists believe cancer is a multistage process initiated by a chemical reaction that directly damages DNA and, if promoted by other factors through the formation of certain highly charged molecules called "free radicals." eventually results in malignant tumors.

In a 1982 study, Bartley and others showed that the epithelial cells which form the skin and line internal ducts of the human breast perform chemical reactions that can turn one of the most common air pollutants into a cancer-initiating chemical

Now, with cell biologist Martha Stampler and molecular biologist Tony Leadon. Bartley has measured indirect damage from oxygen radicals to the DNA of breast cells exposed to the pollutant benzopyrine, a by product of lossil-fuel combustion.

Thus, the recently released study also adds to mounting evidence of the cancercausing properties of free radicals, which

'We believe that the combination of high latitude, season, sulfur dioxide air pollution and urban lifestyle lead to low levels of exposure to the wavelength of ultra violet light needed to produce vitamin D in the skin."

are highly unstable molecules left in the blood as the debris of normal chemical reactions in cells.

Bartley described free radicals derived from oxygen as especially damaging. They can chemically alter DSA and cause breaks in its double helix, resulting in mutations and the activation of oncogenes - genes that can cause good cells to go bad and proliferate into lumors.

His study found the oxidative damage to the cells was 10 times greater from exposure to benzopyrene than from a comparable exposure to gamma rays from radioactive substances

Although the link between oxidative damage and cancer remains unproven. Bartley's study shows that a carcinogen commonly generated by power and industrial plants, tobacco smoke and automotive exhaust may be doubly dangerous as both an initiator and promoter of the cancer

"The personal implications are that if I came from a high-risk family for breast cancer. I would certainly be avoiding benzopyrene and other similar carcinogens I would be avoiding eigarette smoking and heavily polluted areas." Bartley said in a telephone interview

Through an entirely different mechanism. a controverstal study by other researchers had linked high rates of breast and also colon cancer to another pollutant, sulfur

Higher breast and colon cancer rates were found in the northeast part of the country and lower rates in the south and west, a researcher told an American Cancer Society seminar last March.

Cedric Garland, assistant profession of community and family medicine at the University of California's San Diego Cancer Center, explained that people in areas with high levels of sulfur dioxide get less ultraviolet light from the sun, which is important in vitamin D production in the human body.

He said moderate amounts of vitamin D have been shown in some studies to inhibit breast and colon cancer growth.

We believe that the combination of high latitude, season, sulfur dioxide air pollution and urban lifestyle lead to low levels of exposure to the wavelength of ultraviolet light needed to produce vitamin D in the skin. Garland said

Commenting in general on the breast cell study prior to its release in the Proceedings. of the National Academy of Sciences, a colleague of Garland's said. "I don't believe we have epidemiology to support a direct link between benzopyrene and breast

The colleague, Garland's brother, Dr. Frank Garland, who heads the Occupational Medicine Department at the University's Naval Health Research Center, noted that breast cancer rates are low in sunny, highly polluted areas such as Los Angeles and Atlanta

"But I think that it's very good to be looking at the effect of air pollution on different kinds of tissues because we've seen such a strong correlation between sulfur dioxide and forms of colon and breast cancer," he said.

With 130,000 new cases last year and 41,000 deaths, breast cancer ranks as a leading cancer killer of women, second only for such a study.

Report: Superfund ineffective

WASHINGTON (UPD - The tinued reliance on containment Superfund toxic waste cleanup program is "largely ineffective and mellicient" because federal officials are not making full use of new technologies that permanently destroy, detoxily or immobilize hazardous materials. says a congressional report issued Friday

In a study of cleanups at 10 Superfund sites, the congressional Office of Technology Assessment concluded that Environmental Protection Agency officials have squandered billions of dollars on traditional "containment" cleamp methods that provide little lasting protection for the environment or public health.

The report — "Are We Cleaning Up? — 10 Superfund Case Studies" — said EPA officials too often simply cover up wastes or place them in landfills because that is generally cheaper than incineration, biodegradation or other new "permanent cleanup" technologies.

OTA officials noted cheaper cleanups mean EPA can address more sites - a big incentive for an agency under intense public pressure to move quickly. However, they said the "beancounting" approach ignores more fundamental questions about whether cleanups accomplish significant results.

The report contended many "contained" Superfund sites will inevitably leak, contaminating groundwater and requiring yet another cleanup in the future.

And it said the EPA's con-

EDITORIALS Politics can dim perspective

Charges and countercharges of improper campaign contributions seem to be an endless and unavoidable ingredient of our political process. The latest is the allegation that a developer's giving to the campaign account of Barbara Christensen influenced her county commission vote in a matter related to the same developer. Mrs. Christensen is a candidate for the post of tax collector for Seminole County. The established facts in the matter are that the contribution was made, and the vote was cast. The decision on whether any action was improper rests with the public.

During the late stages of the most recent session of the Legislature, Senate President John Vogt announced his candidacy for state treasurer and insurance commissioner. He readily sought contributions for his campaign from lobbyists and PACs interested in pending legislation which resulted in an avalanche of criticism of the senator. Much of the criticism came from political opponents and was based on the appearance rather than any actual evil of political pandering.

One of those critics of Sen. Vogt was Sen. Ken Jenne, D.-Ft. Lauderdale who has now announced his own candidacy for the Democratic nomination for insurance commissioner, competing against Sen. Vogt and probably at least two others. Sen. Jenne's latest remarks against Sen. Vogt should be viewed in light of the fact that he was the apparent next president of the Senate until a coalition of Republicans and conservative Democrats wrested control and elected Sen. Vogt to the post. Sen Jenne has announced this week that he will accept campaign contributions from individuals and firms regulated by the Insurance department.

Voluntary contributions by supporters, with detailed reports of the income and expenditures open to public acrutiny, are a vital part of the election process. Such disclosures can open questions of propriety and judgement.

As to the appearances, candidates seem to fall into that Catch-22 of Caesar's wife: They must be spotless in all matters, disdaining even the appearance of evil.

Most candidates for public office in areas such as Seminole County and its cities, are civic-minded individuals convinced they can make a significant contribution to the betterment of the area and their constituency. Most succeed in varying degrees. All are open to criticism in whatever they do, and most succeed in getting it to some extent. We commend candidates for their fortitude, and caution them to exercise judgement at all times. Remember Caesar's wife.

Penny wise?

It is always good news that an act by an arm of government will save tax payers money. Action by the county commission on the construction of the wastewater treatment plant at Yankee Lake is no exception. Commissioners agreed unanimously to award the construction bid for $9.6 million for the 2.5 million gallons per day plant. Construc-tion will take approximately 18 months. The contract amount is $1.2 million less than the original estimates of cost of construction and about $3.2 million less than the lowest offer when bids were received three months ago. Thus the citing of a $1.2 million savings with reasons attributed to reducing the size of the plant from 5 mgd to 2.5 mgd, plus an increase in bidders.

However, a sobering thought amid the saving celebration is the county administrators caution that upon completion, the plant will be functioning at capacity, so construction must begin immediately on a 2.5 mgd addition. This also will take about 18 months to complete.

The county is saving 20 percent of the lowest bid to build a plant with a 50 percent reduction in capacity. Let's hope that expansion in 18 months will not push total costs so high that the joy in savings now. becomes anguish later.

Baker's leaving ushers in lame duck era

WASHINGTON (UPI) - The lame duck era may be setting in at the White House, but President Reagan would be the last to admi! ii.

The president still feels lie has goals to achieve before he leaves office on Jan. 20. But the impending departure of White House chief of staff Howard Baker appears to signal a winding

Baker changed the atmosphere and paved the way for better relations with Capitol Hill while the White House was still rocking from the Iran-Contra scandal. He also stepped in to help the president through his most trying crisis after chief of staff Donald Regan was given his walking papers.

Baker, could but says he won't write a "kiss and tell" book about President and Mrs. Reagan. something his predecessor did with a ven-

But it is difficult to believe that Baker, the political war horse, is ready to be put out to pasture. Republican Party loyalist that he is, it's expected he will do his share politically in the campaign, and if the second spot on the ticket is offered to him by Vice President George Bush. he will not turn it down.

Baker did not get into the nitty-gritty of running the White House. He left that to his deputy. Kenneth Duberstein, who has been anointed as Reagan's fourth chief of staff as he bows out after eight years in office.

Duberstein is a man for detail, and while Baker ran the show, "Duberdog" as Baker calls him, handled the heavy paperwork.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater seemed to personify life in the dwindling days of the Reagan administration when he discussed the future plans of other staffers, whether they would be jumping ship or staying on. Asked If he had his resume circulating.

Fitzwater said: "My resume is always ready. I never go out without it."

First lady Nancy Reagan seems to be always saying goodbye these days. Her recent speeches indicate that she already has one foot out of the White House and into her new life in Los Angeles.

She also is getting bolder about baring her true feelings about living in the White House. She says her successor will experience "great thrills and great heartaches" in the goldfish bowl. Mrs. Reagan's recent speeches may be a forerunner to her memoirs, which will be written and published after she leaves the White House. In that respect, the human side of the Reagan White House will be told.

It's too bad that the public will not be able to tour Blair House, the president's guest house, which has been renovated to the tune of $8.7. million in federal funds

The house, actually a complex of four townhouses, has been transformed into an opulent mansion fit for a king. The furnishings. oriental rugs, crystal chandelters, silks and damasks as well as priceless furniture, put the White House in the shade.

Bush vs. Dukakis changing

WASHINGTON (NEA) - Votern may be in for one very nasty presidential campaign in 1988. Responding to polls that show George Bush trailing, the GOP has switched into the "attack phase" against Michael Dukakis.

The strategy is clear: Paint Gov. Dukakis, the Massachusetts Democrat, as just another heavy-taxing. big-spending liberal who is soft on crime and communism - and who. with little foreign policy experience. ta incapable of facing down Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev across the bargaining table.
This strategy consists almost entirely of "negative campaigining." What the vice president and his GOP advicers are saying is that, in order to counter the gap in the polls. they will concentrate not on telling voters why Bush should be president, but rather on why Dukakis ahould not be.

Polls taken over the past six weeks all pretty much agree: If the ejection were held today. Dukakis would win. Depending on the poll, the Democratic candidate is any-where from six to 12 points ahead of

The recent polls consistently indicate a key fact: The reason Bush tridis is that President Reagan's popularity with large segments of the Democratic constituency has not translated into popularity for

If the current trends continue, blue collar workers and white middie class Southerners - who overwhelmingly backed Reagan in 1980 and 1984 - will return to the traditional Democratic fold in November.

Key political operatives in the Bush campaign blame themselves for this state of affairs. They believe they erred during the primary season by more or less ignoring the Democratic contest and Dukakis.

"We should have gone on the attack as soon as it became apparent he was going to win." says one top-level Bush adviser. "But instead, we let him define himself. We should have been telling voters who Michael Dukakis really is, but instead we let him do that. That is a mistake we are going to quickly correct.

Most political observers believe Dukakis was fortunate that more conservative opponents, like Sen. Albert Gore Jr., dropped out of the campaign quickly, leaving only Jesse Jackson. Pitted against the most liberal candidate in the field. Dukakis came off looking very moderate.

Dealing with failures

COSTA MESA, Calif. (NEA) ignoring the scandal that has engulfed the nation's thrift justitutions, the savings and loan industry persists in invoking memories of a long-gone era of responsible, conservative S&L management.

In an ambitious television advertising campaign long on nostalgia but short on reality, the U.S. League of Savings Institutions. the industry's largest trade association, claims that SetLs are "your partners in the American dream."

"Our relationship with you, your parents and your grandparents before you goes back over a century We were there, reaching out to help Americans realize their desire for home ownership," says a typical backward-looking commercial in the league's new $5 million promo-

"For over 150 years, individuals and families have turned to savings institutions for a home loan or a safe and secure place to tuck away savings for a rainy day, a child's education, a retirement nest egg." adds the league's president.

the real-life situation at two typically troubled savings institutions here in the Los Angeles suburb of Costa Mesa, where depositors recently required $1.35 billion in ballouts from federal regulators: (BU) American Diversified Savings

Contrast that syrupy rhetoric with

Bank was operated by a former pilot in the Indian Air Force who specialized, not in financing home mortgages, but in putting together limited partnerships to entice wealthy individuals into making real estate investments.

The savings bank's ventures in 22 states included two ethanol plants. three wind farms, a cable television system and a contract to collect manure for a co-generation facility.

(BU) North America Savings and Loan was operated by a dentist and his girlfriend who specialized in making investments for other dentists and doctors. More than a home mortgages - in Alaska, where almost half of the investments went sour.

When California regulators seized North America Savings last year. they described it as the worst case of S&L fraud in the state's history. Federal regulators have filed a lawsuit to recover as much as $40 million they say was unlawfully stphoned out of the S&L.

Those Jederal regulators prefer to merge ailing S&Ls into healthy institutions, but the two thrifts herein Costa Mesa were in such terrible financial condition that no reputable firm could be persuaded to take

Of the 235 S&d s that have failed since scandal began swirling about the industry in 1981, only 10 have been resolved through a straight payoff to their depositors.

Moreover, the $1.14 billion required to compensate American Diversified depositors was almost four times larger than the previous record-setting payout - $300 miltion to customers of a Texas savings institution. (The North America) payout was a more modest $209 untiliton.1

Although the interest offered on S&L deposits averaged just over 7 percent nationally, both of the failed Costa Mesa thrifts were paying more. than 8.5 percent before they were closed. Those rates attracted short-term deposits, arranged through brokers and invested in highly speculative ventures.

The S&L industry, however, refuses to acknowledge that the thrifts here are typical of hundreds throughout the country in very real danger of collapsing because of irresponsible management, insider fraud or regional economic declines.

Officials of the U.S. League seek to eachre the public into reminiscing about the past rather than focusing upon contemporary greed-driven practices.

SCIENCE WORLD Psyche behind grabbings

UPI Science Writer

WASHINGTON (UPI) - In 1963. an engineering student named Robert was driving home to Chicago after visiting his girlfriend when he got lost unaccountably on a familiar road, saw strange lights and his car stopped working.

The next thing he remembered was waking up, driving into Chicago two hours later. When Robert took a shower he noticed an odd mark on his shoulder, and the experience left him with strange dreams.

Although Robert thought his experience may have involved an extraterrestrial phenomenon, it occurred before other alleged alten abductions gained widespread publicity and he tried to shrug it off.

But in 1981, after nearly two decades of anxiety and personal problems, he underwent hypnosis. and an investigation that involved conscious recall and questioning of acquaintances.

Under hypnosis, Robert said that after his car stopped, a little creature appeared in the back seat. The alien - small, with a round. hairless head, big, black eyes and a skin-tight unfform — led Robert into a UFO, where he was subjected to a physical examination and shown strange, movie-like images. The altens, who Robert said communicated by telepathy rather than speech, eventually walked himback to his car, saying it would be to his benefit if he could not recall the encounter.

Robert's experience is typical of at the least 300 instances of altenabduction that have been reported worldwide, primarily in the United States, England and South America.

But one controversial theory. proposed recently by a psychologist. holds that Robert and the others were not the victims of weird little creatures from outer space, but rather are victims of "lantasyprone" personality, a still poorly understood psychological state.

"Fantasy-prone people are not psychotic, not crazy, not even neurotic. They're just a little different than the rest of us," said Robert Baker, a psychology professor at University of Kentucky.

'What lies behind most of socalled alten encounter reports is a problem with people who are suggestible being told these things." said Baker.

Contingency plan ready if big banks fail

By Jack Anderson

washington - The U.S. government has a contingency plan for a national emergency should the giants of the banking industry come nezi to collapec.

Recent nationwide attention has focused on the savings and loan crisis and maneuverings by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board to bail out thrifts that are near bankruptcy.

But a collapse of commercial banks is potentially a greater threat. Should one of the large institutions go under, it would cause a tidal wave of destruction to roll across the financial system.

Federal banking officials have decreed, behind closed doors, that before they would allow the top 10 banks in the country to go broke. the feds would make them wards of the state.

A Reagan Administration interagency task force drafted the plan for, in essence, nationalizing America's biggest banks in a financial crisis. Represented on that task force are the Treasury Department. the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. (FDIC). Their plan was motivated by the possibility that Latin American nations could default on billions of dollars in loans from American banks.

The task force concluded that a collapse of major banks could not be handled the way most minor bank failures are taken care of - with a merger or by paying off depositors. Finding a merger partner or buyer for a mega-bank in dire straits would be difficult. If not impossible, in a crisis. And the payoff of insured depositors would be a horror story, with deposits tied up for months.

"It must be recognized that the traditional methods of handling bank failures are probably unworkable in the case of a banking crisis." says the closely guarded report of the inter-agency task force. The traditional methods "result in the disruption of services and would fuel the public perception of financtal disaster," the report explains. "Assuming that one or more of the banks in jeopardy is among the nation's top 10 banks, the typical ... transaction with another operating institution would not be feasible due to a dearth of eligible bidders (and) the necessity of raising a lot of money under the darkest financial scenarios... Ideally, the federal contingency plan would kick in while the bank could still see the light. The plancalls for the Federal Reserve Board to use its statutory authority to lend unlimited amounts of money to failing institutions. Federal reserve banks would collect old currency and distribute new bills. According to confidential documents, those federal reserve banks have about $19 billion in unissued currency. The Federal Reserve facility in Culpepper, Va., has another $2.6

The Job of the FDIC would be to create a new bank from what is left of the old one by forming a holding company and giving it capital to operate.

The government is wise to have a plan for the unthinkable. Should one of the titans of banking collapse, the resulting financial turmoil would rival the Great Depression. There are about 15,000 commercial banks in the United States, handling more than $600 billion in transactions every day. A run on one large bank would probably spread like wildfire to the other large banks. The vast majority of deposits in the biggest banks are uninsured and come from foreign sources. If the money managers in those foreign accounts smell trouble, they can yank their money out with a few keystrokes on a computer, leaving the bank an empty shell.

First Ladies' feud is foolish

I am not known for my social graces.

I can always be counted on to do something like cat my salad with my dinner fork, so when the waiter takes my salad plate. and soiled flatware, I am left to struggle through prime rib and baked potato with the salad

But you can take me out inpublic and count on me to be polite and sociable. Especially if I am someone's guest or representing my employers or the employers of someone Lam with. I'm not sure why. Maybe my mama taugh, me right. Or perhaps I just can't conceive of a social gathering or public event as a place to show off or pick nits with someone else.

If cornered and forced into a discussion on some sticky issue by someone who had a negligent mama. I'll talk about it. But I won't embarrass my hosts or employer, or ruin the good time of whoever picked up my hotel room and bar bill. I admit that not only am I mystified by eliquette, but also the social importance of one-upsmanship, of jockeying for position in the limelight.

So, I guess you could expect me to be floored by the cool war waged by Nancy Reagan and Raisa Gorbachev.

Their countries are picking up a whopping tab so their husbands can travel across the world and talk about keeping us all out of The Last Big Fight. and these two women are showing up late and scrapping over microphones. If arms talks were up to Namey and Rates. our armies would be on red alert right now.

Still perplexed at the first ladies' behavior, I watched the correspondents on the Public Broadcasting System's "The McLaughlin Group" chew it over. Columnist l'at Buchanan cried, "I pick Nancy!" and Newsweek's Eleanor Clift asserted, "I think Nancy's putup with enough from That Woman!

Thanks, guys, that was really enlightening.

I felt like I was watching mothers at a Little League game. defending a first-base fistfight. I longed for the good old days. when Lady Bird or Pat or Rosalyn went somewhere and were just nice. Or at least if they weren't ritce, we didn't know about it. No late arrivals, no no-shows, no vying for reporters' attentions. Everyone seemed to get ready on time, be there, and be polite.

I'm confident I will never be a first lady, and almost as confident I will never be helpinate to a mover and shaker. (See salad fork, above.) that I will be asked on occasion to represent my employer at functions where someone clac is moving and shaking. Not being one of the movers or shakers, I will probably not consider it important if someone clae makes a more fashionably late entrance than I, or gets there at all. And I will probably be thankful my mama taught me not to start a fistfight on first base when somebody else is batting. With my luck, my employer would dun me for my travel expenses.

Any mate I was helping would send me back home on a Greyhound and yank my designer dress allowance. I don't know how many of my tax dollars helped jet Nancy to Russia to wine and dine. But for my money, I'd like to see her fined for clipping. Perhaps the cost of one expensive bottle of chablis, or the jet fuel bill for Air Force One to take her over there and back.

Or cut off her long-distance calls to astrologers. Maybe that's where the whole problem started, when Joan Quigley told Nancy, "You will be insulted by a queen from an Evil Emptre. and will stand up to her. Not a good time for social engagements or world peace." (Sarah Overstreet is a syndicated columnist for the Newspaper Enterprise Association.)

Interest rates and the resilient economy

By David F. Scott, Jr. University of Central Florida

Whether business people or consumers openly admit it, global commercial activity in 1988 is being directly affected by the momentous stock market correction that culminated last October 19. On that day a bit over 604 million shares traded hands on the New York Stock Exchange and the Dow Jones Industrial Average declined 508 points to close at 1739. In only five trading days, the Dow lost 30% of its value and "the crash of 1987" took its place in history.

An aftershock of the October 19 retrenching is a sharpened awareness of the crucial role that interest rate levels and adjustments play in affecting economic activity. Paying attention to interest rates is good for business, your wealth, and probably-your health. Presently, the Federal Reserve System (the central bank of the U.S.) under the leadership of its Chairman, Mr. Alan Greenspan has tightened credit in the financial system and, thereby, pushed up short-term rates. What this means for the economy, and you as a participant in it. will be reviewed.

The discussion can be simplified by focusing on four important rates, all of which are regularly accessible in local papers. Specifically these are the (1) federal funds rate, (2) commercial bank prime lending rate. (3) 3-month U.S. Treasury bill rate, and (4) 30-year U.S. Treasury bond rate. The movement in these nominal rates (i.e., they are not inflation adjusted) over the past eighteen months is displayed in Exhibit 1.

Embedded in these numbers are some severe facts and tendencies. Some of the tendencies are disturbing. First, interest rate levels at the moment are only a bit lower than where they were a week before the October 19 market adjustment. Second, the structure of rates was notably lower in both January 1987 and 1988 than at the midpoint of these respective years. Third, the Federal Reserve took overt action in the first half of both 1987 and 1988 to raise shortterm rates. This is reflected in the rising federal funds rate—a rate directly affected by Fed monetary policy actions.

When the federal funds rate rises and the rate on short-term treasury bills also rises, it is inevitable that the commercial bank prime lending rate will also go up.

An increasing treasury bill rate pushes up the rates that banks must pay on certificates of deposit to attract loanable funds into their operations. Thus, the prime rate jumps on loans made by banks to protect their profitability. Exhibit 2 contains the changes in the prime rate from January 1967 through May

Note that the prime rate increased in 1987 on five occasions before the October 19 debacle. One increase occurred on October 7-only eight trading days prior to the crash. That October 7 increase followed on the heels of the Fed's half-point hike in its discount rate to 6% on September 4. A prime rate increase also occurred on September 4. Right up until the crash then, the Fed was signalling, ever so clearly, that it preferred higher interest rates. The prime rate decreased in three increments after October 19 to a level of 8.50%. Then on May 22, 1988, once again in response to a Fed tightening, the prime increased by 50 basis points to 9%. Since so many adjustable rate loans are tied to either treasury bill rates or the prime, it is obvious that households as well as businesses are directly affected by such movements in rates.

The increase in key rates has not occurred in a vacuum. In other words the Fed made some tough choices in pushing up short rates in 1987 prior to October 19. The objectives were to strengthen the dollar in foreign exchange markets and to signal a dissatisfaction with renewed inflationary trends.

The dollar could not be bolstered too much, however, or the burdensome trade deficit would be exacerbated. But, to let inflation run unchecked would cause long rates to leap, placing a severe drag on business investment spending, indeed, long rates as typified by the yield on 30-year Treasury bonds were in the vicinity of 10% at the time of crash.

These beliwether bonds and their private sector counterparts—high grade corporates-became attractive alternatives to equity investments last October and contributed to the flight from common stocks. By February 1968 the yields on 30-year Treasury bonds had retreated to about 8.3%. A renewed concern over inflation coupled with the Fed action at the short end of the yield curve pushed these rates back over 9.% during May.

In a nutshell economic policymakers at the federal level are faced with these tradeoffs:

1. To improve the trade deficit the value of the dollar in foreign exchange markets should fall. Devaluing the dollar too much, though, invites inflation as imported components cost more.

2. To attract foreign savings to finance the U.S. federal deficit interest rates should rise. Higher rates do attract foreign investors; this increases demand for the dollar which raises its value and worsens the trade deficit. Increasing the value of the dollar and raising interest rates go hand in hand.

3. Rising commodity prices and rising consumer prices argue for higher interest rates. Interest rates that are driven too high will abort an amazing domestic economic expansion that began in November 1962.

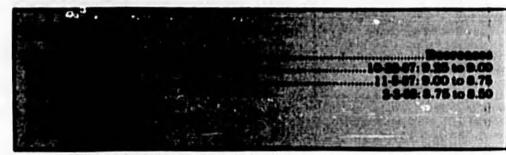

Portunately some benchmarks are out there to mitigate the anguish associated with conflicting policies. In addition to the natural uncertainties that accompany the bellowings inherent to a presidential election year, it seems here that we should be concerned with (1) the prospects of another financial market crash. (2) unreasonable inflation. (3) the onstart of the ninth recession since World War II. and (4) negative random shocks to the domestic political and economic systems.

With regard to random shocks, such as firing missiles at oil platforms in the Persian Gulf, we can do little more than hope. Inflation is a different matter, it is worse than 1986 when consumer prices rose by a scant 1% relative to 1985, but nothing like 1979 when prices leaped by 13.3%. For the twelve months ended April 1988 consumer prices rose by 3.9%. Thus, the rate of inflation is not frightening. This favors holding a steady course on interest rate levels

Likewise, avoiding both a negative major market reaction and the onset of recession favor either steady or lower nominal interest rates. Two indicators buttress this policy course: (1) commercial bank loan demand over the past year has grown at only a 3.4% annual rate and (2) real economic growth while good. is not of boom proportions. In 1984 compared to 1983 real gross national product rose by 6.8%. Growth in 1987 was in line with long-term norms and came in at 2.9%. Prospects for this year look to growth of 3.3% to 3.5% compared to all of 1987. That's much better than a recession and we will all benefit if it is sustained rather than dampened.

In light of current economic conditions further monetary restraint on the part of the Fed is not to be encouraged. Such restraint would take the zing out of the resilient economy. The result would not be good for you or the rest of Central

The Good Book says your sin shall find you out.

For two years, four months and 15 days I have, along with my dear wife and son, been a resident of the great city of Sanford. I have had the highest respect and love for this city. and indeed for the police of the city.

For a goodly percentage of the time we have lived here I have said that I wish the police would crack down on speed violators, especially in residential areas. I have always considered myself to take speed limits very seriously and have tried, for the most part, to keep within the speed limits.

Well, a few days ago I noticed our dutiful city police on side streets off 20th Street and Country Club Drive stopping speed violators, and I thought "Good! Maybe the word will get around the city police mean business in cracking down on speed violators!" I observed our police force residential area on at least a couple of occasions before the coming of the day of the Lord for me. I had just dropped off my church notices for our church at the Sanford upholding the speed laws in our

Herald and was on my way home (1 was later than usual) and I was rejoicing that all was right with the world. Suddenly, as I was sailing down 20th Street west, one of three men with a badge was waving his hand to pull me over. Never let it be said I do not obey the law enforcement men of Sanford. I screeched on my brakes to see what was on his mind. In a very professional, impersonal manner the officer informed me that I was going 42 miles per hour in a 25 mile zone. He then told me to turn the corner and park behind another lady, also caught in the act of speeding.

He wrote out the ticket while telling me my rights. I hadn't planned on this: our budget didn't allow for this either. Me, the great advocator of admiring the police for cracking down on speed violators was letting them use me as a public example of how well they do their duty. My sin cost me $86. Terms: one month, and I can't pay it off in weekly installments either. The police did their duty: I was caught fair and square. and I have learned a lesson I shall long remember.

At first I sulked in my beer and thought I was a victim of the law of averages going against me. But let me go on record still having the highest respect for the Sanford police. Those three men were doing their job efficiently, professionally and without distinctions of age, race, color, religion, sex, or social class.

Now one point I would like to make. if I may as a (normally) law-abiding citizen. I would be grateful if Sanford bicycle riders would please ride on the right side of the street, with the flow of traffic, as safety rules require. When I was a kid this was really stressed, but I note at least half of our cyclists of all ages ride facing traffic. and then you get the finger if you protest to them. But who gets the book thrown at them if an accident occurs with a person on a bicycle? Observe professiona bike riders and they always ride on the right side of

I liked your editorial "Not Rushing into INF Treaty is Wise" (The Herald. June 101. Il more people would read editorials instead of listening to television, we'd have wiser voters.

I was proud of our president's behavior in Moscow. He was willing to negotiate but remained skeptical enough. It made me feel a lot more confident that he came home in a good humor and left Mr. Gorbachev angry and frustrated. I am satisfied that Mr. Gorbachev got paid in full for his arrogrant behavior in Washington.

The liberals can no longer claim Mr. Reagan does not want peace. That's fine as long as he doesn't wear rose-colored glasses.

James Kilpatrick, Jeffrey Hart, Ben Wattenberg, Jeanne Kirkpatrick, George Will and Henry Kissinger are skeptical about any great changes in the Kremlin. Anthony Harrigan in his column "Glasnost and Reality" (Sanford Herald, June 8) says, "It is yet to be established that Gorbachev plans more than token reforms and these may be applied only to the Russian population. The non-Russians in the Soviet Empire may well continue to suffer ...

The article on this subject that I have found most interesting is by the historian and co-author of Encounter Magazine. "Is Russia Really Changing?" Condensed for the Readers Digest's June edition, it traces other "changes" from the early 1920s to the present. None has been real and in all, the West was gullible.

The most interesting changes were Stalin's. There were so many. The first was during the 20s. It was economic, allowing "a limited free market and measure of private trade." The West rejoiced.

But it did not last. In a short time Stalin was starving millions of farmers in the Ukraine to force them to accept collectivization.

Then Stalin changed again. He gave the country a new "democratic" constitution. The West was sure the Soviets had given up world domination. Stalin was called "a great statesman." The Soviets were supposed to be working for world peace fighting facism in Spain.

Then there was another change. Stalin and Hitler became friends and divided eastern Europe. But at that time, the Ukraine was called "the Bread Basket of Europe". The Nazis needed bread. Hitler invaded Russia and Stalin joined the allies. The West praised Stalin. He was called 'brilliant.'' and "kind."

After World War II, Stalin surprised his allies by driving them out of Romania. Hungary, Bulgaria and Poland. The West was "alarmed". There was another great "change"

under Kruschev.

1 for one will have a lot more confidence in Mr. Gorbachev's sincerity when Russian support is withdrawn from Nicaragua and Cuba. not just Afghantstan.

Proud of Sanford's police department

Accustomed as we are to watching actors dramatically solve the most complex of murders in a 30 or 60 minute TV time slot, it's easy to forget there are real police officers working long, tedious periods of time on the most minute of clues to bring in some social scum charged with murder.

The citizens of Sanford are blessed to have a police department which I believe is second to none. Since I moved to Sanford from Washington. D.C. less than a year ago, I have followed the daily exploits of the various Seminole County police departments in the newspapers. Currently. Sanford Police Chief Harriett and Officers Sheafer and Tate have performed in the highest traditions of professional police work. In just over a month, they have identified a suspect in the mysterious brutal slaying of businessman Mr. Litch Tu.

Every citizen of Sanford should be proud of our police department. Each time you meet a police officer in daily life, take the opportunity to tell him or her you appreciate the fine job they are doing. Even if the officer is giving you a ticket for careless driving, keep in mind that he or she may have just saved you from a far worse fate.

Average American gaining in height

New data from the National Center for Health Statistics show an apparent increase in the average height of adults in the United States.

When researchers measured men in 1960 to 1962, they found the average height for those 18 to 74 years old was 5'8". But from 1971 to 1974 and from 1976 to 1980, the average was over 5'9"

The average woman in this age range was 513" inches to the early 60s and a little more than a half meh taller in the

But as men and women got taller, they also got heavier: The average man weighed 166 pounds in the early 60s, but 172 pounds in the 70s. The average weight for women went from 140 pounds to 144

The center said about 70 percent of men in the most recent survey were between 5'6" and 6' tall, while 70 percent of women are between 5'1" and 5'6".

Seventy percent of males in the most recent study weighed between 143.3 pounds and 201.4 pounds. Seventy percent of the women weigh between 115.1 and 174.7

The most recent data showed that about 15 million men and 19 million women over one quarter of the population — are overweight. Although white and black men were equally likely to be overweight, black women are much more likely to be overweight than white women. with 43.8 percent of black women overweight, compared to 25.1 percent of white women.

Fatal gas guards Greek gate to Hades

Ancient Greeks and Romans believed the Temple of Apollo located near the ruined city of Heropolis — was an cutrance to Hades, But a New York biologist has suggested a more mundanc solution: carbon dioxide generated by in a recent article in the British journal Antiquity. Sheldon Autonson of Queens College in New York wrote that after investigating the temple site, he believes the fumes came from underground hot springs rich in calcium bicarbonate and carbon

He said as long as the temperature remained above 454 degrees Fahrenheit and the springs were surrounded by rocks, carbon dixolde remained in a supersaturated state because of steam

GAINESVILLE - A protein recently discovered in the body's pancreas is enabling scientists to predict long in advance which young people will later develop juvenile diabetes, a University of Florida pathologist said Tuesday (June 14) at the American Diabetes Association's annual meeting in New Orleans.

Dr. Mark Atkinson, a clinical research fellow at the UF College of Medicine, told the 6,000 convention delegates that the protein, which researchers have dubbed 64-K. is the key element in a UF-developed test that can predict diabetes in young people as long as seven years before symptoms appear.

Juvenile diabetes, also known as Type I or tosultn-dependent diabetes, is an autoimmune disease in which lymphocytes (white blood cells) in the body begin producing antibodies that attack and destroy the body's insulin-producing islet cells in the pancreas. Eventually, a young patient's life becomes dependent on regular insulininjections to keep blood glucose levels from spiraling out of control. The disease is distinct from the more common Tyupe II. or maturity-onset, diabetes which often can be controlled through dietary change.

oping juvenile diabetes, the protein 64-K, which is found on the surface of pancreatic islet cells, is under attack by antibodies and other immune cells," Atkinson said recently at hts UF Health Science Center laboratory. "We believe the appearance in the body of 64 K antibodies may be the first in a cascade of immune-response events that lead to destruction of the insulin-producing islet cells.

"By developing a test that identifies the presence of 64-K antibodies in the blood, we have found a very early indicator of juvenile diabetes." Atkinson the pancreatic islet cells must be destroyed before an individual becomes dependent on insulin. and the 64-K antibody appears in the blood long before that occurs. To date, we've detected the antibody only in young people who have gone on to develop the disease. The UF-developed testing procedure for the 64-K autibody requires small samples of 64-K protein, which are available only from scarce donor pancreatic Atkinson said efforts are now

In addition, Atkinson said. once the 64-K's genetic code is understood, techniques are available for attaching toxins to samples of the protein.

Atkinson's research is supported through a live-year. $600,000 grant from the National Institutes of Health and a underway to crack 64-K's $39,000 fellowship from the Juvenile Diabetes Association.

Replacement of insulin injection

By Jennifer Lanthier

TORONTO (UPI) - Researchers hope transplants of insulta-producing swine cells may someday end the need for daily insulin injections and prevent complications in morethan I million North American diabetics.

Researchers at University Hospital in London, Ontario, and Connaught Laboratories in Toronto are testing transplants of live, insulin-producing pigcells coated with a synthetic membrane to protect against rejection.

Tests on animals are scheduled to end soon with human testing tentatively slated for later this year.

"If in fact it works, it's a cure," said Dr. Paul Atkison, one of the hospital researchers. "If you transplant the actual cells that will respond minute-to-minute to glucose in the blood, we would hope It's a cure.'

In type-one diabetes, the most serious form of the disorder which usually begins in childhood, the panereas produces insufficient amounts of the hormone insulin which normally would maintain blood sugar levels.

It differs from non-insulin dependent, type-two diabetes. which usually occurs in obese adults, and can be controlled with diet and oral medications. Insulin injections enable the glucose in the bloodstream but the injections do not prevent such diabetes-associated problems as blindness, heart discase and kidney failure.

Diabetes is a leading cause of blindness and diabetics have a lifespan about one-third that of people without the disease, scientists say.

Blindness did not occur in diabetic laboratory animals that received the transplant "because you've got a little machine in there that's cranking out insulin daily as the glucose levels demand," said Dr. John Vose of Connaught.

Human diabetics who rely on injections can develop life. threatening complications because insulin is released in a 'great big boost" instead of being meted out in regulated amounts, Vosc said.

The tests show that transplanted cells have functioned in animals for as long as two years. Atkison said.

Insulin-producing cells, known as lalets of Langerhans, are taken from pigs and coated with a membrane of synthetic polymers.

The membrane "acts like a sieve," allowing sugar to pass through and stimulate cells to produce insulin, but blocking antibodies that would cause the body to control the amount of body to reject them.

Health plan is catastrophic

The new federal legislation on catastrophic health insurance would be a cause for celebration if it truly protected all - or any - Americans from the economic crisis that so often follows medical disaster. Unfortunately, the act may prove to be a setback for those who believe that this country is in desperate need of a comprehensive national health insurance program.

The new leislation, an amendment to the existing Medicare program, seems to go a long way toward protecting the elderly from having their lives destroyed by the costs of medical care. However, consider what the legislation really does: It provides unlimited hospital care after the payment of a $564 annual deductible: The program pays doctors' bills after the patient

pays $1,400 at the Medicare

rates: • Starting in 1991. Medicare will pay 50 percent of prescription-drug costs after the patient pays $600. By 1993, the program would pay 80 percent - but the patient still pays the first $600; Medicare will pay for 150 days of nursing-home care without the patient first having to be hospitalized: It will provide home health care for 38 days per

Before you get too excited about these new benefits, do a little quick addition.

If you are covered by Medicare and become seriously ill, you will be paying at least $564 to a hospital. $1,400 to a physician, and $600 for medications. That's an out-of-pocket minimum of $2.564.

What's paid to the physician only covers the Medicare approved charges - and many physicians charge for more than the Medicare allowable charges. So let's say that the physicians' bills will probably total $2,000. Now we're up to $3.164 that you have to pay.

Additionally, if you have $100 a month in prescription bills, in the first year of the plan you will have to pay $300 of the second $600. So now you're up to $3,464.

Medicare will pay for the first 150 days of nursing-home care. But what about the remaining 215 days, and all the days after that? Oh, you can be cared for at home and don't need to go in a numing home? Who pays for that after day 382

Let us assume you are able to return home and don't need home health care after your hospitalization. Then, as the supporters of this program see it, they have protected you from catastrophe.

But that all depends on how you define catastrophe. You will be sitting at home with at least $3,464 in unexpected medical bills. That works out to an extra $66.62 per week for a year. How many elderly individuals do you know who could pay $66.62 a week in unexpected bills without cutting back on something else like heat or food?

But there is an even bigger problem with this catastrophe of a program: It does absolutely nothing for the more than 30 million Americans who have no health insurance whatsoever. Nor does it do anything to provide protection for the millions who are underinsured.

So instead of celebrating. start saving. Because if this is the best program Congress can come up with, you're going to need every penny for Medicare deductibles.

Role of air pollution in breast cancer weighed

NEW YORK (UPI) — Air pollution appears to be a bigger culprit in the development of breast cancer than previously thought.

In the past, air pollution has been tentatively linked to breast cancer through laboratory tests and through geographic studies that found women from some regions with worse air pollution were more likely to get breast cancer than women from areas with cleaner air.

While it is still not entirely clear how air pollulants might cause breast cancer, a new California study indicates that one common pollutant has a significant dual role in damaging the DNA of breast cells.

"We wanted to look at cells before tumors set in and learn about the consequences of damage that precedes cancer." said biochemist Jack Bartley, describing a recent study he performed with biologists at the Lawrence Berkeley Laboratory in Berkeley.

Bartley and other scientists believe cancer is a multistage process initiated by a chemical reaction that directly damages DNA and, if promoted by other factors through the formation of certain highly charged molecules called "free radicals," eventually results in malignant tumors

In a 1982 study, Bartley and others showed that the epithelial cells which form the skin and line internal ducts of the human breast perform chemical reactions that can turn one of the most common air pollutants into a cancer-mittating chemical

Now, with cell biologist Martha Stampfer and molecular biologist Tony Leadon. Bartley has measured indirect damage from oxygen radicals to the DNA of breast cells exposed to the pollutant benzopyrme, a by product of fossil-fuel combustion.

Thus, the recently released study also adds to mounting evidence of the cancercausing properties of free radicals, which are highly unstable molecules left in the blood as the debris of normal chemical reactions in cells.

We believe that the combination of high latitude, season, sulfur diexide eir pollution and urban lifestyle load to low levels of exposure to the wavelength of ultra violet light needed to produce vitamin D in the skin.

Bartley described free radicals derived from oxygen as especially damaging. They can chemically alter DNA and cause breaks in its double helix, resulting in mutations and the activation of oncogenes - genes that can cause good cells to go bad and proliferate into tumors.

His study found the oxidative damage to the cells was 10 times greater from exposure to benzopyrene than from a comparable exposure to gamma rays from radioactive

Although the link between oxidative damage and cancer remains approven. Bartley's study shows that a carcinogencommonly generated by power and industrial plants, tobacco smoke and automotive exhaust may be doubly dangerous as both an initiator and promoter of the cancer

"The personal implications are that if I came from a high-risk family for breast cancer. I would certainly be avoiding benzopyrene and other similar carcinogens. I would be avoiding cigarette smoking and heavily polluted areas," Bartley said in a telephone interview.

Through an entirely different mechanism. a controversial study by other researchers had linked high rates of breast and also colon cancer to another pollutant, sulfur

Higher breast and colon cancer rates were found in the northeast part of the country and lower rates in the south and west, a researcher told an American Cancer Society seminar last March.

Cedric Garland, assistant profession of community and family medicine at the University of California's San Diego Cancer Center, explained that people in areas with high levels of sulfur dioxide get less ultraviolet light from the sun, which is important in vitamin D production in the human body.

He said moderate amounts of vitamin D have been shown in some studies to inhibit breast and colon cancer growth.

We believe that the combination of high latitude, season, sulfur dioxide air pollution and urban lifestyle lead to low levels of exposure to the wavelength of ultraviolet light needed to produce vitamin D in the skin, 'Garland said.

Commenting in general on the breast cell study prior to its release in the Proceedings. of the National Academy of Sciences, a colleague of Garland's said, "I don't believe we have epidemiology to support a direct link between henzopyrene and breast cancer.'

The colleague, Garland's brother, Dr. Frank Garland, who heads the Occupational Medicine Department at the University's Naval Health Research Center, noted that breast cancer rates are low in sunny, highly polluted areas such as Los Angeles and

"But I think that it's very good to be looking at the effect of air pollution on different kinds of tissues because we've seen such a strong correlation between sulfur dioxide and forms of colon and breast cancer," he said.

With 130,000 new cases last year and 41,000 deaths, breast cancer ranks as a leading cancer killer of women, second only to lung cancer.

officials are not making full use of new technologies that permanently destroy, detoxify or immobilize bazardous materials. says a congressional report Issued Friday In a study of cleanups at 10 Superfund sites, the congressional Office of Technology Assessment concluded that Environmental Protection Agency officials have squandered billions of dollars on tradi-Honal "containment" cleanup methods that provide little lasting protection for the environment or public health. The report - "Are We Cleaning Up? — 10 Superfund Case Studies" — said EPA officials too often simply cover up wastes or place them in landfills because that is generally cheaper than incineration, biodegradation or other new "permanent eleanup" technologies. OTA officials noted cheaper cleanups mean EPA can address more sites - a big incentive for an agency under intense public pressure to move quickly. However, they said the "beancounting" approach ignores more fundamental questions about whether cleanups accomplish significant results.

The report contended many "contained" Superfund sites will inevitably leak, contaminating groundwater and requiring yet another cleanup in the future.

And it said the EPA's con-

finued relance on containment technology is not in line with the 1986 Superfund Amendments and Reauthorization Act. in which Congress directed the EPA to use permanent cleanup methods whenever possible.

"Is the Superfund program consistently selecting permanently effective treatment technologies which, according to (the 1986 law), are preferable because they reduce the 'toxtetty, mobility or volume' of hazardous waste?," the report asked. "The answer OTA finds is that it is not.

Pope's plan to visit Austria stirring controversy

VATICAN CITY (UPI) - Controversy over Kurt Waldheim's World War II record is only the first of the problems Pope John Paul II will face on his visit to Austria this month.

John Paul's June 23-27 trip will be his second to the overwhelmingly Roman Catholic country and his 38th outside Italy since he became pope almost 10 years ago.

It will not be an easy one, for pastoral as well as political reasons.

Of far greater concern to the pontiff than the degree of Waldheim's alleged complicity in Nazi war crimes are deep and increasingly bitter divisions within the Austrian church.

John Paul can ignore anti-Waldheim demonstrators on the streets of Vienna, Salzburg and Innsbruck. He cannot ignore members of his own flock, angry over his appointments of three conservative bishops to key posts in the Austrian hierarchy within the last two years.

One of the three, Archbishop Hans Hermann Groer of Vienna will become a cardinal at the consistory the pope called for June 28, the day after he returns from his four-day visit to Austria.

"The Austrian church is very tense because of the pope's nominations," said a Vatican source in close touch with Austrian Catholics, "There will be protests against the nominations and against the lack of dialogue.

"This has polarized the church." the source said. "Good and active Catholics are disturbed." This cannot help but disturb the pope as well.

Although Austria is a small country with a population of only some 7.6 million, 85.4 percent of that population is Roman Catholic.

Austria also is important to the church because of its location at the crossroads of Eastern and Western Europe, It is important personally to John Paul because it has given refuge, at least temporarily, to thousands of his fellow Poles and other defectors from Communist regimes.

"The pope cannot go to the East, except for Poland, but there are many attentive Catholics in the East waiting to hear his message - and from Austria he can address them out the window," a Vatican official said.

Some 50,000 Hungarians and Yugoslav Crostians are expected to travel to the city of Eisenstadt June 24 to attend a papal mass at the Trausdorf-Eisenstadt airport.

The Vatican has steered clear of discussing the Waldheim controversy since last summer, when the pope became personally involved by agreeing to receive the Austrian president, but it is clear attempts have been made to dampen a new furor.

John Paul's encounters with Waldheim in Austria have been kept to the minimum required by protocol - at the airports where he arrives and departs the country and at a visit to the Wiener Hofburg in Vienna June 23 to meet with government officials and the diplomatic corps.

The pope will start the next day by meeting representatives of the Jewish community, and after the mass at Elsenstadt he will travel to the Mauthausen concentration camp, where at least 100,000 prisoners, many of them Jews, died at hard labor.

Why should Waldheim prevent the pope from going to the Catholics of Austria?" a veteran observer of the Roman Curla asked. "He visited Pinochet's Chile and Stroessner's Paraguay.

The pope goes everywhere and sees everyone unless the bishops advise him it would not be productive, as in the case of South Africa." the priest said.

Because of the outery over Waldbeim's visit to the Vatican last year, his first trip outside Austria since his election as president June 8, 1986, John Paul held an unusual meeting with nine dewish leaders, most of them Americans, Sept. 1. They parted on cordial terms, but lingering bifterness on the part of American Jews was apparent when the pope visited the United States later that month and met with Jewish leaders in Miami.

One of the group who came to Rome to see the pope. Rabbi Mare Tannenbaum of New York. suggested that if John Paul must visit Austria and must meet with Waldheim, he at least speak of Waldheim's World War II German army record during the visit.

It is improbable that the pope will comply.

BOOK REVIEWS

New offerings from four American poets

By DAVID E. ANDERSON United Press International

Three of the very best, yet strikingly different, voices in contemporary poetry -John Ashbery, Wendell Berry and Seamus Heaney - all have new volumes out, and a fourth book, "The Collected Poems of Charles Olson." make this season a remarkable one.

To begin with the last first, Ohon's 675-page work, edited by George Buttrick (U. of California Press. $45) is a magnificent edition that brings together all of the influential poet's work, excluding the epic "Maximus" series that stands by Itacif.

Olson (1910-1970) is the father of the "Black Mountain" poets. The group was a part of the amazing renaissance of American poetry in the 1950s that also included the "beats." like Allen Ginsburg, and the San Francisco poets such as Gary Snyder and Lawrence Ferlinghetti.

Olson himself is considered the mentor for some of the most important American poets in recent years, including Robert Creeley, Denise Levertov and Robert Duncan.

Representing the tradition of Whitman-Pound-William Carlos Williams, Olson sought to break with traditional verse forms. He coupled free composition with a diction that combined plain speaking with erudite bits of information and reference, which gave his poetry a difficult, arcane sensibility even as it conveyed sharply lyrical mood. This can be seen in his early homage to Hart Crane:

... you Hart Crane drank the poison as Crockett the cloud, tall man's thirst. I remember your death, reject all answers. Noon, tall time, at Orizaba stern you stood. In ecstasy of wake you who made a bridge

Equally difficult is the singular work of John Ashbery whose most recent work, "April Galleons" (Elizabeth Silton-Viking, 97 pp., $15,95), while not areane in the manner of Olson, is often as illusive.

A poet of elegant surfaces who makes the reader work for meaning, this collection, his 12th, is sometimes nostalgic and sometimes playful, but always lyrical. It tugs at the reader just below the surface, playing statement against qualification.

In "Forgotten Song," for example, Ashbery opens with a play on a folk tune:

'O Mary go and call the cattle home For I'm sick in my heart and fain would lie down." He then develops the poem away from tune to observe "the continual stirring That we come to recognize as life merely acts blindly in pursuit of small, selfish goals, but the repercussions Are enormous though they concern no one."

The poems in Wendell Berry's new collec-lon, "Sabbaths" (North Point, 112 pp., $12.95) are linked by their title. They form a series or sequence of meditations on characteristic and longstanding themes of his prose as well as his poetry. Those themes are the links between the natural and transcendental and the importance of the spiritual in all human action, but especially those dealing with the natural world.

Written between 1979 and 1986, many of the poems take their imagery from biblical passages and have an almost liturgical quality about them, as in the final quatrain of a 1986 poem that describes a stand of trees:

In fall their brightened leaves, released Fly down the wind, and we are pleased To walk on radiance, amazed. O light come down to earth, be praised."

'Sabbaths" is a gentle, meditative book but by no means sentimental or saccharine it is rather a realization of those moments of quietude, in which both "what is afraid of me" and "what I am afraid of" come and "live for a while" in each other's sight while fear leaves and song is possible.

More immediately accessible but equally impressive is Seamus Heaney's "The Haw Lantern," (Farrar Straus Giroux, 52 pp. $12.95), his first collection since the widely lauded "Station Island."

This collection of 31 poems, many about loss, underscore the natural, unforced gift for lytic that Heaney has consistently shown.

"She taught me what her uncle once taught her; How easily the biggest coat block split If you got the grain and hammer angled right. The sound of that relaxed alluring blow; its co-opted and obliterated echo. Taught me to hit, taught me to loosen, Taught me between the hammer and the block To face the music. Teach me now to listen. To strike it rich behind the linear block."

Baldness 'cure' hits the black market

BEIJING (UPI) - The balding pedestrian strolling down a Beijing street made an easy target. Two young men in dark glasses and tight jeans sidled up to him and hissed: "You want some 101? We can give you a good price - and guarantee supplies.

The startled old man had run into China's latest fad - 101 Hair Regrowth Liniment - a malodorous potton publicized nationwide as a intracle cure for baldness and now one of the most sought-after commodities on the country's flourishing black market.

Its invention has brought fame, a fortune and plenty of headaches to Zhao Zhangguang, 45, a former barefoot doctor and the scion of a farming family from southern Zhejlang province.

"I think my 101 Hair Regrowth Lintment is the most effective treatment for baldness so far invented," boasted Zhao, lounging in an easy chair in his downtown Beijing office, puffing an expensive American eigarette.

His potion has not undergone testing by health authorities in China or abroad and is sold domestically as a cosmetic, thus bypassing local requirements for medical verification. Zhao's hauriant mop of coal black hair is his own advertisement for the clix(r_ "How could anyone take me seriously if I didn't have a full head of hatr?" laughed Zhao. He anoints his thatch with the hair growth tonic at least once a week just to be sure. But his air of nonchalant self-confidence masks his growing anxiety over a troubling development in the wonder drug industry. Zhao's native peasant caution - he used to diamiss suggestions that he patent the remedy has come up against the unscrupulousness of life in the big city, where counterfeit products and soaring black market demand are damaging the reputation of 101.

A bottle of Chinese 101, whether take or real. fetches more than 10 times the regular price, or 75 yuan ($20) on the black market. Bottles for export have been marked up from $20 to $100.

"My joy has turned to grief," said Zhao in warning against the flood of fake tonics in the Communist Party newspaper People's Daily. Reversing his assertion that "no one can copy 101 because I am the only person who knows how to make it." Zhao belatedly has submitted a patent application. Combining such herbs and extracts as gluscing. angelica, milk vetch, peach kernels and red-root salvia. Zhao's evil-smelling concoction took years to develop. He first took an interest in traditional cures as a hobby 20 years ago. Skin diseases became his specialty and he won a local reputation as a skilled barefoot doctor. From there, "it was natural to worry about another disfiguring affliction - baldness. "I saw many young men who couldn't find brides because they didn't have any hair, and even some women," he said. "I felt very sorry for

Zhao said he tried 100 different combinations over three years. He said be had almost given up hope when a neighbor acting as a guinea pig for his 101st preparation came running in pointing to spikes of hair sprouting on her smooth pute. The success of 101 is now legendary in China. Zhao, a model party member, is a wealthy man, with five private cars, a driver and an eight-room apartment in Beijing. He coyly deflects questions on his income, but admits he carns more than Communist Party chief Zhao Ziyang and "less than (U.S. President) Reagan.

Zhao said he has treated 200,000 patients and claims a success rate of nearly 90 percent.
