CASSELBERRY — They said he wouldn't give up without a fight, but when law enforcement officials finally caught up with Eddie James in Bakersfield, California, he offered no resistance.

James, the prime suspect sought in the murder of Elizabeth Dick of Casselberry and the rape and murder of her 8-year-old granddaughter Toni Neuner, was arrested yesterday afternoon in Bakersfield after a job service employee recognized him from a feature about him on America's Most Wanted and called 911. "She talked to him and got up to call 911," said Patrick Simpson, spokesman for the Casselberry Police Department. "Meanwhile, he left the office."

But Bakersfield Police caught up with him a short distance away. Less than a block away was Dick's car and when officers asked for identification, James gave them his Florida identification card.

"He gave up without any resistance," Simpson said. "He's behind bars right now and he'll be coming back here soon."

He was scheduled for his first appearance in court this morning in a Kern County (Calif.) courtroom.

Simpson said he was interviewed by law enforcement officers in California last evening, but he has not received a report on the results of that interview.

By NICK PFEIFAUF

SANFORD — The Planning and Zoning Commission tonight will discuss regulating building activity in the historic residential area of Sanford in an effort to preserve the integrity of the area.

The workshop meeting, beginning at 6 p.m., is entitled "Old Sanford Regulations," which are the draft revisions to the city's Land Development Regulations, prompted by the changes recommended in city codes by Andres Duany.

At the Sept. 13th meeting, the City Commission reviewed portions of the draft revisions and authorized that they proceed through the review and adoption process.

The proposed changes are primarily intended to be incorporated into Schedule S, of the Historic Preservation guidelines. They are designed to preserve and enhance the architectural integrity of the area.

Since the study began, several minor changes have been proposed, and several items including a portion of the original mapping, were not yet available.

Jay Marder, Director of Planning and Development for Sanford, has indicated that after workshop discussion this evening, the P&Z will

"When she started to drive off," he said, "she attempted to make a U-turn, but it ended up as a P-turn, and she drove right into the front of the building." Damage to Smith's car was estimated at $1,000. No charges have been filed in connection with the accident.

Officer fired for sexual harassment

FORT LAUDERDALE — A 24-year veteran of the Broward Sheriff's Office was fired for sexually harassing a female deputy and threatening to have her fired if she complained, a sheriff's spokesman said.

The firing of Lt. Philip G. McCann, 47, of Loxahatchee, by Sheriff Ron Cochran came after the Professional Compliance Review Committee reviewed the results of a 10-week investigation and recommended his termination, said sheriff's spokesman Ott Cefkin on Wednesday.

McCann, a road patrol lieutenant who was second in command in unincorporated Pompano Beach, used his position to manipulate a young female deputy, saying he had "contacts in high places," and that other female deputies had been fired for reporting him, Cefkin said.

The investigation revealed the female deputy had told friends and colleagues about McCann's harassment and was adamant about not reporting it for fear of losing her job, Cefkin said. A fellow deputy lodged the complaint.

McCann's attorney, Michael Dutko, said he would fight the termination.

Sorry, Capitol fresh out of Florida juice

TALLAHASSEE — In Florida, where citrus is king and $30 million was spent last year to plug it, you can't get pure Florida orange juice in the state Capitol.

However, State Rep. Joe G. Tedder is out to change that. He is from Lakeland in the heart of the bountiful citrus belt. Visitors to the Capitol can buy juice that is blended from oranges grown in Florida, Texas, Mexico or Brazil.

Tedder began a letter-writing campaign earlier this month to persuade the state Division of Blind Services, and Capitol Foods, a private vendor, to sell 100 percent Florida orange juice.

Debbie Beasley, director of Capitol Foods, has said she would begin serving pure Florida juice at the Capitol cafeteria, possibly within two weeks, Tedder said.

Dick Thomas of the Division of Blind Services said he hopes to follow soon after in the 17th-floor snack bar operated by the agency. It would be offered in addition to the orange juice blend.

New medical examiner on the job

PANAMA CITY — A new medical examiner will conduct autopsies for a six-county area of the Florida Panhandle more than a year after the resignation of his predecessor, under investigation for his wife's death.

Dr. William Sybers resigned in July 1992, saying he wanted to devote more time to his private practice. His departure came on the heels of an investigation into the mysterious death of his wife, Kay, on May 30, 1991.

Two months later, the two other doctors in the medical examiner's office resigned in protest over allegations of irregularities in autopsies.

Since that time, bodies have been transported to Shalimar, about 80 miles from Panama City, and Tallahassee, about 100 miles, for autopsies.

Those trips no longer will be necessary. State Attorney Jim Appleman has appointed Dr. William Eckert, a forensic pathologist formerly from Wichita, Kan., to serve as medical examiner for the 14th Judicial Circuit, pending a decision on his nomination by Gov. Lawton Chiles and approval of his contract by county commissioners.

Homeowner kills convicted burglar

JACKSONVILLE — A convicted burglar was fatally shot by a homeowner who said the man tried to steal his lawnmower.

Eddie Rowell, 66, told police that he went outside his home to investigate late Tuesday after noting a suspicious vehicle near his home. He said he fired several shots at Thomas Artes Jefferson with a .22-caliber revolver after he saw him in front of his carport carrying his mower.

Jefferson, 47, fled but was later found dead on a nearby street, police said. Prosecutors did not immediately decide whether to charge Rowell.

Assistant State Attorney Dwane Tyson said investigators were trying to determine whether Rowell's actions constituted murder or justifiable use of deadly force by a homeowner.

Such use of force is justified if the homeowner is trying to prevent a forcible felony, such as burglary, Tyson said. Jacksonville Sheriff Jim McMillan said Rowell had been plagued with thefts recently.

Jefferson had been arrested for burglary twice in 1992 and was sentenced in March 1992 to six months in jail.

Judge lifts gag order in slaying arrests

By BILL BERGSTROM
Associated Press Writer

TALLAHASSEE — A 13-year-old and three teen-age companions with "a low value for human life" were charged Wednesday in the shooting death of a British tourist, but the victim's mother doesn't want to see them face the death penalty.

"I don't want them to get the death penalty because I know Gary would not have wanted that. He was against capital punishment," said Brenda Armitage, of Shipley, England. "The only reason I want them caught is so that they can't kill anybody else and nobody else can go through what we're going through."

Her son, Gary Colley, 34, died Sept. 14

after he and his girlfriend were shot in their car at a well-lit, crowded north Florida rest area. He was the 10th foreign visitor since last October to be killed in Florida.

Margaret Ann Jagger, who survived the shooting, said she was stunned by the ages of their attackers.

"I am numb and I do not really feel much for them one way or another," she said. "If this makes new waves about gun control laws and saves someone else from getting killed, then Gary has died for a reason, I guess."

FDLE and Jefferson County Sheriff announced the arrests Wednesday, 17 hours after they had originally planned because of an overnight gag order.

Prior to the order, authorities had said they were focusing on a 13-year-old with a record of 15 arrests on more than 50 charges, held since the shooting on an unrelated auto theft charge.

The others arrested were reported to be his 16-year-old half brother, another 16-year-old and a 14-year-old, but officials refused to confirm names or ages Wednesday.

Sanford house fire under investigation

By NICK SPENFAUP
Herald Staff Writer

SANFORD — A home at 1311 Cypress Ave., in Sanford, was badly damaged by fire last night. Five persons were reportedly in the building at the time.

Sanford fire department Battalion Chief William Ellenburg said the fire was believed to have been started in a sofa. "Our investigators will be going out there today to do some further checking," he said, "but at this time, we don't know the exact cause and can't estimate a monetary damage amount."

The five occupants in the home were identified as Johnny and Margaret Rozier, Sheryl Johnson, and her two children, a boy, age 7 and a girl age 8.

"Johnny Rozier had the only injury as a result of the fire," Ellenburg said. "He apparently tried to extinguish the flames, and in the process, broke out a window in the house, causing some cuts on his arm."

Ellenburg said Rozier was treated for his injuries at the scene and did not require hospitalization.

Sanford firefighters quelled a blaze in a Cypress Avenue home in short order last night. Five persons in the home escaped from the flames. The fire was believed to be started in a sofa.

No further information was available this morning, pending the completion of the fire investigation.

Medical world views guns as health problem

By DANIEL G. HANEY
AP Science Writer

BOSTON — Keep a gun in the house and your chances of getting murdered triple.

That's the conclusion of a study in today's New England Journal of Medicine. In addition, the researchers found no evidence that owning a gun keeps people safe from intruders.

Instead, it just increases the risk of being killed by a friend, a relative or a lover.

"The risks of keeping guns in the home substantially outweigh the potential benefits in terms of safety," said Dr. Arthur L. Kellermann, who directed the study.

The researchers noted nearly half of all Americans keep firearms at home, citing protection as a major reason. In their study, doctors examined 388 killings to see if guns really do save their owners' lives.

The study found people were significantly more likely to die from homicides at home if there had been other domestic violence, if people lived in rented homes or if any member of the household used drugs or had ever been arrested.

However, when these and other factors were taken into consideration, people who kept guns were still almost three times more likely than other people to be killed at home, usually by a friend or relative.

"We did not find any evidence of a protective effect of gun ownership, even following forced entry into the home or actively resisting an assailant," said Kellermann, a researcher at Emory University in Atlanta.

In an editorial, the journal's editor, Dr. Jerome P. Kassirer, noted that earlier studies also have found risks of keeping guns at home. "High-quality epidemiologic research is the latest challenge to the gun lobby," he wrote.

Among those who have most taken the issue of gun violence to heart are emergency room doctors.

"We see so much of the results of this. To us, it's a public health issue," said Dr. John McCabe, president-elect of the American College of Emergency Physicians.

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, which paid for the research, has made the study of firearm injuries a priority.

However, Paul Blackman, research coordinator for the National Rifle Association, said the CDC emphasizes "anti-gun research."

He criticized the latest study for focusing on homicides, not nonfatal uses of guns for protection, and said the medical journals "set aside any normal scientific standards when they have research on guns."

In the study, researchers compared each victim with someone the same age and sex who lived in the same area in three urban counties in Ohio, Tennessee and Washington.

Among their findings:

—Half of the homicides occurred during a quarrel or romantic triangle.

—Three-quarters of the victims were killed by a relative or someone they knew.

—In 5 percent of cases, the victim unsuccessfully tried to use a gun in self-defense.

Chippendales owner faces new murder and racketeering charges

By JAMES ANDERSON
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES — The owner of the Chippendales male strip troupe, already charged with conspiring to kill competitors, was indicted on new racketeering and murder charges in the scheme, prosecutors said Wednesday.

A federal grand jury indicted Somen "Steve" Banerjee, 46, of Playa Del Rey, on seven counts, alleging murder, murder for hire, racketeering and arson. U.S. Attorney Terree A. Bowers said.

Banerjee was arrested Sept. 2 and held without bail on an original indictment that charged him with arranging the murder of a former business partner in New York City and attempted murder of three ex-employees who joined a rival male dance troupe.

Banerjee pleaded innocent to those charges. Arraignment on the new charges was not immediately scheduled.

Conviction on all charges would result in life in prison and a $1.75 million fine.

The new indictment alleges

Banerjee violated anti-corruption laws by doing business through racketeering, murder, murder for hire and arson, Bowers said.

Banerjee went into the disco business in 1975 and from 1980 his well-oiled, beefcake Chippendales performers danced and explored sexual fantasies before sellout audiences, mostly female. Posters, pin-up calendars and other merchandise featuring Chippendales hunks sold briskly.

Chippendales closed its West Los Angeles club in 1988, but its dancers have performed elsewhere in the country and abroad since then.

Time to adjust to school all year round

In July, 1994, Seminole County elementary schools will enter into the year round calendar. This will be county wide.

Rather than approximately nine months in class and three summer months on vacation, the schools will operate on what are called "tracks." The system is based on the school population, which will determine what percentage of students will be on short vacations during various times of the year.

At the offset, this will cause problems. Many parents regularly schedule their family vacations in the summer months when the children are out of school.

With year-round classes, in order to have vacations with their children, parents will need to rearrange their schedules.

An additional problem will occur when children are at different educational levels, with some attending year-round classes and others still having 9-month semesters.

Parents of school-age youngsters all take family vacations during June, July or August. They have become regimented to this routine over the years, adjusting shared family time to what has been the school term.

There will now be another adjustment required. Vacations will have to be based on when children will be available. It isn't going to be easy.

Families should gather together and make plans.

Year-round schooling is one way we can help reduce the classroom sizes without reducing the educational levels or without the need to build new and costly schools. It may not, at the beginning, appear to be the best solution, but it can be worked out if given a chance.

By preparing now, the entire family will have less hassle when the year-round schooling is underway.

City employees

Ref. Nick Pfeiffauf's article in the Sanford Herald, Sept. 29, 1993, "Sanford Civil Service Board: No relatives, no former city employees?"

After reading this article, it became apparent that what our corrupt city commissioners and certain city officials are trying to do, is to stack the civil service board against the city's employees. It never ceases to amaze me the patience with which the men and women of this town submit to the burdens unnecessarily laid upon them by our elected government.

It would behoove the city's employees to band together and retain the services of an attorney to oppose this measure through the court. In effect, the city management and commission are telling the employees who they can and cannot vote for. They are using the guise of fairness to cloud the real issue here, which is their ability to control the Civil Service Board. Employees, this is your Civil Service Board, not management's. If you allow the city to get away with this, you're just cutting your own throats in the long run. It is important to consider that this kind of politician or person wants to limit your freedom to exercise your right to vote for whoever you may choose. If you look through the history books you'll find many examples of such people. They are fascist and communist. I'm wondering which way the people who are proposing this measure lean. These people were elected to "serve" the citizens and employees, not vice versa. They are like the other 90 percent of elected officials, once elected, they try to do damn well what they please.

Employees of Sanford, if you are interested in fighting this measure, please contact me. It shouldn't take more than about $10 per employee to stop this. I know an excellent and very aggressive attorney who could take care of this little matter. I would not divulge your identity to anyone. Folks, the ball is in your end zone. It's up to each of you whether to play or forfeit.

WILLIAM A. RUSHER

Liberals can still do just one trick

Conservatives, watching their liberal opponents prepare to shove universal health care down the nation's throat, may well wonder whether we aren't seeing some sort of major liberal comeback.

Is the dreaded "L word," which damaged Dukakis so badly when it was fastened on him in the campaign of 1988, and which Bill Clinton resisted so stoutly in 1992, losing its terror, or even recapturing some of its ancient charm?

I think we can be pretty sure that "liberal" is going to continue to be an adjective that most politicians will want to avoid. Liberalism has lost some very big battles recently, and its probable coming victory on the health care issue is not a sign of a major change.

Let's not forget that it was the conservatives who kept America pointed toward victory in the Cold War, and Ronald Reagan who exerted the pressures that finally brought about the collapse of the Soviet Union. It is true that in the early days of the Cold War some liberal leaders (Hubert Humphrey, for one) were staunchly anti-Soviet. But the great majority of liberal leaders, especially after the crazies took over the Democratic Convention of 1972, seemed reluctant to admit there was a war on, and did precious little to help win it.

Second, don't underestimate the tremendous importance of the worldwide triumph, in recent years, of free-enterprise principles over the various forms of socialism — including the ones that liberals peddled in this country under such disguises as "industrial policy." Modern American liberalism never really approved of free enterprise, but even the Michael Kinsleys are reluctantly joining the choir now.

These two great struggles — one in the foreign arena, and one in the field of domestic policy — have been the central battles in American politics during the past half-century, and the conservatives won both of them.

Is the dreaded 'L word,' losing its terror, or even recapturing some of its ancient charm?

There is, however, one area in which the liberals have always been able to achieve a certain amount of success. Free enterprise, in its 19th-century form, tended to be a pretty Darwinian affair: a case of sink or swim. Its critics, therefore, included not only Marx but, from a very different direction, the Roman Catholic Church. In 1891, Pope Leo XIII, in his encyclical Rerum Novarum, cautioned employers that they had Christian as well as economic obligations to their employees.

Similarly, starting with the child labor laws, there has been a long tradition in this country that sought to modulate the sometimes harsh consequences of untrammelled market economics. Anti-trust laws, the Wagner Labor Relations Act, the Social Security Act, the Securities Exchange Act, the minimum wage laws, unemployment compensation, and more recently Lyndon Johnson's whole ill-conceived "war on poverty" are all examples of liberal measures that purported to protect us against the "excesses" of free enterprise.

I don't for a minute suggest that all of these measures have been wise. Some undoubtedly were; others, it is now plain, were not. But by and large the American people have been willing to go along with them.

Eclipsing Mrs. Roosevelt

In committee chambers made bright by TV's spotlights, America's extraordinary first lady outshined her interrogators on health care and tamed or at least tempered her most caustic critics in Congress.

But you have to slip inside the inner sanctums of the West Wing of the White House to grasp the full extent of the unprecedented influence that Hillary Rodham Clinton wields within the government. Let's join a recent meeting of President Clinton's senior staff, already in progress.

They are gathered in the Roosevelt Room, discussing various important matters. They are, as they refer to each other: "Mack" and "George" and "Dave" and "Howard" and "Carol" ... and "Mrs. Clinton." Mack — Thomas McLarty, the president's old friend and chief of staff — is the one who is presiding, albeit somewhat nonofficially. For, when an idea is hatched or a plan is devised, it is often Mrs. Clinton who takes command: "Who's going to follow up on that?" or "When will we hear how it's progressing?" McLarty silently keeps his own counsel as she offers hers. From time to time, when George or Howard or Carol or someone proposes something, a colleague might respond this is a bad idea because of such-and-such. It does not happen when Mrs. Clinton speaks.

Her contributions — private and public — make her by far the greatest asset of Bill Clinton's White House, senior staff advisers say with genuine sincerity and veracity. But her presence in these meetings can also be inhibiting, they concede. It is the one minus that comes with the package of pluses that is the unprecedented role the Clintons have forged: Call it first lady-first adviser. It is a higher calling than McLarty or any other adviser can possess.

"There are times, I must admit, when it is a bit intimidating to have her playing the role she plays," says one of the president's top advisers. While staff members think even McLarty is inhibited by Mrs. Clinton's unique role, they add, in the words of one adviser: "But that is a small price to pay for the very large value that she brings to the White House."

She has brought us all a long way. It seems not just a year ago but a light-year ago when the Republicans turned their 1992 convention into a week of Hillary bashing — "Hillary" was their sneered epithet of choice. All that seemed forgotten in her performances on Capitol Hill, as she praised the Republican ideas on health care and charmed old coots like Strom Thurmond ("Amen," she said, after one of his mushy mumble observations).

But just across the Potomac River, those bad old days were not forgotten. In a shameful pandering by a pol who knows better, former Education Secretary William Bennett, who'd like the Republican presidential nomination, appeared before the Concerned Women for America, a group of 1,150 conservative Christian activists, and (as quoted by The Washington Post) called Mrs. Clinton the nation's "new nanny.... She thinks she knows what's best for us.... Thoroughly Modern Millie has taken over." (Then he said: "She deserves not to be patronized.")

The other night, as the premier guest on CNN's new "Larry King Weekend" show, Mrs. Clinton demurred as King noted that she had been compared to Eleanor Roosevelt. "Well, to me it's an honor," she said. "I don't know that I deserve it." In truth, she most certainly does. She has in her way already accomplished something far greater — forging a complex, era-defining new policy, translating it into comprehensible English and selling it coast-to-coast. No first lady ever did that before.

Then the King of cable-talk mentioned that Mrs. Roosevelt even wrote a weekly newspaper column from the White House and asked if Mrs. Clinton might start writing one too (nevermind that this is an already overpopulated craft). Replied the first lady: "If anybody asked me to, I might."

Say what? Now Hillary Clinton has gone too far! Why doesn't she host a cable TV talk show — maybe opposite Larry King on CNBC?

Let's join a recent meeting of President Clinton's senior staff, already in progress.

Speaking out on China and food

What's on America's mind? Judging from the inquiries in the "Ask the Curmudgeon" file, it's mostly food and China.

I know, it's weird. But check it out: Dear Curmudgeon: The whole world seemed to sigh with relief when China failed in its bid to host the Olympics in the year 2000. I didn't realize there was such universal concern about China's miserable human rights record. Believe me, I'm not knocking it: I'm just Grateful in Grand Rapids.

Dear GNGR: I think a lot of people were relieved that the planet itself survived the International Olympic Committee's decision to award the games to Sydney, Australia. The leadership in Beijing gave the impression the matter meant more to them than life itself and that they would consider it a monstrous loss of face if they failed in their bid to land the Olympics. Nationwide pep rallies, demonstrations on top of the Great Wall, perhaps even under-the-table payments to IOC members — these things were serious. It wouldn't surprise me to learn the Pentagon was on Red Alert when the IOC voted.

Dear Curmudgeon: How in the heck did two Chinese female runners break world records last month? Qu Yunxia bettered the old 1,500 meters mark by more than two seconds; Wang Junxia knocked an incredible 42 seconds off the 10,000 meters record. Something funny is going on. Skeptical in Schenectady.

Dear SNS: Ready for this? The Chinese coach said he gives his runners a special tonic made from dried worms. I do not jest. And, according to the Beijing Daily, he feeds them a special diet of millet and dates and dog meat simmered in chicken soup. The night before Wang's 10,000 meter run, the coach himself said, he fed her a high-energy soft-shell turtle. He didn't say whether he left out the MSG.

Dear Curmudgeon: Have you heard about the new hairy potato that resists pests? Developed from wild potatoes, it has thin hairs that secrete a sticky substance that fights off moths, mealybugs, mites and more. Pleased in Pocatello.

Dear PNP: I personally prefer fries without whiskers.

Dear Curmudgeon: Yo, Mr. C. I know how you feel about baseball being played on fake grass, so I couldn't wait to tell you about a grassroots drive to rip up the fake turf in Kansas City's Kauffman Stadium. Petitions are being passed around and "Real Grass at Royals Stadium" bumper stickers are everywhere. Ecstatic in Emporia.

Dear Ec in Em: Every so often the Curmudgeon is visited with a misanthropic thought, but then he hears something like this and his faith in the human race is restored. God bless the fine folks in K.C. And here's hoping your good sense is catching.

Dear Curmudgeon: Pizza Hut has the Bigfoot; Little Caesar's has the Big! Big! Pizza; Domino's has the Dominator. How big are these things going to get? Sorry in Salsalito.

Dear Susy: They say the pizza delivery person of the future is going to have to be qualified to drive 18-wheelers. That give you some ideas?

Dear Curmudgeon: Did you hear about that Center for Science in the Public Interest study of Chinese food? They discovered that Moo Shu Pork and Kung Pao Chicken are as fatty as fast food burgers. Sign me Tofu Told-You-So.

Dear Tofu: I agree with the critics, who said the Center tested American Chinese food, not Chinese Chinese food. I'm withholding judgment until they analyze soft-shell turtles.

I know, it's weird. But check it out.

It is the PAR classroom that sponsored and organized the PAR Park.

"It was created by and for the children," Myers said.

The PAR classroom is a place where students go for some time out when they've had a little trouble with their behavior, Myers said. She said that the children are sent to the room to contemplate their behavior and to find some positive activities as a release for their energies.

"These are all really good kids who've had some behavioral problems," she said.

Of course, she added, anyone who wants to go to the PAR classroom to take part in the activities, including the on-going creation and upkeep of the park, is allowed to do so with the permission of their teacher.

The PAR Park also gives the young people a sense of self-esteem and ownership in something.

"Is it really ours?" the students often ask Myers.

She said that she assures them that it is. It is their's to enjoy, but also to be responsible for. It is a place for relaxation and a place for lessons in responsibility.

The students love the park.

she says. They actively seek donations of flowers and materials from local businesses and work tirelessly at planting and caring for the plants.

Stenstrom Realty donated a large sign that has been placed at the entrance to the park.

"Must be accompanied by a child," is the simple message.

Ace Hardware has donated the many flowers that bloom around the gardens. They've also donated some decorative animals.

"It is a beautiful place," Myers said. "There are flowers, some benches and picnic tables. It is a great place to have a child take you to."

Welfare

will suggest applying for the program, but to serve fewer clients, possibly targeting Midway and Ocala, instead of the whole county.

Though invited to apply by Jim Towey, secretary of the Florida Department of Health and Rehabilitative Services, the HHSB turned down the $6 million offer because District Secretary Paul Sneed said the grant wouldn't fully cover the expenses of the program.

Under the state Welfare Transition Act, recipients of Aid to Families with Dependent Children and other welfare programs will receive free daycare, training, transportation and other incentives to get a job and off the programs. Participants have up to three years to become self-supported. If not, their benefits cease, although those of their dependents do not.

Seminole County was one of seven counties in the state eligible for the program. Only two will be selected.

Sneed recommended against the program because it would drain personnel from the most under-staffed HRS district in the state. The central Florida district which includes Seminole County is currently at about 45 percent of the recommended staff levels. The program would require 50 more staffers.

Dr. Jorge Deju, the county's health director, said the agencies, including the Private Industry Council of Seminole County, Community Coordinated Child Care of Central Florida and others agreed the district should pursue the program. But they also agreed with Sneed it would put too much strain on HRS district resources, so the test program should be restricted. Deju said the group decided. Under the state guidelines, the program should serve 1,805 families if voluntary or 3,624 if required.

Deju said a representative for the 4C child care agency noted the program allowed for $900 per year per client for child care, but the average cost of daycare was from $50 to $70 per week, $2,500 to $3,500 per year.

Deju said the program poses no potential financial cost to the county.

day. The Monticello housing project where the youths lived, Jefferson Arms, was largely deserted Wednesday.

"I saw the police come and I saw them go away," said a woman in a group of half a dozen women and children sitting on some porch steps. She said she didn't know who was arrested.

"I try to stay out of their way. Half the people around here say they don't want nothing to do with it," said the woman, who refused to give her name. Others wouldn't comment.

The four teenagers were charged with first degree murder, attempted first degree murder and auto theft.

Florida authorities weren't happy with a judge's decision that prevented them from releasing much information on the four youths.

"We would like to be able to identify juvenile criminals and their criminal pasts, but current juvenile justice law prohibits it," said Tim Moore, commissioner of the Florida Department of Law Enforcement.

Copper

late. Danberry Mill, Markham Hills and Golden Grove tested above the 1.3 parts per million acceptable copper standard. The drinking water standards are set by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency.

Water samples from some Longwood homes tested between 1.37 ppm to 2.61 ppm. Copper is an essential nutrient, but at high doses it has been shown to cause stomach and intestinal distress, liver and kidney damage and anemia. Persons with Wilson's disease may be at higher risk of health effects due to copper than the general public.

Homeowners are being told to take a few simple steps to minimize their exposure to too much copper. There is no need to seek alternative water supplies, according to Kornbluth. In homes built during the mid-80's with copper pipes, the cold water tap should run for about one minute before using the water, and do not use hot tap water for cooking purposes.

Kornbluth said the EPA water sampling was conducted from Jan. 1 to June 30. Testing was supposed to be done from July 1, 1992 until Dec. 31, however, there was a conflict between the EPA and State of Florida regulations.

The public works director said the city was using state standards in the earlier study which were not as stringent as the federal guidelines.

"Actually, we are technically in violation of the lead and copper law," Kornbluth said, "because EPA wrote it one way, and the State of Florida wrote it another way. When EPA found out that Florida didn't write it as stringent as EPA's was, they yanked it back from the state, so all the time I was working with the state on their guidelines, was basically for naught."

In the years prior to 1982 Kornbluth said the copper content of plumbing pipe was not as high, either that or the pipes have already lost enough copper to corrosion for the water in older homes to test in the acceptable range. In addition, in 1986, the lead solder and fluxes used to join pipes was banned. The Longwood homes tested within acceptable lead levels.

The contamination occurs when water sits for a period of time in the lines and may result in some corrosion of the pipes. During the testing, Kornbluth said residents were told to allow water to sit in the lines for six hours and then samples were drawn. Sixty homes were sample sites in the study.

Corrosion studies are now under way and may be completed in December. Kornbluth said he hopes a simple change in the city's water treatment will reduce the pipe corrosion to bring the copper levels back into compliance with the EPA standards. Kornbluth said the city is working to comply with the regulations and he does not think a fine will be imposed.

He said that a crime lab in Kern County would "process" Dick's car, looking for clues in the case.

Simpson said extradition would be simple in this case because James was arrested on a federal warrant for fleeing to avoid prosecution. He will be returned to Casselberry to face charges of murder, rape, grand theft and grand theft auto.

"It will be a day or two, but he'll be here by the first of next week," he said.

It is unclear if a local law enforcement officer will have to travel to California to retrieve James or if federal agents will accompany him back.

Simpson said that investigators do not know what James was doing in Bakersfield, where he has no known connections. They believe he was on his way to San Francisco where he had lived briefly in the past.

Since the Sept. 20 murder, James had been spotted pawning jewelry stolen from Dick in Indianapolis and in Glenwood Springs, Colorado.

He may have been seeking day labor in Bakersfield to earn some quick cash, Simpson said, to finance both his crack cocaine habit and his trip.

"We don't know," he said. "We'll have to wait till we get him back here. Right now we can only speculate."

James, 32, was featured twice on America's Most Wanted, both last week and on an update on Tuesday evening.

"John Walsh (the host of the popular show) took a personal interest in this case," Simpson said. "It brought back a lot of memories for him. When I called him to tell him they'd caught him (James), he was ecstatic."

Walsh's son, Adam, was murdered at a young age and the connection between that and the murder of Neuner struck close to home, Simpson said.

Investigators give a great deal of credit for James' capture to the television show.

U.S. soldier killed in Somalia

A U.S. soldier was killed and 12 others were wounded in Somalia during an attack on the Mogadishu airport, a U.N. spokesman said today.

The spokesman, Maj. David Stockwell, told AP Network News in an interview this morning from Mogadishu that two mortar rounds hit the airport Wednesday night. The soldiers were part of the U.S. quick strike force, primarily from Fort Benning, Ga.

The attack came as President Clinton reportedly decided against pulling troops out of Somalia and settled on a plan that will send 1,500 to 2,000 more soldiers there quickly, followed by a certain date for a withdrawal.

It is the first American fatality since clashes on Sunday killed 12 American soldiers and led to the Somalis' capture of at least one U.S. pilot.

More troops head for Somalia

WASHINGTON — President Clinton has decided against pulling U.S. troops out of Somalia immediately and settled on a plan that will send 1,500 to 2,000 more soldiers there quickly, followed by a certain date for a full withdrawal, administration officials say.

Despite growing congressional calls for a faster pullout, Clinton will call for all U.S. forces to be withdrawn by year's end or early next year, the officials said Wednesday, sneaking on condition of anonymity.

The initial show of force would be an effort by Clinton to protect U.S. troops in Somalia — once numbering 28,000 but now down to 4,700 — and to try to win the release of captured Americans.

The Washington Post reported today that officials of Aidiid's militia said they would hold onto the captured U.S. pilot until the United Nations frees more than two dozen Aidiid gunmen being held in U.N. custody in Mogadishu. The Post and The New York Times said today that a total U.S. withdrawal would occur within the next six months.

Government probes weaponry source

WASHINGTON — The United States strongly suspects that the recent hits scored by warlord Mohamed Farrah Aidiid against U.N. forces in Somalia are the result of training and weaponry from Sudan and Iran.

Intelligence information since the beginning of the year has pointed to an emerging alliance between Aidiid and government-backed, Iranian-trained Muslim fundamentalists in Sudan.

"We have seen some evidence of Sudanese support for factions within Somalia and we are aware, of course, of the links that do exist between the Iranian government and the Sudanese government," State Department spokesman Michael McCurry said Wednesday.

In March, Aidiid traveled to Sudan and met with Hassan Turabi, leader of the National Islamic Front — a fundamentalist political party with a militia being trained by Iranian Revolutionary Guards, said a U.S. official.

Prime minister re-elected

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan — In a surprising victory, Benazir Bhutto defeated her conservative opponent in national elections today to bring the prime minister's post she lost three years ago once again within her grasp.

Wednesday's election marks an impressive comeback by Ms. Bhutto, the scion of a powerful family who was educated at Harvard and Oxford. Now 40, she remains the most charismatic figure in Pakistan, a Muslim nation of 120 million people.

From prison and then from exile in England, she spent a decade fighting the country's military dictator, Gen. Mohammed Zia ul-Haq, who overthrew her father in a 1977 coup and ordered him hanged two years later.

In 1988, after the general's death, she won elections that restored democracy to Pakistan, becoming the first woman head of a modern Muslim state. But 20 months later, her government was dismissed on corruption charges.

Test IDs young athletes at risk from heart defects

By Associated Press

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — A genetic test is enabling doctors to identify many cases of a hereditary heart defect that often becomes apparent only when it suddenly kills a young athlete on the basketball court or the football field.

The discovery of many of the mutations responsible for the disorder could lead eventually to a treatment. In the meantime, it will allow doctors to warn those children or teen-agers who are likely to drop dead to avoid strenuous sports, said Dr. Christine Seidman of Harvard Medical School.

"The only thing worse than having the phone ring and someone tell you their 19-year-old son has died is hearing that a second child has died," she said.

The disorder, familial hypertrophic cardiomyopathy, may occur in as many as one in 10,000 people, she said. In its later stages it leads to an abnormal thickening of the heart wall. Exactly how that triggers sudden death is not known.

One of the most notable victims of cardiomyopathy was college basketball star Hank Gathers, who collapsed during a game in 1990 and died. (However, experts are uncertain whether he had the inherited form of the disease.)

In a report Wednesday at the annual meeting of the American Society of Human Genetics, Seidman said that doctors have identified the gene responsible for about 40 percent of the cases of the disorder.

She has found that certain mutations in the gene produce relatively mild cardiomyopathy. Other mutations produce a severe form with a high risk of sudden death.

That is helping researchers decide which patients may need treatment and which are likely to do well without it, she said.

Doctors are beginning to devise treatments that could include a combination of heart drugs or things such as pacemaker-like devices that can prevent rhythm disturbances.

Seidman has traced 40 percent of cases of the inherited form of cardiomyopathy to defects in the heart's beta myosin heavy chain gene. It is one of the genes that direct the manufacture of myosin, a molecule that acts as the contracting "motor" in the heart's muscle, Seidman said.

She and other researchers have also found that cardiomyopathy can be caused by at least three other genes, however, which may explain many of the remaining 60 percent of cases, she said.

Mark Keating of the University of Utah, who is close to uncovering the cause of another inherited heart defect, said work by Seidman and others is important not only because it is helping counter disease but also because it is shedding light on other kinds of heart ailments.

"We're making a lot of progress," he said.

Northeast: more doctors, higher bills

By CHRISTOPHER CONNELL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — The first government comparison of state health spending in nearly a decade found that Northeast states with the largest concentration of doctors also have the heaviest medical bills.

The lowest spending was in the Rocky Mountain states, according to the study published Wednesday in the fall issue of the Journal of Health Affairs.

Americans in 1991 spent $1,877 per capita for hospital care, physician services and prescription drugs. But it varied from a high of $2,177 in New England to a low of $1,567 in the Rocky Mountain states.

Health spending nationally rose at a 10.5 percent annual rate from 1980 through 1991. New Hampshire, which experienced a rapid rise in both personal income and population, saw its expenditures go up 13.4 percent a year.

At the other end was Illinois, where spending rose 8.5 percent a year. Illinois' population grew by just 1 percent during those years, while the United States was experiencing 11 percent growth.

The figures were prepared by analysts in the Health Care Financing Administration for the White House task force on health reform.

Hillary Rodham Clinton, who headed the task force, complained last week in her testimony before Congress that Medicare was spending two to three times as much on the elderly in some parts of the country as others. She said people run up much higher hospital bills in Boston than in New Haven, Conn., with no apparent advantage to health care.

The Clinton health plan would try to squeeze the fat out of the health care system in just a few years.

The White House dispatched its top economic officials to counter claims the president's plan would cost 1 million or more Americans their jobs.

Laura Tyson, chair of the Council of Economic Advisers, predicted that the Clinton plan would have no more than a half-percentage point impact on the jobless rate in either direction. About 6.7 percent of Americans were unemployed in August.

Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen said that in the long term "the health of our economy is absolutely dependent on health-care reform."

New England and the Mid-Atlantic states spent 13 percent and 12 percent more than the national average on hospitals, doctors and drugs in 1991; the Rocky Mountain states spent 17 percent less than average. The two highest-spending regions had more than 18 doctors for every 10,000 residents, compared with fewer than 16 nationally.

Those regions also had higher per capita incomes and higher than average elderly populations.

Phillip Lee, the assistant secretary for health in the Department of Health and Human Services, recently complained that the country has a glut of doctors. He said they are a major factor in the health cost spiral.

The country is spending an estimated $900 billion overall on health care this year, or well over $3,000 per person.

In 1991 it spent $732 billion, according to the Congressional Budget Office. The three items in the HCFA study — hospitals, doctors and retail drugs — accounted for $473 billion of that bill. It did not look at dental care, nursing homes and other medical services and products.

Hospital bills in the Mid-Atlantic states were 19 percent above the national average. Hospitals in the Mid-Atlantic region admitted more patients and they stayed longer.

The Southwest and Rocky Mountain states, which spent 9 percent and 17 percent less than average, had smaller-than-average ratios of physicians to population and fewer elderly residents.

Hawaii, the one state with nearly universal health coverage and a mandate on employers to provide insurance, saw its health spending rise faster than the national average from 1980 to 1991: 11.4 percent.

Rita Dove plans a high-tech approach to poet laureate's job

By NITA LELYVELD
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — The nation's new poet laureate, Rita Dove, fell in love with poetry as a child, reading Langston Hughes and William Shakespeare.

In one of her poems, "In the Old Neighborhood," she writes: "I've read every book in this house."

I know which shelf to go to to taste crumbling alicies (don't eat with your nose in a book) and the gritty slick of sardines, silted bones of no consequence disintegrating on the tongue... That was Romeo and Juliet, strangely enough, and just as odd stuffed green olives for a premature attempt at The Iliad.

The Pulitzer Prize-winning poet couldn't stop reading, she says. But today's children have so much else competing for their attention — from computers to television to videotapes.

Dove believes strongly that poetry should be a part of everyone's life.

That's why she is making it her goal to use her new position to reach as many young people as possible and to get them excited about the written word.

Her strategy is to do so on their own turf.

That means finding ways to put poetry on television, and using satellite technology to beam her into as many classrooms as possible, she said Wednesday in her first appearance to the Library of Congress.

To many children, poetry seems far away. Showing them a real live poet can change that, she says.

"It's so important that kids realize that knowledge is vital and alive and that it's all connected to real things, that they just don't learn the mathematical tables because they have to learn them but because they're going to use them all the time in their lives," Dove said Wednesday.

"And that if someone is a poet that's a person who walks around and talks and jokes."

In the introduction to a new volume of her poetry, "Selected Poems," Dove writes of the day a teacher took her to a reading by poet John Ciardi when she was in grade school.

"At that moment I realized that writers were real people and how it was possible to write down a poem or a story in the intimate sphere of one's own room and then share it with the world," she wrote.

At 40, Dove is the youngest poet laureate chosen.

She was born in Akron, Ohio, and was a 1970 presidential scholar as one of the 100 best high school graduates in the United States that year. She graduated summa cum laude from Miami University in Ohio, was a Fulbright fellow in Germany and received a masters of fine arts at the University of Iowa.

A professor at the University of Virginia, she is taking a leave of absence to be poet laureate. She has written many volumes of poetry, as well as short stories and a novel. She won the Pulitzer Prize in 1987 for "Thomas and Beulah," a verse cycle based loosely on her grandparents' experiences.

Speaking with great enthusiasm and energy Wednesday, she rattled off idea after idea when asked what she would like to accomplish this year.

She wants to organize an Earth Day conference where politicians, musicians, scientists and poets come together to talk about the environment. She's planning an evening of jazz and poetry in which the music and the words "mesh together."

She's heard about a series of poetry workshops with American Indian children on reservations and she wants to invite them to visit her in Washington.

"One way of keeping a people, a society, in tune with itself is by recording its history," she said. "But all the history books in the world, and the statistics and political documents, can't give us the whole truth."

"Something essential is missing: the heart, or what the Germans call 'zeitgeist' — the spirit, the soul of the times. The arts — literature, sculpture, dance, theater, music, painting — convey that soul."

Dove succeeds Mona Van Duyn. Congress created the poet laureate in 1985 to replace earlier post of consultant in poetry, which dates to 1944.
