Six die in copter crash

BARSTOW, Calif. — A California Air National Guard search and rescue helicopter on a training mission in Southern California crashed into a mountain and burned, killing all six people on board, officials said.

The helicopter, assigned to 129th Air Rescue and Recovery Group based at Moffett Naval Air Station 30 miles south of San Francisco, crashed at 10:55 a.m. Thursday about 130 miles northeast of Los Angeles, said Sgt. Carolyn Hamilton, a National Guard spokeswoman in Sacramento.

Four National Guardsmen and two airmen from George Air Force Base near Victorville were killed in the crash, Hamilton said.

Blackout plagues Seattle

SEATTLE — Downtown residents and businesses, facing a heat wave without benefit of air conditioning in the third day of a power blackout, today turned to ice, water and friends to keep cool while hundreds of workers tried to restore electricity.

The power in a 55-square-block area, shut down by an underground electrical fire Wednesday, was not expected to be restored until mid-morning Saturday, said May Gerstle, Seattle City Light's director of community relations.

The National Weather Service today predicted the temperatures in Seattle today would surpass the 91-degree record set in 1974.

Bakker may get PTL back

FORT MILL, S.C. — PTL's bankruptcy trustee is backing Jim Bakker's $165 million purchase offer, and Bakker says it's only a matter of time before the ministry he founded and lost in a sex scandal is his again.

Bakker sat down with PTL officials Thursday to put the final touches on the deal, and bankruptcy trustee M.C. Red Benton said the fall evangelist deserves a second chance.

Benton said Bakker's proposal for buying PTL, beats the $113 million bid from Canadian real estate developer Peter Thomas.

Miami receivers confident

CORAL GABLES — Miami wide receiver Dale Hawkins believes the Hurricanes' passing attack will start the season in high gear, despite the loss of three talented receivers from last year's national championship team.

As 10th-ranked Miami prepares to play No. 1 Florida State Saturday night in the Orange Bowl, perhaps the biggest uncertainty facing the team is how the inexperienced receiving corps will perform.

Miami lost receivers Michael Ivin, Brett Perriman and Brian Blades, as well as tight ends Alfredo Roberts and Charles Henry. Ivin was drafted in the first round of the NFL draft, while Perriman and Blades were second round choices.

Gator hunt uneventful

Season under way; few kills reported

PUZZLE LAKE — The Florida Game and Fresh Water Fish Commission calls it an alligator harvest — the first legalized taking of the reptiles in 19 years.

As the first night of the great gator hunt began to unfold Thursday, hunters would soon discover the red-eyed monsters of the murky waters along the St. Johns River were not cooperating.

While small, young gators seemingly ignored the lights and roar of numerous airboats in search of a prize catch, their mothers and fathers were apparently nowhere to be found.

However, by hunt's end at sunrise, only a total of 17 alligators were caught during the first night of the 30-day gator hunt in the two designated hunting areas in Seminole County, according to Florida Game & Fresh Water Fish Commission FGC officials.

Jimmy Douglas of Wildwood, captured and killed the biggest gator of the first night, an 11 footer in the Puzzle Lake area late Thursday night.

In Lake Harry, north of State Road 16, known to be home to hundreds of gators, only three were taken.

The Puzzle Lake area south of State Road 16 and the St. Johns River as far south as State Road 90 produced 14 alligators.

The hunters have been out scouting these areas for weeks now, said Lt. Vinard Hill of the FGC. "I think it'll work against them. It has made the gators skittish and more difficult to find."

City considers annexation request

County offers support in Roseland Park case

By WAYNE MIZE
Herald staff writer

SANFORD — Despite ongoing battles between Sanford and Seminole County, Sanford officials are making efforts to find a way to coordinate the two governments in working together in an effort to remedy the water contamination problems plaguing many residents of the Roseland Park neighborhood.

The city may soon approve the annexation of the neighborhood and provide water service, and the county may provide Comprehensive Development Block Grant (CDFG) funds to pay for the water collection and required impact fees.

That's the good news. The bad news is the annexation process and the amount of impact fees.

Roseland Park is a 100-acre residential development located in the city of Sanford. The area is currently served by the city's water system.

The city and county have been working together to address the water quality issues in the area. The city is currently conducting a study to determine the best way to provide water service to the area.

The county is offering to provide water service to the area, but the city is concerned about the cost of the impact fees. The city is currently negotiating with the county to find a way to reduce the impact fees.

Convicted killer wins new trial

WEST PALM BEACH — A man who was convicted of first-degree murder in the death of his girlfriend's husband has been awarded a new trial, five appeals and more than 20 years after the shooting in a hotel bar, officials said Thursday. The Fourth District Court of Appeals in West Palm Beach ordered a new trial for Louis Matire, who was convicted in 1968 in the May 1967 shooting. The court ruled Wednesday that comments by witnesses and the prosecutor about Matire declining to give a statement about the shooting were improper and that Matire deserved a new trial.

Rescue school head found not guilty

PENSACOLA — The former head of the Navy Rescue Swimmer School was found innocent Thursday of dereliction of duty in the panic-induced death of a 19-year-old recruit whose head was held under water by instructors. "The military system worked," said Lt. Thomas Torchia, 32, of Princeton, Ill., who was removed as head of the school at the Pensacola Naval Air Station after the March 2 death of Airman Recruit Lee Mirecki. "The same system that charged me found me not guilty. I feel great," Torchia said. "Both these guys (defense attorneys) did just an outstanding job. They busted their butts for me." Torchia, who declined non-judicial punishment, opting instead for a jury trial, said he was glad he made that decision. If convicted of dereliction of duty at the court-martial, he could have lost his seniority and two-thirds of his base pay for three months and received a letter of reprimand.

Judge rejects Gilbert's plea for new trial

FORT LAUDERDALE — Proclaimed mercy killer Roswell Gilbert, who argued that his former lawyer was more interested in media rights to his life story than in his trial, was denied a new trial Thursday. Gilbert claimed his former lawyer Joseph Varon, now retired, had a conflict of interest when he agreed with Gilbert to receive 90 percent of profits from book, movie or TV rights to Gilbert's story in lieu of a fee. Circuit Court Judge Thomas Coker disagreed. "I felt that the defendant has not proven that Mr. Varon was ineffective," Coker said. "I felt that he was not ineffective counsel as defined by the law." Gilbert has 30 days to appeal. The octogenarian was convicted and sentenced to life in prison for the March 4, 1985, shooting death of his wife, Emily, in their 10th-floor oceanfront condominium in Fort Lauderdale.

Open door closes flight

ORLANDO — An open cargo door which caused debris to be sucked into an engine forced the emergency return to Orlando International Airport Thursday of an Eastern Airlines 727 bound for Philadelphia. There were no injuries to any of the 100 passengers and seven crew aboard Eastern Flight 832, airline spokeswoman Karen Ceremask said. "About seven minutes out the captain felt a vibration and it was discovered there was a (cargo) bin door open," Ceremask said from Eastern headquarters in Miami. "The flight turned back and landed normally in Orlando." She said insulation from the open door area entered an engine, and mechanics were examining the Boeing aircraft for any damage. The door was believed to have come open after takeoff. No luggage was lost from the cargo bay, she said, and passengers were put on other flights. The plane departed Orlando at 1:15 p.m. EDT and landed again at 1:51, Ceremask said.

Cocky convict captured

TAVERNER — A cocky escaped Louisiana convict who teased police with postcards saying he was "having a swell time" on the lam was captured in the Florida Keys. "He obviously misses Louisiana or he wouldn't be sending us postcards," Louisiana State Police Lt. Ronnie Jones said Thursday. "As far as we're concerned, they can return Mr. Arable to Angola (the maximum-security state prison), lock him up, and throw away the key." Shelbie Arable, convicted on manslaughter charges, escaped from the Louisiana State Police in Baton Rouge in May and began sending postcards to police and prosecutors there, Jones said. He was being held Thursday without bond after his capture in the Florida Keys, the Monroe County Sheriff's Office said.

Lottery ticket sales 'a social event'

Area man wins $10,000

TAMPA — A shocked and nervous Palm Beach County man blew to exhale the breath he had been holding and said his decision to buy tickets in Florida's instant lottery game was a good investment — moments after winning $1 million on Thursday. William N. Dulin, 44, of Greenacres City, turned and hugged his wife Marilyn as she rushed up after he won out over six other finalists in the state's fifth million-dollar drawing in its instant lottery game since it began Jan. 12. "It's a chance of a lifetime, a dream come true," Dulin said. "I'm very shocked, very shocked. It's just ecstatic. It's all fantasy. I'm very nervous." Dulin won the top money when he and runner-up K.M. "Kathy" Zerresen jointly pushed down the keys of a mock piano keyboard and the $1 million sign showed up behind the musical note assigned to him. Zerresen, 49, an employee at the NCO Club at Hulbert Air Force Base at Fort Walton Beach, won $50,000. "My first thought was that my kids were going to get what they want in life," Dulin said. "Our whole life has been based for them. We just hope that with this we can always make sure, ensure their stability and their future." Dulin, a sales representative for Nabisco Brand products, and his wife Marilyn, a seamstress with an upholstery firm, have three children — Greg, 16, Clint, 13, and Luke, 7. "I'm going to continue to work. I plan not to retire now, but down the road after the investments are made, when the income starts coming, who knows," Dulin said. "I had a little health problem awhile back. I had a heart attack a couple of years ago. It's (heart) beating rather rapidly now, and good." Dulin, who moved to Florida in 1957 from Charleston, W.Va., said he and his wife spend about $5 a week on Florida's instant lottery games. "But no more than $5 a week. It's been a great investment," he said with a smile. "We would have been happy with $10,000 (the lowest final prize). We will still play it. It's a fun game." "It doesn't make any difference," Zerresen said of missing the top prize, and said she plans to "blow" her winnings. "I knew I had won at least $10,000, and I got a free trip here and a chance to visit my daughter (who came down from Atlanta,)" she said. "I told my husband if I got a million dollars we'd invest it, and if I got less that that I'd just blow it." Zerresen said she spends about $80 a week playing all three of Florida's lottery games. Amelia LaViers, 44, of Panama City, won $25,000; Robert Bobert, 53, of Pinetta in Madison County, and Charlie Williams, 52, of Hastings, each won $15,000; and Clarence Preston, 59, of Leesburg, and Charles Thorpe, 40, of Casselberry, each won $10,000.

TALLAHASSEE — The record $52 million Florida Lotto jackpot has set off a ticket-buying frenzy in the state that includes a healthy number of out-of-state customers, one Lotto retailer says. "I would estimate that 80-85 percent of our customers are from Georgia," Donny Trednick, a district manager for the Jax Liquor store chain said Thursday of a Jax store near the Georgia-Florida border lottery officials say consistently is the state's top Lotto retailer. Trednick would not reveal the amount of $1 Lotto tickets the store sells each week, but did say he has added three full-time employees to the store's payroll since the Lotto game began the first week of May. He said the store's busiest day usually is Saturday, with cars belonging to Lotto customers lined up "three-deep" in the parking lot. "This week could be a little unusual because of the big prize," Trednick said, adding he expects long lines at the store's lone Lotto computer until sales end Saturday night. The jackpot, raised to $52 million Wednesday by Lottery Secretary Rebecca Paul, eclipsed the previous North American record for Lotto jackpots set in June when California paid a $51.4 million prize. Paul said she raised the jackpot from $50 million because ticket sales Wednesday were running about 36 percent ahead of last week, when the jackpot was $32 million — a record for Florida. No one picked the correct six numbers needed to win the prize and the $32 million became a $50 million jackpot Sunday.

surprised her. "That's just a phenomenal figure," Paul said, adding she had no reservations about the computer that handles the game being able to deal with the volume. "The system can handle it. I just don't believe we can do $20 million in a day — although California did $35 million in a day," Paul said. The top Lotto sales day of all time was last Saturday, when $10.4 million in tickets were sold.

Trednick said he knew of "about 15 people" who regularly drove to the store near the Georgia border each week from Atlanta — a 12-hour round trip. He said the long-distance Lotto players often buy tickets for friends and sales of several hundred dollars' worth of tickets to one out-of-state customer are not unusual. Trednick said he has not noticed a big problem in "bootleg" tickets — those bought and sold out-of-state for a higher price — but there have been instances where one person will come in and "buy $500 in tickets with the same number. That's probably a bootleg sale." Most of the non-resident customers are from small towns in south Georgia who enjoy talking to one another in the parking lot while tickets are being purchased, Trednick said. "It's like a social event," he said. "These are people from small communities. They may know each other because their kids play ball against each other, but this is the only chance they get to visit." "In a small town that doesn't have a picture show or hardly any cable television, there's nothing else to do," he said. "It's like a drive-in (movie). They just all get together in the parking lot and have a good time."

High court reverses murder conviction

The facts of the case could not support a conviction for first-degree felony murder, but allowed them to consider whether she was guilty of first-degree premeditated murder, which carries the death penalty, or second-degree felony murder. She was convicted on that charge, but the original trial judge reversed himself and threw out the conviction, saying the circumstances needed for a second-degree murder conviction were not applicable. Thursday's ruling by the high court upheld the trial judge's second opinion. Brad Permar, the Clearwater assistant public defender who represented Dene, said the ruling clears up considerable lingering confusion over what the law means. He said he considers the verdict on the second-degree felony murder charge a "jury pardon." "Because of this opinion, she is free," Permar said. In other rulings Thursday, the court upheld Wilbur Aaron Lamb's conviction for murder, but struck down the death sentence he received and ordered a resentencing. Lamb was sentenced to death for the January 1986 murder of Karl Ebernez after burglarizing Ebernez's home. Lamb, 17 at the time, fatally beat Ebernez with a claw hammer because he was disappointed at the small take from the burglary. The justices refused to overturn Lamb's conviction, but unanimously ruled that the trial court may not have given proper consideration to some mitigating factors — including Lamb's age and drug and emotional problems — when sentencing him to death. The court upheld the conviction and death sentence given Paul C. Hildwin. Hildwin was sentenced for the rape-murder of Vronzette Cox in Hernando County. The justices unanimously rejected Hildwin's claims that the trial judge had made numerous procedural errors in his trial. The court refused to rehear arguments from condemned killer Etheria Verdell Jackson, who was sentenced to death for the December 1985 murder of Jacksonville businessman Linton Moody.

Turmoil over but challenges remain

The past nine months have been difficult at the county's animal control department. Employees have been under special stress during the period, and many have resigned due to the conditions that existed. Bob McIntosh has wisely resigned his post as Animal Control Director amid charges of mismanagement and inefficiency.

County Administrator Ken Hooper stepped into the management vacuum earlier this summer and established lines of communications with employees. It takes a special dedication on the part of these employees to sacrifice so much on behalf of abandoned and abused pets in our county. Their commitment means much to the citizens of this county but the rewards to them are mostly the intangibles of gratitude and an occasional note expressing thanks. Generally, people are unaware of the work done at such county departments as animal control until something goes wrong.

Now Mr. Hooper is ready for phase two. Whereas he is well-advised to increase the salary designated for the director, and seek the best possible person for the post, there remain matters of immediate concern within the department. Administrative matters have been neglected, especially the billings and rebates, and accumulated past due obligations. Relying on the two department supervisors for the day-to-day functions of the department pending employment of a new director is probably the best present course but obviously assistance is also needed in the accounting areas. It is very likely that other pressing matters will need to be handled expeditiously. In other words, Mr. Hooper's work in the animal control area is far from over.

The departure of Mr. McIntosh marks the third consecutive time a director has left the animal control post under a cloud. These experiences should serve as a warning that care must be exercised in the next selection.

Mr. Hooper deserves praise for the forthright manner in which he has handled this very disagreeable situation. It is hoped that he soon will be able to assure citizens of Seminole County that all is well at the animal control shelter.

Yonkers, New York and judicial tyranny

The daily political and judicial events in the case of the city of Yonkers, New York are happening so quickly that no column can be fully abreast of them, but the important outlines of the case are clear enough.

Most readers of this column across the country are probably, and at best, only dimly aware of the city of Yonkers, though it is the fourth largest city in New York State.

It lies north of the much larger New York City, in Westchester County, and had long, since its early development by merchants and businessmen of largely Dutch descent, constituted a kind of enclave isolated from both New York City and the rest of Westchester County by geography consisting of a valley and a precipitous bluff.

During the 1930s, however, the great highways were begun, connecting Yonkers much more easily with the city and with surrounding neighborhoods. By the 1950s, the older industries of Yonkers were falling or moving elsewhere. And during the 1960s, blacks and Hispanics in large numbers moved into Yonkers, many of them subsisting on welfare. This history and demography lie at the source of the current crisis.

In 1986, a federal judge, Leonard Sand, ordered that Yonkers be racially integrated. Heretofore, the city had been building public housing in its minority neighborhoods, where such housing was manifestly and urgently needed. That was not good enough for the judge.

Yonkers, he decreed, must build 200 units of low-income housing on seven sites scattered throughout the city, plus 800 units of subsidized housing for families in the $13,000 to $32,000 range. Even the judge could not have believed in such a plan.

Yonkers rebelled. Its city council voted 4-3 to reject the judge's plan. The judge then imposed ruinous fines on the individual council members and on the city itself.

Not at all surprisingly, Gov. Mario Cuomo has been treating the case like a rolling hand-grenade, despite liberal editorial blasts to the effect that he should "enforce the Constitution," and integrate the neighborhoods of Yonkers. The governor knows how many voters reside in the state's fourth largest city, and he is trying, so far feebly, to reach a compromise by scaling back the court-ordered housing.

The judge then imposed ruinous fines on the individual council members.

In 1954, the Supreme Court declared segregation illegal in the public schools. In 1964, Congress ruled segregation illegal in public facilities. By and large, the nation has accepted these "color blind" decisions. In 1988, Judge Sand, who lives in all-white and wealthy Chappaqua, is trying to integrate the neighborhoods of Yonkers by judicial fiat. The issue is not skin color, but probably behavior. The fate of public housing projects across the country is no secret to the white and mostly ethnic homeowners of Yonkers.

The trouble here is that we have averted our gaze from the founding idea of representative government, the framers' deliberate sense of the people as expressed through elected representatives, in favor of a judicial tyranny enforced by dictators in black robes. George III and Lord North were wrong. Judge Sand was wrong. Bork was right.

Is custodial state next?

Beginning with the days of Lyndon Johnson's Great Society, one of the deepest divisions of opinion between liberals and conservatives has involved the efficacy and therefore the wisdom of that whole mass of legislation that created what has come to be known as the Welfare State.

To liberals the problem was obvious, and the solution was as obvious as the problem. Owing to economic deprivation (they argued), certain groups of people in this country failed to get a decent education, failed even to receive adequate nourishment, and as a result lacked both the motivation and the know-how to compete for jobs on an equal footing with other Americans. Their children, growing up in the same underprivileged circumstances, simply repeated their parents' failure. It was a vicious circle.

The solution, liberals insisted, was to break the circle: to make sure that the children of the poor received adequate nourishment and decent educations, and (no small point) to make very certain, if they were black or Hispanic or members of some other group that had historically suffered from discrimination, that no obstacles based on race, color, sex, or gender were allowed to stand in their way.

Conservative doubts were dismissed as thin excuses for opposition based on mere bigotry. Hundreds of billions of dollars were poured into all sorts of programs aimed at feeding, educating, training, motivating, and just plain supporting the beneficiaries of the Welfare State.

But, as Jack Kemp has pointed out, if you subsidize something you get more of it. Soon critics had noted the growth of a large "underclass" of people whose whole lives, over a period of two or more generations, were organized around the receipt of food stamps, welfare checks, and similar subsidies. A few years ago, in a devastating book called "Losing Ground," social analyst Charles Murray demonstrated how many liberals were already beginning uneasily to suspect that the Welfare State as it existed, far from helping matters, was making them infinitely worse.

Since then, the more thoughtful liberals have gone back to their drawing boards, and a number of proposals for "welfare reform" (e.g. those that purport to require welfare recipients to work) are currently in various stages of consideration by Congress.

But now Charles Murray, in a highly perceptive article in the September issue of "Commentary," has identified a new policy tendency among liberals. By the mid-1990s, he predicts, "liberal intellectuals and policy-makers will have become comfortable believing something like this:

"(1) Inner-city blacks are really quite different from you and me, and the rules that apply to us cannot be applied to them; (2) it is futile to seek solutions that aim at bringing them into participation in American life; and (3) the humane course is therefore to provide generously, supplying medical care, food, housing, and other social services — much as we currently do for American Indians who live on reservations.

"And so we will have arrived in the brave new world of custodial democracy, in which a substantial portion of our population, neither convicted as criminal nor adjudged to be insane, will in effect be treated as wards of the state."

Murray rightly fears that such views might then become the baseline from which other, more extreme measures to segregate the underclass could be contemplated. The danger is certainly real, but it is not the only possible outcome of such a policy.

The basic difficulty with all of the variants of American welfareism that have been tried thus far has been that they have proceeded from the wrong assumptions, and therefore inevitably arrived at mistaken conclusions. The new liberal assumptions may prove as wrongheaded as the old ones, but if they force fresh consideration of the whole problem they will serve a useful purpose.

If you subsidize something you get more of it.

Collecting old IOUs

WASHINGTON — By collecting some aging IOUs, the U.S. government could shrink the budget deficit by half, without raising taxes or cutting spending. All it would have to do is reopen old war wounds, some dating as far back as World War I.

The United States is owed a gargantuan $91 billion in debts from foreign countries — ones that are unlikely to ever be fully recovered. That breaks down to $27.4 billion arising from World War I, $1.2 billion from World War II and $62.4 billion from the post-World War II period, according to an unreleased report prepared by the Congressional Research Service. Our associate Michael Binstein, has seen that report. The figures are current up to 1984, which is the most recent comprehensive accounting of the debt. It has undoubtedly grown since then.

Foreign governments borrowed $12.4 billion from the United States during World War I. Accrued interest on those loans is $17.8 billion for a total debt of $30.2 billion from that war. But some of the debtors have made payments amounting to $2.8 billion, leaving $27.4 billion still owed and most of it delinquent. The countries which have fully repaid their World War I debt are Cuba, Finland, Greece and Liberia.

The billion-dollar deadbeats from World War I include this country's best friends.

The nations owing us the most are Great Britain ($12.5 billion), France ($9.1 billion) and Italy ($2.7 billion). Germany's World War I reparations to the other allied nations of $2.2 billion is as politically charged as the war itself.

The National Advisory Council on International Monetary and Financial Policies summarizes the problem. Germany's repayment is tied to the problem of war reparations — the money Germany owes other countries for damage done during the war — and to other debts owed between European countries stemming from the war. The amount was dictated by the victorious nations in the Treaty of Versailles. Seventy years later, the issue of German war reparations remains unsettled, and many European countries say they won't make their payments on war debt to the United States until it is settled, since they had intended to use their reparations from Germany to pay back the United States. The United States never believed that there was a connection — they figured countries should pay their debts regardless — but that didn't convince the Europeans.

The Lend-Lease Act of 1941 gave the president the power to assist another country in its defense, if the defense seemed vital to U.S. security. That act is the source of most of the World War II debt. The borrowers have said the United States implied that the assistance was its contribution to the war and would not have to be repaid. The net value of lend-lease assistance amounted to more than $40 billion. Five countries owe about 97 percent of the $1.2 billion that remains unpaid. They are the Soviet Union ($678.8 million), Great Britain ($325.5 million), China ($116.1 million), Indonesia ($26.4 million) and Iran ($23.3 million).

A quick glance at that list shows that some of the countries are no longer bosom buddies with the United States and some are in no position to pay.

Since World War II, the bulk of foreign debt can be blamed on military assistance, non-military foreign aid and trade financing.

NATIONAL BRIEFS

Seattle paralyzed by power outage

SEATTLE — About a third of downtown Seattle will remain without electricity until Saturday because of an underground fire as thousands of residents learned to cope with the absence of light, elevators and many other conveniences of modern life.

City Light Superintendent Randy Hardy said Thursday night power would not be restored until sometime Saturday, and the utility said that contrary to earlier expectations, power would not be restored in phases but all at once.

The outage affected 55-square blocks between the Space Needle and the main downtown business district, an area comprised of department stores, high-rise tourist hotels, residential complexes and countless small shops.

Court affirms 365-year sentence for spy

SAN FRANCISCO — Convicted spy Jerry Whitworth, who passed military secrets to the Russians for a decade, will not be eligible for parole for 80 years unless the Supreme Court overturns an appeals court ruling that upheld his 365-year prison sentence.

Whitworth's defense attorney said the high court would have to decide between conflicting court opinions on parole after the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed Whitworth's sentence Thursday.

Whitworth, 49, was a member of the Walker family espionage ring that stole cryptographic secrets from the Navy and sold them to the Soviet Union, described by the government as the most serious breach of U.S. military security since World War II.

Flames or vapors seen from Delta engine

GRAPEVINE, Texas — Besides possible engine trouble, federal investigators are examining whether the crew of Delta Air Lines Flight 1141 did not properly extend the wing flaps for takeoff before the jetliner crashed, killing 13 of the 108 people aboard.

Ninety-five people survived Wednesday's fiery crash at Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport, and Delta officials said one reason so many escaped may be that a dozen off-duty Delta employees helped keep order as passengers crawled through emergency exits and holes in the plane's damaged fuselage.

"From pilots (who witnessed the crash) interviewed this morning, there appeared to be a white flame or vapor from the No. 1 engine. That would be the left engine," said Dickinson, who did not speculate on the significance of the sighting.

Court ruling may hasten desegregation

YONKERS, N.Y. — Mayor Nicholas Wascisko, calling efforts to block a desegregation plan "an unproductive fight," says he hopes a Supreme Court ruling will end a costly controversy over public housing.

The nation's highest court Thursday refused to extend the city's reprieve from crippling fines but allowed four City Council members to avoid imprisonment while they appeal a contempt order for not agreeing to the desegregation plan.

From United Press International reports

Ice wrecks Arctic havoc

United Press International

An Alaskan cruise ship limped back to port after being hit by an iceberg that cracked its hull and flooded the vessel, and the Coast Guard was headed for another cruise boat trapped by an arctic icepack with 158 people aboard.

A Coast Guard icebreaker was dispatched to rescue the 236-foot Society Explorer after the ship was trapped by thick ice in the Beaufort Sea about 50 miles northeast of Point Barrow, the northernmost tip of land in the United States, officials said Thursday.

"The ship is facing a very heavy ice barrier," said Peter Cox, director of operations for Society Expeditions of Seattle, which specializes in adventure cruises but was surprised by arctic ice conditions.

"Conditions looked good this year, but Mother Nature always has its surprises," Cox said.

The 399-foot Coast Guard icebreaker Polar Star, was expected to reach the trapped ship Saturday night and break a path through the ice that has held the Society Explorer hostage since Wednesday, said Coast Guard spokesman Greg Robinson in Juneau.

The Society Explorer carried 98 passengers and an international crew of 60, and has sufficient food on board for a month, Robinson said. There were no reports of injuries.

The Society Explorer left Dutch Harbor in Alaska's Aleutian Island chain on Aug. 19 and sailed west across the Bering Sea to the Soviet port of Provideniya, becoming the first commercial passenger ship in decades to enter that Soviet port, which has opened several times recently to planes and ships from Alaska.

It then headed around the top of Alaska to sail the Northwest Passage from west to east. The voyage was scheduled to end Sept. 21 in St. John's, Newfoundland, on the Atlantic side of the Northwest Passage.

The Bahamian-registered Society Explorer is built to withstand ice-clogged waters, Cox said, "but, of course, we don't hope to get stuck in the ice."

Another ship, the Glacier Express, was on a dinner cruise out of Juneau Wednesday night when it was hit by an iceberg that cracked its hull and sent frigid water rushing into the vessel.

The sightseeing boat limped to port Thursday with a Coast Guard escort and none of the 144 aboard was injured, officials said.

The Glacier Express, a 104-foot, twin-hulled catamaran, left Juneau at 3:30 p.m. Wednesday for a seven-hour cruise to the Twin Sawyer Glaciers about 40 miles southeast of Juneau, when it "hit a tidal rip and the iceberg unexpectedly came around and went in between the two hulls," said Pete Donau, vice president of Catamaran Cruiselines in Seattle.

A tidal rip is an especially rough area of water, made choppy by opposing currents, winds or an uneven sea floor.

The vessel was hit about 9 p.m. near the glacier and was forced to take refuge in a cove while the crack was patched, Donau said.

None of the 135 passengers or nine crewmen was injured, according to the Coast Guard, which sent the cutter Cape Carter to the scene with pumps to help with the flooding.

Robinson said the cutter escorted the Glacier Express back to Juneau, where it arrived at 5 a.m. Thursday — 6 1/2 hours late. The weary passengers were in generally good spirits, Donau said.

"It was certainly not a monstrous, monstrous iceberg," Donau said, noting that icebergs are typically about 9 feet long in that area, but he said he did not know the size of the culprit iceberg.

Bakker headed back to PTL

United Press International

FORT MILL, S.C. — PTL's bankruptcy trustee is backing Jim Bakker's $165 million purchase offer, and Bakker says it's only a matter of time before the ministry he founded and lost in a sex scandal is his again.

Bakker sat down with PTL officials Thursday to put the final touches on the deal, and bankruptcy trustee M.C. "Red" Benton said the fallen evangelist deserves a second chance.

Benton said Bakker's proposal for buying PTL beats the $113 million bid from Canadian real estate developer Peter Thomas.

"I think if he is properly motivated now and has learned from past mistakes, perhaps he deserves as much as anyone else to be restored," Benton said. "I don't have any hesitation in recommending his offer be accepted and supported and he be given a second chance."

Bakker, who has been working since June on his plan to buy back the ministry he lost 1 1/2 years ago, said he is overwhelmed with emotion.

"When I walk back on the grounds and think how close we are to being back, well, it's like a huge wave just washing over you," he said. "It's so fantastic."

"You want to get in and start restoring everything — the buildings, the people, the partnerships, I wanted to tell a groundskeeper to straighten up the chairs in the hotel, but then I realized I can't do that yet."

After the daily PTL television program Thursday, the ministry's current leader also preached forgiveness — even though he admitted he will have to leave when Bakker returns.

Behind the scenes at the TV networks

As I walked up the steps at the NBC building in New York, I couldn't help but feel like the luckiest man on earth. I still couldn't believe that I was the lucky one, the only person who correctly answered all the questions in the "SLANDER" quiz. And now that I've won the prize, I'm actually going to sit in on a network summit and listen as the "Big Three" discuss covering the presidential election campaign. When I walked into the room, the evening had already started. Sure it was 30 minutes early but I understood. Newsweek of this intensity don't like to just sit around, you know.

Brokaw had apparently gotten the ball rolling. "The theme is to bury Dan Quayle and discredit George Bush, we all agree that's the whole idea of this election year," Brokaw said. "I couldn't help but notice that wise and ancient commentary speaker, John Charlton, in the back of the room with a smile on his face, looking like the cat who just ate the canary as he listened to the conversation while using newspapers to receive about fresh from his elbows. "I don't know if we can do that now."

Pineapples aren't too tropical for Florida

By LESTER RETHWILL
Seminole County Master Gardener

Pineapples, that delicacy of the sub-tropics, can be grown this far north in Florida if one is willing to pay the price of winter protection. Pineapples are found in nearly every country between the Tropic of Cancer and the Tropic of Capricorn. They vary in size from very small to quite large and in flavor from sweet to quite acidic. Some have barbed leaves, some have smooth leaves. The barbs can be a half inch long.

While visiting Hawaii, I saw about 75 varieties growing in a demonstration plot side by side. Some were used only for breeding, as the fruits were too small for any other use.

I started growing pineapples when I moved to Sanford about 18 years ago. My original plants came from relatives who had purchased them from a roadside fruit stand near Ft. Myers.

I have three distinct varieties. The type that is large and light green has proved to be the best in my collection. Another that has small barbs seems to have come through the freezes in much better shape. After viewing what Hawaii had to offer, I thought I would try its predominant variety. That type has smooth leaves, a very thick stem and does not require staking to prevent damage to the fruit.

Cultivating the fruit is a lot of fun but sometimes challenging. To start producing homegrown pineapples, you can plant a small one or use the top of one you purchased for eating. Pineapples require full sun for best results. They may not fruit well if in too shady of a spot. However, they make beautiful plants in the shade even if they do not fruit.

You also can plant the sprouts that appear around the base of the plants or on the stem. When setting a started plant, be sure to get all the roots you can. Dig the hole large enough to hold them and plant at the same depth as previously grown. When using the tops, plant about 3 inches deep, firm the soil and water generously. Slips that come from the base of the fruit should be no more than 4 or 5 inches long. Set them out as you would the top. Lower suckers, if left on the stem, will layer and root. Then you'll have a new plant!

Pineapples, being a member of the bromeliad family, do not require a lot of water, but do respond well to fertilizer, such as 6-6-6 or similar material.

It takes about 18 months for the first fruit if a stool comes out of the lower stem. The next one will be there before a year has passed. I don't break stem slips off because they will nearly always root themselves, even if three or four come out. Under good conditions, they multiply rapidly.

Pineapples do not endure cold very well. The fruit can be damaged without freezing. Temperatures at 35°F for five to six hours will ruin them. To keep the plants going during cold weather, a lot of covering and uncovering is required. For more information on growing pineapples, call the Agricultural Center at 323-2500, ext. 181, and ask for Fruit Crops Fact Sheet #7.

All pineapples need are water and winter warmth.

VFW girls win high honor at convention

CHICAGO — The Junior Girls Unit of the Ladies Auxiliary of VFW Post 5405 in Winter Springs received a top award at the National Convention of the VFW and Ladies Auxiliary in Chicago in August.

The girls, aged from 6-16, received the honor of being No. 1 in their Americanism programs in the 1987-88 year.

The girls visited nursing homes to play bingo, participated in Memorial Day ceremonies in Casselberry, passed out flags, and participated in a seminar on drugs, among other activities.

Even on her vacation to Williamsburg, Va., and Washington, D.C., last year's girls unit president, Jennifer Auer, took time out to lay flowers and place flags at the Vietnam Veterans Memorial, the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier, and visit other national monuments.

At the state convention of the VFW in June, the girls unit's past president, Shannon Willett, received the Good Kid Award for Junior Girls in Florida.

Dust flying in couple's vac flak

DEAR ABBY: I retired about a year ago. Since that time, I have had the opportunity to observe how my wife goes about her housewifely duties—much to her annoyance.

We now have an ongoing disagreement about whether she should dust or vacuum first. I have brought up that question among our friends, and you cannot believe the arguments it generates.

I say she should vacuum first because vacuuming raises the dust, which can be disposed of by dusting. My wife took the other side: Dust first—then vacuum.

Not to be sexist, most men opted for vacuuming first.

I would like to hear from you, Abby. And perhaps your readers would let you know in what order these chores should be done.

Please don't say, "If you kept yourself busy, you would not care" about the order one dusts and vacuums."

ADVICE

ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR MR. PETERSON:

Shucks, you stole my answer. But now that you've shown a sincere interest in improving the efficiency of the domestic routine, why don't you take over the vacuuming and dusting yourself? Then you can do it your way, and you'll have nothing to argue about.

But to answer your question, the last time I cleaned house, I vacuumed last (what a memory!) Readers?

DEAR ABBY: I am 28 and recently married a 42-year-old divorced man with two children, ages 18 and 20. My husband told me that he and his ex-wife have had a very good relationship since their divorce. Knowing this, I have tried not to let any feelings of jealousy or insecurity cause problems in our marriage. He told me that he had asked his ex-wife to call him for emergencies only. Well, I think she calls here entirely too much. She calls not only to talk about the children, but mainly because she feels they should have the same closeness as before.

Abby, how do we keep a lot of problems and confusion down, and at the same time keep his ex-wife out of our lives? I feel that his "ex" wants him to continue to treat her as his wife, which is far from reality. Please give me some advice on how to make peace and still solve this.

THE NEW WIFE

DEAR NEW WIFE: Does your husband think that his ex calls too much and wants to continue to be treated as his "wife"—or is that your conclusion?

You need to discuss this with him and come to an understanding. If he is displeased with his ex's behavior, too, then he, not you, should be the one to let her know. Meanwhile, try to cultivate an attitude of compassion rather than competition, since you're the one who won the "prize."

(Problem: Write to Dear Abby. For a personal, unpublished reply, send a self-addressed, stamped envelope to Dear Abby, P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, Calif. 90069. All correspondence is confidential.)

Infections are likely totally coincidental

DEAR DR. GOTT: About six months ago, my husband had an infected tooth. Within a couple of days, I had a sore throat. Last week he had another infected tooth and I have another sore throat. Is this just coincidence?

DEAR READER: Possibly. Infected teeth do not usually drain; therefore, you are unlikely to have caught a throat infection from your husband's dental problem. Nor is the reverse a common occurrence. However, his infected tooth and your sore throat could, in theory, have been caused by exposure to a common infection; for example, you both might have been simultaneously the victims of infection from a third source, such as a person with a strep throat. I'm reaching. The two events are probably coincidental.

DEAR DR. GOTT: My mother, 73, has had kidney problems. I have stones frequently and a shadow shows up on X-rays. My grandmother died of Bright's disease. Is there a connection?

DEAR READER: Kidney stones tend to run in families. This is presumably due to certain inherited biochemical abnormalities that predispose to stone formation. Kidney stones are not ordinarily related to Bright's disease, an archaic term denoting severe kidney infection. The tendency to kidney stones can often be ameliorated by diet, depending on the type of stones. Diets to eliminate certain substances — such as uric acid and oxalates — may be beneficial. Elimination diets should be undertaken with medical supervision.

DEAR DR. GOTT: I've suffered with unbearable pain in my tailbone for 10 to 12 years. Then one night, my husband rolled over in his sleep, and in drawing his knee up, hit my tailbone squarely. After 10 seconds of agony, there was no more pain. My question is, why couldn't my doctor have figured out the problem and fixed it?

DEAR READER: Beats me. I don't know the cause of your tailbone pain. However, coccygodynia (severe chronic pain in the coccyx) may have no apparent cause and can disappear spontaneously — even after many years. In some respects you are fortunate: many wives are given a pain in the tailbone

WIN AT BRIDGE

No place for histrionics

By James Jacoby

In standard bidding methods, responding one no-trump to one heart denies holding four spades. If you were to ask me why North reversed into two spades instead of simply raising the one no-trump response to three, my answer would be that some players with four small spades might respond one no-trump instead of one spade.

Against three no-trump, the defense started by taking four club tricks. Declarer discarded two hearts from dummy and West now played a heart. Declarer won the ace in dummy and played off four rounds of spades. East, who had discarded a top diamond on the fourth club played by West, now had two discards to make. He could of course throw one diamond, but on his next play he was in trouble. In fact, he realized that he needed to save his diamonds, so he unguarded his queen of hearts. The focus now switches to South. If he can sense East's discomfort at the table, he then may well go up with the king of hearts and drop the queen. If not, he will perhaps take a heart finesse and go down.

Proper ethics places no obligation upon East to give away his problem by huddling in agony before discarding a heart. But ethics does dictate that East should not hesitate before letting a heart go if his original heart holding was three small.

James Jacoby's books "Jacoby on Bridge" and "Jacoby on Card Games" (written with his father, the late Oswald Jacoby) are now available at bookstores.

Foes taunt de la Madrid, call him fraud

United Press International

MEXICO CITY — The leftist opposition taunted President Miguel de la Madrid during his final state of the union address with chants of "Fraud! Fraud!" and walked out in a rare show of disrespect to the presidency.

The raucous heckling, which came Thursday as de la Madrid delivered his speech before a heavily guarded session of Congress, was unprecedented in modern Mexico, where the president has long been a symbol of national unity and off bounds to harsh criticism.

But disputed presidential elections in July have led the normally stoic Mexican public to fervently demand change from the government dominated by the Institutional Revolutionary Party, or PRI.

At a downtown rally of the conservative National Action Party, the party's presidential candidate in the July elections said Mexicans are tired of the nation's virtual one-party system and yearn for an end to authoritarian rule.

"The people booed most when de la Madrid referred to the 'clean elections' because clearly this was untrue," said Manuel Clouthier.

"It is very significant that Congress was interrupted because this is the first time that this has happened in over 50 years. Also it is important that the Congress is plural because this shows that the president will have to introduce reforms."

When de la Madrid tried to speak of how the July 6 elections had taken place fairly and cleanly during the annual address, members of the leftist National Democratic Front, or FDN, jumped to their feet and shouted "Fraud! Fraud!" over the objections of the president of the Congress.

At the same time, PRI lawmakers rose and chanted, clapping their hands. "De la Madrid — Mexico! De la Madrid — Mexico!" in an attempt to drown out the opposition.

"Respect the dignity of the Congress... and of your own personal dignity," said Miguel Montes Garcia, PRI president of the Congress.

As a result of the controversial July 6 presidential and congressional elections, opposition parties of the left and the right won about 240 seats in the 500-member lower house, the Chamber of Deputies — by far their highest percentage ever.

The opposition has continued to insist that the government resorted to fraud to ensure the victory of de la Madrid's handpicked successor, Carlos Salinas de Gortari. Both are members of the PRI, which has governed Mexico since 1929.

Congress spent the past two weeks in contentious debate over opposition charges of fraud in congressional elections — debates that often degenerated into near fist-fights or opposition members storming the podium.

Alvarez knew why dinosaurs left

United Press International

BERKELEY, Calif. — Nobel Prize-winning physicist Luis Alvarez, a pioneer in the development of radar and the atomic bomb and father of the theory that objects from outer space were responsible for the disappearance of dinosaurs, has died at the age of 77.

Alvarez died Wednesday night from complications following several operations to treat cancer of the esophagus, officials at Lawrence Berkeley Laboratory said Thursday.

Alvarez won the Nobel Prize in 1968 for his work on the fundamental particles of the universe, but he became famous for the theory he advanced with his son, Walter, to explain why dinosaurs became extinct and half of the world's plant and animal life disappeared about 65 million years ago.

The theory was based on the discovery of abnormally large amounts of iridium in geological deposits of the time. The element is rare on Earth but abundant in space, leading the Alvarizes to postulate that asteroids or comets introduced iridium and their impact created a long-lasting cloud cover that lowered temperatures and interfered with photosynthesis.

Alvarez had been at the Lawrence Berkeley Laboratory on the University of California campus for 35 years. His Nobel Prize came for his "decisive contributions to elementary particle physics."

Alvarez's wife, Jan, said he had been in declining health since brain surgery last fall. During his recovery he was diagnosed as having cancer of the esophagus.

He was honored for discovering scores of sub-atomic particles and for building the first large hydrogen bubble chambers used in the study of such particles.

Alvarez was born in San Francisco in 1911, the son of Mayo Clinic physician Walter C. Alvarez, and received his doctoral degree from the University of Chicago.

In 1936, he joined the faculty at Berkeley, and had headed a team at the Lawrence lab since 1953. He described his research

"A creative and energetic scientist, he not only brought recognition and honor to the university by receiving a Nobel Prize, but he also personally embodied the best of those qualities that define his chosen profession. He will be missed."

— University of California President David Gardner

as "an attempt to understand the universe we all live in."

When he began his career, science believed there were only three fundamental particles — protons, neutrons and electrons. With others, Alvarez showed that those so-called fundamental particles could actually be broken down into much smaller ones, with such names as quarks and leptons.

During World War II, Alvarez developed three important radar systems, including the Ground Control Approach method of landing planes in zero visibility.

He joined the team at Los Alamos, N.M., that built the atomic bomb and was an observer in the B-29s that dropped them on Hiroshima and Nagasaki. He said the bombs "made the war shorter and saved a lot of lives."

Alvarez credited wartime developments with bringing prominence to physics, a field previously ignored or unknown by most people.

Before the war, he said, "If I went to a party, I always said I was a chemist because nobody knew what a physicist was."

An avid flier, Alvarez developed numerous systems and gadgets to help his fellow pilots, among them the concept for an optical scanner to prevent midair collisions by light planes.

He likened the hydrogen bubble chambers that won him the Nobel Prize to "pressure cookers" holding liquid hydrogen. As the pressure varied, sub-atomic particles from the hydrogen atom's nucleus left tiny trails in the solution.

Alvarez's teams developed techniques to photograph and analyze the trails, discovering new "fundamental particles" and demonstrating the complexity of the atom's nucleus.

"Even in recent weeks, when it was apparent his general health was failing, Luis's wit was still sharp and he had vigorous conversations on physics and all the many other topics that interested him," said Morris Pripstein, a colleague who visited with Alvarez regularly during his illness.

"I was personally saddened, as was the entire University of California community, about the death of Professor Alvarez," UC President David Gardner said. "A creative and energetic scientist, he not only brought recognition and honor to the university by receiving a Nobel Prize, but he also personally embodied the best of those qualities that defined his chosen profession."

"He will be missed," Gardner said.

Lawrence lab Director David Shirley called Alvarez "a stunningly creative individual. Alert and active to the end, he will be sorely missed and long remembered by his colleagues and proteges."

Alvarez is survived by his wife, four children, two sisters and a brother. Funeral services were pending.

Talking with Amy Irving

By Frank Sanello
NEA Hollywood Reporter

In the delightful new comedy romance "Crossing Delancey," Amy Irving plays la belle "Izzy" Grossman, a New Yorker who has a happy life as an employee in an upscale West Side bookstore. She thinks her life is perfect, but her meddling grandmother, Bubbie, decides to fix her up with the local seller of pickles.

Izzy has literary pretensions and hopes to snag a prominent author who lives near the bookstore. Problems arise when Izzy finds herself strangely attracted to the "pickleman."

The role is a tour de force for Irving, the wife of Steven Spielberg and an Oscar nominee for "Yentl" (1983).

She was raised in the theater. Her mother is actress Priscilla Pointer, and her late father was director of the Repertory Theater of Lincoln Center.

Irving made her movie debut in the 1976 horror film "Carrie," and she has appeared in "The Fury" (1978), "Honey-suckle Rose" (1980) and "Micki & Maude" (1984). On TV, she had the title role in "Anastasia: The Mystery of Anna" and in "The Far Pavilions" on cable.

Most recently, she appeared in the off-Broadway production of "The Road to Mecca" by South African playwright Athol Fugard.

Here, Irving talks about being an actress, a mother and Mrs. Steven Spielberg.

Q. Why did you decide to do "Crossing Delancey"?

A. The script had this richness of character, good dialogue, and it was a realistic romance, not a glossed-over Hollywood romance. And it's accessible to everyday people. It's about a woman who made real mistakes. She had confused values. The plight of the single woman appealed to me. Plus, Joan Micklin Silver is famous in the acting world as an actor's director and a casting whiz. I knew she'd assemble a terrific cast.

Q. Speaking of terrific casting, where did they find the wonderful actress who plays your match-making grandmother?

A. Every famous person's mother read for the role of Bubbie.

Finding a new face at the age of 70 is not an easy task. The actress who eventually got the role (Reizl Bozyk) is a star of the Yiddish theater. She had never acted in English before.

Q. That's amazing, since she stole the show.

A. You're not supposed to say that to the star of the movie!

Q. Do you think Izzy was a snob?

A. Yeah. In the way a lot of us have been snobs. She decided a man who sells pickles wasn't good enough (for her) without getting to know him.

Q. Is Izzy in any way an autobiographical role for you?

A. Everything that happened to Izzy has happened to me.

Q. Can you be more specific?

A. No!

Q. Your husband must be the most commercially successful film director of all time. Why haven't you two made a film together?

A. We've talked about it (for) the far-off future. When we come home, we park our careers at the door, and we're just husband and wife and Max's mom. Our careers are already complicated enough.

Q. If you hadn't become an actress, what do you think you might have become?

A. I've been geared toward this (career) all my life. Since I was 2 years old, I said I'm going to drama school and be an actress. That and being a mom is my only career.

Natural energy of crystals may enhance your own life

Story and photos
By SUSAN LODEN
Herald staff writer

Much of modern technology from the crystal radio to quartz-powered watches, computers to lasers, is based on the natural energy of crystals that grow in stalactite and stalagmite formations in the earth.

Just as technological growth and the advancement of mankind has been spurred by the recognition of the natural electrical powers embodied in these geological formations, some say their personal growth has been enhanced by direct contact with crystals.

Within the last decade, beginning in California, there has been a rediscovery of the "power" of crystals known by the ancients to heal and give direction to the lives of those who say they draw energy and strength from physical contact with these beautiful stones.

Brenda Eilers, of Longwood, said her belief in the power of crystals is at no way at odds with her Christian beliefs.

"God created this for us. When you recover these crystals from the raw earth they are so beautiful. God meant us to use this," Crystals, she said, are in no way linked to religious beliefs, but the energy from a crystal can help the holder to focus inward to soul search and find the meaning of life to become closer to God and to love mankind. "You don't understand it until you feel it.

"Life has a plan. A plan of God's. We're not here just to live, eat and work. We've been given crystals again because we need them," Eilers said. "We are Christians. We are very close to God. If anything, crystals have heightened our awareness of God. Why don't we use this? Crystals were put here for use to use. I am not so narrow to think that there are not many patterns we have to explore. God has a plan for the planet. He is harmonizing the planet."

"He is pulling us together through this. We've forgotten to learn to live with and give love. That's why we're in this crisis," said Eilers' daughter, Kenda Meyer, of Apopka.

"Love is the thread that will go around the world and save mankind," Eilers said. And crystals are empowering some, she said, to channel love in that direction.

"It's healing the earth. Loving the earth," Meyer said of the power of crystals, which she said can also heal physical ailments. However, she cautioned that crystals should be used for healing only in conjunction with traditional medical treatments.

Lab tests, Eilers said, show that crystals vibrate with electrical energy that interact with the electricity present in the human body.

Those who feel the energy from crystals recognize it as a tingling sensation similar to that felt when you walk out of the ocean and feel the salt water drying on your skin, Meyer said.

Mankir J. Eilers said, "forgot" the power of crystals in the hands of individuals until the world was in crisis. The water, air and land has been polluted, but crystals remain pure, she said. Crystals, Eilers said, can give you the ability to look within yourself and know why you're here. "They open souls."

Even if you don't believe crystals have special powers, the power in the beauty of amethyst, citrine, clear crystal, gold, smokey gray or rose colored stones, or those that display from within a rainbow of colors, can't be denied.

But many do believe in the power of crystals to the degree that geologists in the Ouachita National Park in Arkansas report that crystal seekers are relentless in their pursuit of underground crystal deposits in the park.

The search for crystals there is so intense, a geologist said, that the amateur miners leave behind holes that look as if they were made by a backhoe, but in locations where a backhoe wouldn't reach.

Quartz crystals are hexagonal prisms that form naturally and "grow" into perfect, translucent points called terminations. Crystals are formed through a natural mix of gases, solids and liquids. The color of the stone is determined by the gases present in the natural mixture.

Other quartz stones form in egg-like shapes that are cracked open to reveal colorful, faceted interiors.

Crystals emit measurable electrical energy and also store energy, which some say can benefit mankind in addition to powering our watches, computers, radios and lasers.

Meyer said the abuse and misuse of crystals brought the downfall of the lost continent of Atlantis. But, they can, she said, "give you direction. You have a purpose. This is a way of life. The way the world is going. It makes you want to go to the Russians and say, 'We're just like you. We love you.'"

"It's God's spirit moving. God controls the whole planet, the whole universe," Eilers said.

"You don't chose a crystal. The crystal chooses you," Meyer said, drawing you by its energy interacting with yours. Crystals are carried or worn as jewelry. The power is imparted through direct contact with the skin, Eilers said. "Hold it. Carry it with you," she said.

If you are right handed, the energy should enter through the left hand. The reverse is true for the left handed.

Kenda Meyer draws energy from twin crystal formation

Meyer said.

The most powerful crystals are intersecting "twin" formations that have two terminations. Terminations, the natural points on quartz crystal formations are key to the transmission of energy for the stones, Meyer said.

Crystals, she said, in addition to the energy they generate, draw power from exposure to the sun and moon. Crystals can be cleansed of negative energy by burying them in clean earth or sand, washing them in pure water, or especially by washing them in ocean water.

Crystals, she said, help us take the time to find out why we're here. "Otherwise, we're scattered. This is not mystical. It's not magic. It's not mirrors and smoke. The stones work on you."

Some crystal users, Meyers said, will not allow anyone else to touch their stone. But, one of your own is easy to acquire, with prices starting at about $10. You may find that the crystal holds power beyond its beauty, with may be transferred to you. If not, you'll still have a beautiful bit of nature to admire.

Kate Jackson has a baby, sort-of

United Press International

NEW YORK — "Baby Boom" could turn out to be an entertaining show if it doesn't develop a terminal case of the cutes.

This half-hour sitcom steal from the movie of the same name will be the premiere new series in the 1988-89 television season. NBC will air it Saturday, Sept. 10, 9:30-10 p.m. over WESH-TV, Channel 2.

just before the Miss America pageant. That will give you an idea of the target audience.

With "Baby Boom" snug-gled between "The Golden Girls" and the beauty queens, it should get a wide audience sampling.

The show opens with a pre-teen J.C. Watt — who will grow up to be Kate Jackson — watching an old Rosalind Russell film and admiring her impersonation of a high-powered business executive who "walked fast, talked fast and wore pin-striped suits."

Roz was J.C.'s role model.

J.C. went to Harvard, knocked the biz whizzes dead with a paper on "What Went Wrong at Chrysler," and currently moves in the fast lane, juggling appointments, conferences, printouts, bagels at her desk and — a baby
