FRIDAY, JULY 20, 1951. TODAY'S BIBLE VERSE: God gave no finer jewel to humanity than the millions of them.

God gave no finer jewel to humanity than the millions of them. All the city of my people doth know that thou art a virtuous woman.—Roth 3:11.

Congratulations to Bill and Peggy Ann Hardin on having acquired a new home.

Senator George Smathers is reported recovering from a serious bout with influenza.

Roby Laing, formerly of Sanford, writes from Sarasota that all is well. And as usual, has a joke to tell.

The Truman Administration which is supposed to be the mortal enemy of big business awards 40 percent of all defense contracts to ten big corporations. We wish we could make him mad at us.

The House of Commons dominated by the Labor government has just voted Princess Margaret an annual allowance of $16,800 which just goes to show that British royalty has nothing to fear from British laborites.

We see where Governor Warren's press secretary has been given a $1,000 a year pay increase from $7,500 a year to $8,500. Well, considering the kind of stuff he has to write for the Governor and hand out to self-respecting members of the press, we suppose he is worth it.

There is nothing illegal, it is said, against the practice of a prison physician buying whole blood from prisoners for $6 a pint, selling it for $16 a pint, for a net profit to himself of $18,000 a year. But it is an extremely bad practice, and there should be a law against it. Meanwhile it should be stopped anyway.

Westbrook Peeler, whether you like him or not, is writing some interesting articles these days about the South. "The South is incomparably more 'American' than the North," he said recently. "And the contrast with the Northeast, especially the industrial city of New York, is the more frightening." And you would find the rest of these articles interesting.

Russia is having trouble with some of her conquered allies. Riots have broken out in Lithuania, Latvia, and Estonia because the Russians are trying to step up production with a corresponding increase in pay. Just like a bloody capitalist! We have always thought that the best way to get some of these European nations on our side was to let them live under the Russians for a while.

Most sensational news on the gubernatorial front is that Millard Caldwell is grooming himself to run for governor next year. If so, it will be no new experience for Caldwell, since he ran for governor in 1944, against some rather energetic competition, and got elected. What more logical thing now than that, recalling all the nasty things Fuller Warren said about him in 1946 when he was running against Dan McCarty, Caldwell should decide to take his case to the people and let them decide who was the worse governor, Caldwell or Warren.

High tribute is paid to Senator Holloman by Drew Pearson whose columns are not too likely to be read in this corner. Scholarly, sensitive Holloman was asked to give the appointment of his political opponent, Francis Whinnery, to be Undersecretary of the Navy, says Pearson. Holloman had once run against Whinnery in the race for Governor of Florida. He lost, but he never left the political arena.

The Right To Bail

Questions of the right of bail have been brought up by the government's action seeking to restrict the sources of bail bonds for Communist leaders accused of conspiracy against the government. It wants the Civil Rights Congress, known as the financial angel of the Communist Party in America, prohibited in the future for bailing these leaders out of jail.

The right of bail is more positive and far-reaching in American courts than in any others. Any person accused of a non-capital offense has the right to bail, and the Constitution specifies that bail must not be excessive. The privilege of bail is automatic in most cases, and usually the most friendly defendant can obtain bail from a commercial bonding agent by the simple payment of a fee. Nowhere else is it so easy for an accused person to obtain his release from jail until he is actually convicted and committed as punishment.

But the purpose of bail is to serve the ends of justice, not to give the accused a chance to escape. In police and magistrates' courts it has become a common practice to permit persons accused of traffic and other minor violations to forfeit bail instead of appearing for trial, but in strict law this practice is an abuse of the bail privilege. Such an abuse cannot be tolerated in cases involving real criminality.

The money value of bail is not a substitute for the appearance of a defendant; it is intended to be an assurance that he will appear. Originally the person who provided bail took custody of the defendant, and might himself be arrested if the defendant jumped bail. Now in American practice the agent posting bail is liable only for the bail money, though the implication remains that when posting bail he pledges the appearance of the defendant at a stated time. The essence of bail is not forfeiture, but that pledge.

Will For Controls

The will for inflation controls does not seem to be strong in Congress. There are numerous factions, each with a special idea as to how the controls should be modified to ease the pressure on some industry or group. There is an impression that the entire body would be glad enough to abandon the control experiment altogether, were it not for the fear of public reaction in the event there should be a general price rise.

It is also easy to get the impression that there is going to be a general price rise anyway if business conditions will support it. The will to draft and apply controls tight enough to hold prices where they are is not evident. One strong factor is the reluctance to put an effective ceiling on wages, obvious both in the congressional inclination to leave room for wage increases and in the Administration policy of liberal interpretation of wage controls, even a suggestion of winking at breach of them. Everyone knows that as wages go up prices are likely to follow, because the costs of making and selling goods and services will be raised and because purchasing power will be increased.

On the other side of the picture is the influence of business conditions, which clearly are to be more effective than any controls imposed by the government in its present temper. Retail sales have lagged this year, but have reacted favorably to price-cutting. The effects of a cooling-down of the war in Korea are yet to be calculated. Public willingness to buy apparently is to be the final determining factor, deciding whether prices generally will remain, as they are or go up or down. Congress seems ready to let the buyers decide.

Lightning Strikes

It would seem that there are two simple ways to lessen the hazard of becoming a statistical digit in the total of some 250 American who intercept a lethal bolt of lightning each year.

One way is to move to Rhode Island. Another is to move from the country to the city, preferably to take residence in a steel-framed building.

These suggestions stem from a report by Metropolitan Life Insurance Company which shows that little Rhode Island has had no deaths from lightning since 1936, and that about nine out of ten fatalities from this cause occur in places with 2,500 or fewer inhabitants.

City dwellers are relatively free from danger, the Metropolitan's safety experts report, because the steel of the tall buildings acts as a lightning conductor, and because the urbanite usually does not have far to go to reach a place of shelter when caught in a sudden thunder storm.

The safety experts offer these precautions: 1) Don't seek shelter under a tree, or remain in a broad, open field or small boat, or take refuge in a small, isolated shed in an exposed area during the storm.

2) Never stay in swimming; you can be electrocuted by a charge carried by the water from a bolt striking at some distance. The baseball diamond and the golf links, as well, can be danger spots when lightning strikes.

Occupants of automobiles, it is noted, are protected by the metal bodies of the cars, even if the vehicle is struck by lightning.

Lightning takes a higher toll of life in the summer months than at any other season. The highest death rates are in the Mountain and Southeastern States. The lowest are in the Pacific Coast, New England, and Middle Atlantic areas. About four times as many men as women are killed.

bedroom. Police found signs of a struggle in the living room. Two tables were overturned, a lamp and an ashtray were broken and the rug was scuffed up.

Police Capt. Russell Burke said he believed the girl let the man in since there was no sign of forcible entry. He said he theorized the two sat on theavenport in the living room talking before the attack. The girl's robe was found neatly folded on theavenport; her term dress was on the floor.

Burke pinned his hopes of solving the slaying on a man's wristwatch, its leather strap broken, which was found near the body.

Abdullah Killed

(SPECIAL REPORT) In the complex politics of the Middle East, Abdullah joined with the other Arab states when they made war upon the budding state of Israel in May, 1948, a war which lasted a year and never officially has ended in a peace settlement. He emerged from the war with a large slice of what had been Palestine, including the old shrine area in the walled city of Jerusalem and the city of Jericho, storied in the Bible.

Last Monday in Amman Riad El Solh, foreign minister of Lebanon was killed by Syrian nationalists. The act touched off riots in Lebanon, where Solh was a leading political figure. He had long been an opponent of Abdullah's greater Syria ambitions. His Majesty Ibn Hussein Abdullah, ruler of the Hashemite kingdom of Jordan, was the brother son of the late Hussein, sheikh of the Arab kingdom of Syria, deposed by the French. The two were comrades with Lawrence of Arabia in the Arab revolt against the Turkish empire.

Abdullah was born in Mecca, holy city of the Moslems, and claimed 39th generation descent from Mohammed. He grew up at the court of the Turkish sultan, Abdul Hamid, in Constantinople (now Istanbul), held as a hostage for the good behavior of his rebellious father. He was active in the youth behind the scenes of the anti-Turkish movements which marked the declining days of the Ottoman Empire. He was an Arab nationalist; his goal, to increase the power and the sway of the Hashemite family.

Abdullah long dreamed of a "Greater Arab State" made up of the Middle East, which would join territories of Jordan, Hashemite-ruled Iraq and Syria. Other Arab nationalists, however, opposed and distrusted him.

Harriman Visits

(Continued on Page One) Harriman's visit to the Middle East since last Sunday's rioting in which 20 persons were killed and 300 hurt.

Iranian officials have been hinting in an unofficial way that they would be willing to talk over oil and nationalization problems with Anglo-Iranian representatives, but the British Embassy seems cool to such "negotiation feelers" which avoid the main issue over nationalization, an informed source said.

Iranians are believed to have discussed the possibility of which talk in the meeting between Harriman and the parliament's joint oil-nationalization committee last night. Harriman has yet, however, to draw a concrete proposal from the Iranians.

Actually, the offer to talk about nationalization and distribution would be no change from the Iranian position. The Iranians have been willing all along to sell their oil to their old customers. They insist, however, on control of production and conditions of sale.

Harriman was to meet British Ambassador Sir Francis Shepherd tonight at a dinner given by the American Ambassador, Henry P. Davis. Harriman is expected to remain in Tehran at least another week, an American source said, because his talks still have not gone beyond the exploratory stage.

The newspaper, Toulon, which opposes Premier Mohammed Mossadeq's Nationalist government, reported that some Iranian circles believe Harriman is aiming at a compromise under which Anglo-Iranian control continues to run the great Abadan refinery and handle the marketing of the oil. Up to now Mossadeq has insisted upon complete control of the refinery.

There is no doubt, yet that he has changed his mind. Diseases of the heart and arteries are the chief cause of death in the United States.

Cancer is the second most important cause of death in the United States behind heart ailments, with accidents in third place.

Winant Volunteers Aid In Creating Better International Understanding

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the third of a series of articles on England written by S. Robo Dean, who with other American college students is working in a London boys' club this summer as a Winant Volunteer.

By S. ROBO DEAN

LONDON, July 13.—(Special)—Getting off the bus in London's West End the other day, I asked a bobby if he could direct me to Trafalgar Square. He put his arm protecting around my shoulder and asked sympathetically, "Is there anything wrong with you, lad? This is Trafalgar Square."

Although I am as completely lost in London as an Englishman would be in the middle of the Big Scrub, one of my duties as a Winant Volunteer is to take the boys of the East End on guided tours of West End. As most of them have never been outside their own boroughs, few of them have ever seen Buckingham Palace, the houses of Parliament, or Westminster Abbey, and so we are discovering these places together.

Shortly after the war, the Rev. P. B. Clayton, called Tubby over here, vicar of All Hallows Church by the Tower, chaplain of the British tanker fleet, and one of the chaplains to the royal family, came to the United States to recruit American college boys to serve as lieutenants on the beach at Tower Hill which he had sponsored. At that time, due to universal military conscription, English lieutenants were very scarce, and a number of children had drowned during the war.

In New York, Tubby met John Winant, wartime ambassador to Great Britain, who agreed to take him around to some American colleges. Within the week Winant's tragic death occurred, and Tubby went on alone, dedicating his life to his great American friend. Tubby's expedition was so successful that in the Winant's first summer, there were far more boys coming over than were needed on the beach, and several of them were put to work helping club leaders in East London boys clubs.

The next year English lieutenants became more available, but as the English lieutenants had gone with the institutions of their government, they preferred not to abandon the organization because the original need had been met, but rather to find new purposes for it.

So again American boys came to the East End, and this time they were all put to work in boys clubs. Since then the movement has branched out to include girls working in girls clubs and settlement houses. A similar program was started in Canada and named the Oiler Volunteers after the great Canadian oiler which sank there were 35 Winants, half boys and half girls, and an additional 50 Oilers.

The really important jobs of the Winants and Oilers are not the club work, the collecting of subscriptions and charges for "snooker" (billiard) tables, or serving as counselors at camps, but telling the people here about the United States and learning something about the East End which we can tell our own people when we return home.

Although the West End is generally flooded with tourists, an American is a rare creature in this part of London, and since the East End visits the other side of the city so seldom, his only conception of the United States is apt to be what he gets out of the very worst American movies which show down to the East End "bughouses" and the pulp magazines which are as popular here as they are at home.

Eastborne House, with which I am connected, is an enormous prison-like building with great pointed teeth sticking out of the railing around the roof. Next to it is the half-tinted brick house in which the Vicar of St. John's, the Rev. Orben Hamilton, the local Anglican parish priest, lives.

The rest of the block is taken up with a great trash dump where St. Simon's Church, to which Eastborne House was formerly connected, used to stand. It was destroyed, as was part of the vicarage, in the blitz. St. John's, down the street, still has the front of it in still black, but it has marks of bombs on it, and the been renovated inside.

The boys at the club have been very kind to me, I have been shown around Bethnal Green by Following these the honoree opened her numerous gifts. At a late hour punch, cake and mints were served to the more than 50 guests.

Weather (Continued from Page One) Mr. Moughton's weather equipment was: R. Bud, a technician from Ft. Worth, Tex. Mounted on a pole 55 feet high such as is used for regular light wires, and close to the Moughton home is an aneroid or wind pressure gauge, and a weather vane. These are connected electrically to a clock like instrument on the wall in Mr. Moughton's home. Lights, flashing at different points on the dial of the instrument indicate the direction of the wind. The velocity of the wind is revealed by sound in form of buzz. The buzz every second would indicate a wind velocity of 60 miles an hour. Peak wind velocities during gusts can be determined by counting the buzzes during 10 seconds intervals.

Other standard weather instruments in the house are a barograph, a recording type barometer, standard barometer and an instrument for recording humidity. Thermometers record maximum and minimum temperatures. Outside, Mr. Moughton has a rain gauge. Mr. Moughton today expressed appreciation to those who aided in setting up the equipment. The light pole, he said, was donated and installed by the Florida Power and Light Co., of which H. H. Cochran is local manager. The rings for mounting the pole were donated by E. V. Turner of the Southern Bell Telephone Co. The City cooperated by removing several Australian pines obstructing the wind instruments operation. Members of the Fire Department used a truck and directed a stream of water to jetson a hole in the ground for the pole in case of power failure due to a storm. Roy Green of the Amoco Station, has agreed to lend a six volt battery for emergency power use with the instruments. H. D. Harrison of the State Highway Patrol and the Sanford Police Department have offered the use of their radio facilities in case of power failure.

 standing of God as changeless, available, and fundamental Truth.
 This will be explained at Christian Science services next Sunday,

 the righteous nation which keepeth
 the truth may enter in" (Isa. 26:

Flood
 In St. Louis, officials said that damage would be confined mainly to the riverfront section as it was in the 1947 flood, which cost industries an estimated $9,000,000.
 The city proper, including the business district, is on comparatively high ground.
 Commercial use of artificial ice in the United States first surpassed natural ice in 1914.
 John Gorrie, who invented the ice making process, is honored by statues, one in Apalachicola, Fla., and one in Washington, D. C.
 Trunks of California's giant redwoods are usually 76 to 100 feet from the base to the first branch.
