The Last Picture of Dead Aviator and Plane

This is the last picture of Captain Bert E. Skeel of the army air service who crashed down to his death in the Pulitzer trophy event at the international air races in Dayton, O. It was taken just before he started up. An antiquated plane, fit for the scrap heap two years ago, according to officials of the National Aeronautic Association, is blamed for his death.

Somebody compiling commentaries upon the intelligence at Becond Class Natter, of the American people might get a few notes from this late postoffed year's idea of mobilizing the Boy Scouts of America in a campaign to bring out the voting strength of their country in Editor the November election.

So far as the idea was conceived for the good of the Boy Scouts, well and good. In working to arouse interest in a most important election, the boys will learn much about the duties of citizenship, and will make many a true deduction of their own relative to politics and politicians. All this will help them to become more useful members of society.

But the BIG idea seems to be to use these boys to get their elders to the registration books, and to the polls on election day!

When Left Is Right

As a general rule in America everyone passes to the ments are met right. Automobiles, horse-drawn vehicles, and bicycles keep Oh! leave the past, if past indeed well to the right side of the street. Pedestrians walk, or should walk, close to the right on sidewalks. Even in passing another through a doorway or in a narrow hall, it is the custom to keep to the right.

To this general rule, however, there should be one exception. Persons walking on country roads, or any highway where there is no sidewalk, should for their own safety as well as a courtesy to automobilists, keep well to the left.

This is especially true at night.
